CERTIFICATE

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

We received last night Paris Papers to the 6th instant. PARIS. JUNE 6 .- M. the Viscount de Chateaubriand. French Minister Pienipotentiary at the Court of Berlin, is about to return to his post in that capital.

FROM THE BANKS OF THE DANUBE, MAY 23 .- The Pacha of the Morea has complained in bitter terms to the English Administration in the Ionian Islands, that the Insurgents are supplied from thence with arms, summinition, and even artillery; he, therefore, threatens to enforce very rigorous measures against the English trade, and adds, that he will sequestrate all the property of British subjects, if such abuses are continued. He has sent a report on this subject to Constantinople. In consequence of the above declaration, an ex-press prohibition has been published throughout the Ionian Islands, the natives and residents, not to take part, directly or indirect ly, in the insurrection against the Porte, under very severe penul-

Under the head of Vienna, May 26, is contained three Autogra Letters from the Emperor of Austria, the one addressed to the Estace of Metternich, appointing him Chancellor of the Empire and Imperial House, and expressive of his satisfaction and coincidence for the eminent services he has rendered the State for the last twelve years. The second letter is addressed to the Count Stadior, graciously acknowledging his public services. The third is addressed to the Baron De Frimont, for his military services.

Dutch and Flanders Mails arrived to the 5th inst. PARIS, JUNE 2.—General credit is given to a rumour that Ypsiland, master of Adrianople, is preparing to march against the capital. The Hospodar Cullimichi, who was appointed to the chief command of the army destined to arrest the progress of this Chief, and which has not yet been organised, having received a summons to appear at Constantinople, was so struck with terror that he has become insane.

According to letters which have reached us, the populous town of Legissa, in Maosdonia, has fallen into the power of the Greeks, who have cut the throats of all the Mahometan inhabitants. Larissa is the key of Epirus

Count Corvetto, Ex-Minister of Finance, Minister of State, died at Genoa on the 22d of last month.

JUNE 4 .- Count Lavalette arrived in Paris, on Saturday, the 2d inst. He proceeded with the most eager anxiety to see his Lady, who is in the health establishment of Dr. Lupond at Chillot, where the most assiduous attention has long been paid to her.

HANDER, MAY 18.—The King of England is expected to arrive here on the 22d of August, by way of Spa and Hombourg.

NAPLES, MAY 17.—Within these few days all that remained of the public Functionaries employed under the Constitutional regime have been deprived of their situations. M.M. Catalani, Rossi, Sapouara, and Donato, Ex-Deputies, have been arrested. An order has also been sent to Aquila to arrest Dragonetti.—Two days before the King entered his capital a Decree of the Marquis de Circello, President of the Provisional Government, was published against illegal sects and societies.—Tranquillity is said to be perfectly re-established in the kingdom of Kaples.

Fourteen hundred Moors perished in the storm that destroyed the Tunisian fleet at Tunis. The Admiral was the only Officer who escaped, he being on shore at the time.

MAY 19.—Yestenlay the King, seated on the Throne, received the homages and congruentations of the Generals and superior Officer. seem of the Austrian Army and Naval Squadron. During this cere-mony the Duke de Calabre advanced, followed by his whole family, and solicited of his august father leave to kim his hand.

Since the King's return Aure-de-lie are the conspicuous decora-tion of the ladies' attire. This enablem of the Bourbons is exhibited in the theatres and public places of tatertainment, where the people taking of fees was continued in Engive themselves up to joy.

MADRID, MAY 21.—A camp of 12,000 wen is about to be formed in the vicinity of this capital, under the orders of General Morillo. Orders have been issued, that all persons must quit Madrid, who have no particular business to justify their start.—A Reyalist constitutional opposition begins to show itself in the Cortes; we hope good results from it.

MAY 24.—Government appears decided to send to America the match the preferable, to others foes.

two Infants, Don Carling, and Don Manuface. de Paulo, one for the North, and the other for the South parts of that bountry.

General Morillo displays a very firm character. He assured the King, at the forfeit of his head, that his Majesty should not again be insulted as he had been, and solicited the Monarch to resume his promonaties, as heretofore. The King persists in refusing to sanction the Decree relative to Patriotic Societies. The Club of La Fentaine d'Or, however, still continues its daily meeting, and is crowded by patriotic furies. Government has granted an annual pension of 1,000 francs (411, 13s. 4d.) to the Neapolitan General Pepe. Spain welcomes the Neapolitan Refugees, and grants them pendous!—The Cortes have received the official communication that war is on the point of re-commencing in the Provinces of Venezuela and New Grenada.

The Decree of the Cortes against sending money to Rome, Bulls, Matrimodal Dispensations, Indulgencies, &c. is officially promulgated. It enacts, that in lieu thereof, the sum of nine thou sand hard pinstres shall be annually remitted to his Holiness, as a concordats. The Cortes reserve to themselves the increase of this soun, "if the nation shall in future be able to do so."

VIENNA, MAY 23.—The Emperor of Russia arrived on the 15th in the afternoon n. Dest. with his Terman 17.

in the afternoon at Pest, with his Imperial Highness the Archduke Palatine who had been to meet his Majesty as far as Wesprim, where the latter stopped on the night of the 14th. The Emperor where the inter stopped on the night of the 14th. The Emperor travels in the strictest incognito, and he has particularly requested that no distinguishing honour may be paid to him. His Majesty passed the 16th in viewing the pleasant island of Marguerite, and proceeded on his route towards Warsaw on the day following.

MAY 25 .- Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress arrived to day at noon, in good health, at the Castle of Schænbrunn.

Intelligence, relative to the recent outrages at Constantinople, which has been received in this capital, says, "Such was the furious exasperation of the Mussulmen, that the foreign Ministers were in imminent perd. A considerable multitude (thirsting for the blood of the Greeks), surjounded the residence of the Russian Minister. and menaced to take possession by assault, if a Greek family had taken refuge in it were not delivered up. M. de Strogonoff dis-played equal dignity and resolution on this occasion. He appeared, with his suite, in the balcony of the botel, and publicly declared through the medium of his interpreter, that he would consider any hostile attempt as a provocation to war directed against the Sovereign, his master; and he would instantly take measures accordingly. This firmness of the representative of his Majesty the Emperor Alexander had the desired effect, as the Turks immediately withdrew.

SEVILLE, MAY 11 .- There are a great number of persons arrested both at Xeres and at Sama Maria; among those at Xeres is the Marquess de Atalava. It is known that the Guerilla Leader. Pedro Zuldivar, has fled from Xeres to Gibraltar, with 12,000 hard

According to direct letters from Constantinople, it appears that the foreign Ministers accredited to the Porte, not deaming them-selves safe in the capital, on account of the excesses committed by the armed populace, have embarked for the town of Buyukdere, situated upon the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus.

An article from St. Potersburg, dated the 16th ult. states, that advices have been received in that capital from Captain Billinghausen, who commands a ship which has been sent out by the Russian Government on a voyage of discovery to the South Sea. Capt. BARBADOES, MARCH 19 .- In our paper of the 26th ultimo, we entioned the cruel usage of the crew of the ship Kate, to their Captain (Purdy), in putting him, his wife, two young children, a passenger, and the steward into an open boat near Desenda, and leaving them exposed to the dangers of the sea; and that, after sinking the ship, they and gone in the ship's long-boat, apparently in distress, to Guadalqupe, where they were providentially detected. In our number of the 1st instant, we noticed that the boat, in which the Captain, &c. had been put, was picked up by Captain Kington, of the schooner Anna Isabella, near Rock Dunda. On this melancholy subject we have now to add, that his Majesty's ship Sapphire which arrived here on Thursday last, brought to be tried, by our Court of Vice-Admiralty, the persons charged with the horrible crimes above stated.

Official accounts are stated to have been received at Philadeliia, advising that near one-third of Peru had joined the Patriots, and that all the mines were in their possession.

Two English ships, the Edward Ellice and the Lord Suffield, vere captured and taken into Huaco, a port near Lima, on the 9th of December last, by Lord Cochrane's squadron. The Hyperion frigate was in sight at the time. The cause alleged was, that they had Spanish property on board.

Kingston, (Jamaica) April 23.—Accounts have been received from Panama that the Andromache frigate was daily looked for from Callao, with the deposed Viceroy Pezuela, and that San Martin was advancing rapidly with a daily increasing army towards the capital.

Advices from Culcutta to a late date, state that the cholera morbus raged to an elarming extent at Siam, in the capital of which, Bunkok, 40,000 persons perished; in consequence the King held a consultation of his Nobles, Priests, and Astrologers, to asce tain to what cause the prevalence of this disorder might be attributed, when (according to the curious custom of that country) they agreed that an evil spirit, formed like a fish, was the occasion of their disasters; and that the only method of driving it away was by frightening it with guns, muskets, drums, &c. That extraordinary ceremony was actually performed along the sea coast; but instead of having the desired effect, when the scene ended, 7,000 souls died on the beach with the chelera.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

The Grampound Disfrenchisement Bill was returned from the Commons with a message importing that the amendments made by that House had been agreed to.

e second reading of the Irish Courts of Law Bill,

Lord Sidmouth stated the object of the Bill, which went to cor-rect the existing abuses in the several Courts in respect of exacting fees from the Suitors, and recommending in lieu limited salaries to the Officers; and appointing two Officers for the express purpose of

The Earl of Donoughmore contended, that the practice of taking of fees was continued in England; and, therefore, he did not see why it should be abolished in Ireland, besides he objected to any change in the practice of the Law.

Lord Redesale entertained doubts on the policy of substituting salaries for fees in Courts of Justice.

The Barl of Limerick defended the Bill.

The Lord Chanceller agreed, that in certain cases, salaries

The Marquis of Lansdowne mid, the substitution of soluties for fees was supported by the authority of the Judges, who were of opinion that they could not prevent abuses if the present system was allowed to exist. The Bill was then read a second time.—Adiourned.

TUESDAY. On the second rending of the Bread Regulation Bill—the the Bill Lord Lauderdale said, went to repeal a clause in the 36th of the late King, inflicting penalties on bakers for short weight, which equally affected the honest and the fraudulent baker; but, indeed there was an association of the latter description, who supported each other against informations. The present Bill provided, E bakers should keep weights and scales in their shops, so that every bond fide customer might weigh his purchase.

On the second reading of the Irish Courts of Law Regulation Bill,—Lord Sidmouth stated from the Report, that the clerks in the different Courts were in the practice of stopping proceedings until their fees were paid, one of the clerks had by these increased his income from 2,5191. to 4,0001. a-year; the unite profits made by the Registrar of the Exchequer in the course of three years amounted to 9531. 17s. 6d. A saving in this respect would be made of 6,6981.

Mr. Jackson for the Petitioners, and Mr. Tharrison in supported the London Wharfs' Bill appeared at the Bar as Counsel.—Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY

The Irish Inland Navigation Bill, and the Seamen's Wages Bill, were passed. The New Gas Light Company's Bill was brought up from the Commons, and read a first time. - Adjourned. THURSDAY.

After hearing Mr. Hart, the further proceedings in the Strategies case were postponed to Friday se'might.

The Sale of Bread Regulation Bill was passed.—Adjourn

The Royal Assent was given to the Seamen's and Mariner Wages Protection Bill; the Bill for Disfranchising the Borough of Grampound, and for transferring two Members to the County of York; the Jurors Assizes Attendance Bill; the Westminster Street Improvement Acts Amendment Bill; the Attornies and Solicitors Practice Regulation Bill; the Metropolis Sale of Bread Amendment Bill; the Judges (Salop) Lodgings Bill; the North Wilts Canal Incorporation Bill; the Saltcoats and the Lyme Regis Har-bour Improvement Bills; the Edinburgh Gaol Erection Bill; the Essex County Prisons Bill; the Ipswich Lighting and Paving Bill; the Hackney Roads Bill; the All Saints (Northampton) Rectory Bill; and Viccount Glerawley's Divorce Bill.

The Irish Rate of Interest Bill was passed. The Marquis of Lansdowne presented the Report of the Select Committee of this House relative to the state of Foreign Trade.— The principal and most interesting part of the Report referred to an important branch of domestic manufactory, and in that particular branch (silk) he had great satisfaction in stating to their Lordships that an improvement had taken place, which exceeded the expectation of those persons most concerned in that valuable trade. He had therefore to congratulate their Lordships on an improvement so a spicious to our existing interests, at the same time remarking that he rejoiced so far only as that progression was co-existent and compatible with the soundest but broadest principle of public economy.

The same Noble Marquis gave notice that, upon an early day after the recess, he should call the attention of their Lordships to the Foreign Slave Trade.

On the consideration of the Irish Courts of Law Regulation Bill Mr. Blake was beard in Counsel for Mr. Clancey, one of the Clerks belonging to the Common Pleas Court, in Ireland, whom, be con-tended, held his office for life, and who claimed compensation. The further hearing was postponed till Wednesday, to which day the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. MONDAY.

Mr. Wilson presented a petition from the Bankers of the City of London and Westminster, against the Bill for altering the punishment of forgery, on account of a distinction being made between the forgery of Bank of England notes, and other negociable securities. The Hon. Gentleman also presented a petition from certain Merchants of the City of London against that clause in the Wool Bill, which they apprehended would allow the exportation of long woolled sheep from this country. These petitions were laid on the tuble.

Mr. Bernal presented a petition from Mr. Mallison, praying the attention of the House to his life-preserver.

Sir J. Coffin thought if the life-preservers were useful they would be used by the Deal boatmen. He was satisfied, if they were kept out of men of war; for if once a ship was in danger off a les shore with life-preservers on board, no man would stay in the ship.

The Bankrupt Laws Amendments Bill was passed. Sir J. Mackintosh moved the third reading of the Criminal Laws Bill, and took occasion to offer a variety of observations on the subject. The exceptions which he had been induced to make, ought not to be turned against the principle of the Bill. distrust the principle because he could not grasp all he desired; the first exception was for the forgery of Bank of England paper, because it was an injury to the community, and to which no priva forgery could bear the least resemblance. The petition just presented from bankers of London and Westminster, was not, in fact, a petition against the Bill, but against the exception to which he had just alluded, the supposition, that forgers would turn their attention to country bankers; but of this the apprehension was idle. The Birmingham forger could not be supposed acquainted with the hand-writing of eminent London bankers, nor with the habits or connexions of the usual acceptors and indorsers. How could be pass an acceptance, and get it presented for 3 or 4,000l, in defiance of those whose regular business it was to detect fraud and irregularity; and if not, was the House to protect them against their own negligence? The exceptions in regard to wills, marriage certificates, and registers, were admitted because the House of Lords, last Bession, had rejected similar clauses. With respect to uttering, he was resolutely determined to make no exception. With respect to punishment, he proposed to substitute ten years' hard labour for transportation, which had been proved inefficacious, and must be relinquished.

The Attorney-General declared, that the concessions of the Hon-Gentleman increased his objections to the Bill, because they were an acknowledgment, that the punishment of death was necessary to vent crime in certain cases. He objected to the exceptions generally, for the distinction ought not to be an invidious one. Be cheques ought to have protection. He moved that it be read a third time this day six months.

Mr. Denman denied that the principle of the Bill had been abandoned in the concessions which had been made.

Mr. Dent objected to some of the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. Wilmot supported the Bill.

Mr. Marryatt feared the proposed measure was subremire of all egal rule and principle.

The Bill was supported by Mr. Cripps, Mr. J. S. Th. Ma. Bering.
Mr. Harbord, &c. and opposed by Mr. Mansfie. For pearse, Mr.
Mills, Mr. Lockhart, Mr. H. Duvies, and Mr. T. Will J.
The House then divided—For the third reading, 117—For the Amendment, 111-Majority, 6.

The House divided on an amendment of Mr. Cripps's, to 'except from the benefits of the Bill all persons convicted of Forgeries on Bankers.—For the amendment, 109—Against it, 102—Majority, 7. After a long discussion, during the exclusion of strangers, the **Truse divided on the question. "That the Bill do now pass?"— yes, 115—Noes, 121—Majority against the Bill, 6.

It was consequently thrown out. The Irish Coroners' Bill was postponed with the consent of Mr.

Martin for six months.—Adjourned.
TUESDAY.

There being only 35 Members present at four o'clock, an Adiournment took place.

WRDNESDAY

Counsel were heard on the Gierawley Divorce Bill. No person attended on behalf of Lady Gierawley. Several witnesses were expained in support of the Bill, which was passed.—The Metropolis of a Bill was passed.

Major-Gen. Wilson presented a Petition from certain inhabitants of Liverpool, against what, he thought, ought to be called the Poor Spoliation Bill, he meant the Bill of his Hon. Friend Mr. Scarlett.

Mr. Scarlett expressed his surprise at the expression of his Hon. Friend, for the Bill would be highly serviceable to the poor. He Objected to his Bill being nicknamed.

Dr. Lushington presented a Petition from a man named Thomas Dolby, complaining that he had been prosecuted by the Constitutional This Dolby, the Learned Doctor said, had several inrangement. This policy, the Learned Doctor said, had several in-terviews with Mr. Murray on the subject of a compromise of the prosecutions against him; the conditions of forbearance were these that Dolby was to plead guilty, to pay the expences, to give up his stock, and to continue upon his good behaviour for two years, under the view of the Society. This, however, had not been acceded

Sir M. Cholmeley said he had become a member of the Society from the number of indecent caricatures exhibited throughout the metropolis.

Mr. Denman was sure the Hon, Member would not have become a member had he seen the circular signed by Sharp. It was diagusting to see with what supineness it acted in prosecuting for libel that weekly discharge of filth, which was so well known to the nationat lurge.

The Petition was laid on the table.

Col. Davies brought in a Bill for preventing the adulteration of Clover Seed, which was read a first time; second reading on Wednesday next

Dr. Lushington brought in a Bill to alter the Duties on Tobacco and Snuff, which was read a first time. Ordered for a second reading on Wednesday the 13th instant.

moved for a Committee to enquire into the state of the Judicature in the Island of Tobago. He thought the Caribbee Islands should be divided into two districts, with a Chief Justice and Attorney-General to each, paid from home, to prevent local preju-

Mr. Goulburn said, that within the last twenty years great im-provements had been made in the administration of the government of that Colony. With respect to the motion, he must object to it, as it was one of condemnation and mot of enquiry. He defended the conduct of the Chief Justice, and instanced his humanity in having brought forward the laws sauctioning the manumission of

Mr. W. Smith and Mr. Barham were friendly to the enquiry; but the latter Hon. Member suggestru an automatical statement, ap-44 That the House will, early in the next Session of Parliament, ap-the Administration of Juspoint a Select Committee to enquire into the Administration of Justice in the West India Colonies.

After some conversation between Sir J. Mackintosh (who oh Jected to the enquiry being extended to all the West India Islands): Mr. Marryatt, Mr. Wilherforce, Mr. J. P. Grant, &c. Mr. Barbum withdrew his Amendment, and a resolution to the effect that the House would pledge itself to the enquiry next session was moved by Lord Nugent, on which a division took place.—For the Resolution, 66—Against it, 105—Majority, 39.

The Marquis of Londonderry intimated to the House that had been commanded by his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence to communicate to the House that his Royal Highness now found it alesirable to accept the provision of 6,0001 per annum provided by Parliament on the 16th of April, 1818, but which, from certain ceasons, which the Noble Marquis said were highly creditable to his Royal Highness's feelings, he had then declined to receive. He then moved that the resolution come to on that occasion be referred to a Committee of the whole House on Friday next.

. W. Courtenay moved the House to go into a Committee to consider the claims of the American Loyalists, and the compensa-tion due to them, according to the report and award of the Commissioners appointed to investigate their claims.

Mr. Baring was doubtful whether the claims were founded in justice; at any rate they should have been made forty years ago.

Mr. C. Wynne supported the motion, as did Mr. Money.

Mr. Wilberforce had advocated the claims forty years ago, and be little expected that in 1821 they were unsatisfied.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer contended, that these loyalists paght to look to the American Government for redress, and not to the English Parliament. The country at present was not able to add any thing to what they had already received.

On a division there were — For the motion, 77—Against it, 60—

Majority, 17.

Mr. Huskisson said, the proposed compensation being unpro-wided for, could not be granted.

Mr. Wynne thought provision might be made in the Committee. Mr. Creevey, to put un end to discussion, would move to adiourn the House.

Mr. Courtenay at length withdrew his motion. On the second reading of the Yorkshire Ricction Bill, it was opposed by Mr. Denman and Mr. C. Wynne, who thought at least it nght to be postponed till next session.

Mr. Brougham was of the same opinion.

The Bill was committed for Friday, Lord Mâten having inti-mated that he would not press it against the sense of the House.—

THURSDAY.

Mr. Goulburn, referring to a question put by Major-General Wilson on a preceding evening, respecting the use of forture in De-merara, assured the House that such a mode of punishment does not exist in that colony.

Mr. S. Rice moved two resolutions on the subject of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland—the one that the Ninth Report of the Com-missioners of Enquiry on that subject be laid before the House, and the other that the House go into the consideration of the same on Monday se'nnight. The resolutions were agreed to.

Monday se'nnight. The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. Hume called the attention of the House to the state of the Ionian Islands, (which he [Mr. H.] had visited) particularly with respect to file conduct of the Lord High Commissioner. The inhabitants, previous to the arrival of Sir T. Maitland, had the highest opinion of the British character—the dismissal of five of the senators, because they were not disposed to be subservient to him, served in a great measure to undeceive them. One of these senators; M. Flambouriari, was afterwards recommended to be employed by Lord Bathurst on account of his talents, and was so employed, but was subsequently thrown into a dungeon for having signed a petition to the King of England, stating the real cause of dissatisfaction which the Ionians had. The Ionians wished to have a real representative Government, and appeared to set themselves to work for that object from the 18th of January, 1817. The Lord High Commissioners assembled the officers of state, and informed them that a conspiracy was about to explode. Arrests took place in consequence, but it was found there were no real grounds for such arrests, and Laperioche and another, the informers, were found to be at the bottom of the whole machination. Laperioche was sentenced to be hunged; this sentence, however, was commuted to one year's solitary confinement, and eight years' confinement to the Islands. A few mouths afterwards he was found at large; this cast suspicion on the whole business. The Hon. Gent. said, the Constitution of the Islands was a deception, for the whole power was vested in the Lord High Commissioner, who, it might be said, nominated the Legislatte Assembly. He then went into a statement of the influence exercised by the Lord High Commissioner, and went over the circumstances connected with the insurrection, contending, on the authority of documents to which be referred, that what had occurred was the consequence of the people being driven to desperation by distress, and by the unfeeling treatment they met with from the Lord High Commissioner. He gave further instances of the arbitrary power exercised by the Lord High Commissioner, remarking, that he was obliged to content himself with a selection, as he had not time to go through all the facts that had come to his knowledge. In one ones, Church Lands had been claimed after they had been alienated seventy years. Two Englishmen and two Natives were appointed to inquire into this business. Two were in favour of the claims set up, the other two differed from them; Sir T. Maitland, as umpire, gave the easing vote, and wrote an elaborate letter, of fourteen sides, dated April 12, 1820, in which he declared, that by the laws of Venice, framed in 1410, Church property could not be alienated, and consequently the casting vote was given in favour of the Church. He noticed the pluralities enjoyed in the Ionian Islands, read over a list of the various appointments held by Col. W. Robinson, and enumerated grievances of which the people of Santa Maura had to complain, and which, he thought, would have excited almost any people to acts of an insurrectionary character. An individual of the name of Antonio Murtinengo he represented to have been very harshly dealt with, and to have been imprisoned for a considerable period at the will of the Governor, in violation of the Constitution. Having observed at some length upon these and other circumstances, he concluded with moving, "That an numble Address be presented to His Majesty, praying that he will appoint Commissioners to proceed to the lonian Islands, to inquire into the the state of the Government there, and into the conduct of the Governor, Sir T. Maitland; also to inquire into the causes of the disaffection which exists, and of the numerous arrests that have taken place." Mr. Goulburn observed, that this was the third time the Hon

Member had come down to the House with charges similar to the present, which but as often been refuted as they had been advanced. He (Mr. G.) knew not whether, when the Hon. Member was in the Ionian Isles, he exercised that talent for investigation which he had shewn in this country; but this he did know, that many of the statements were as untrue as those respecting our own public departments. With respect to the situation of the people of the Ionian Islands, the fact was they had passed under the dominion of Venice under the French, under the Turkish yoke, under that of Rassia, and, lastly, of France again,—all of whom they complained of and it was to free them from the state of slavery under which they grouned that Sir Thomas Maitland was called upon to concert government and a constitution.—Mr. G. then noticed the particular instance of individual oppression referred to -the case of Martinengo Now the fact was, he was condemned to death by the tribugal before which he was tried; his crime was, plotting to overthrow the Government. He then defended the conduct of Sir F. Adam in the case of Santa Maura, and the part he took in quelling that insurrection. In alluding to the church property, the Hon. Member was mistaken; there was a part of the church lands over which the old Venetian law gave the Government some controll, and it was this species of land which came under dispute, the lands excepted by this law never had been touched by the Government. With respect to Martinengo, he had been tried by a competent tribunal, nearly the old Roman law, which was in practice in most parts of the Continent.—Mr. G. concluded with stating, that the revenue was originally farmed, but the Government took it under its own me nazement, and the consequence was an increase in the receipt of duties on one article alone from 9,000 to 16,000 dollars; and on the whole revenue there was a profit of 117 per cent. With respect to the Lord High Commissioner, distinguished as was the character of Sir Thomas Maitland, he (Mr. G.) did not rely upon it; he relied upon the statement which had been specifically given, in answer to the charges. He cared not what might be the course which the Hon. Gent, should think proper to take on the present occasion, but he knew that Sir Thomas Maitland must expect the hatred of those who envied his talents and his character, and who were therefore anxious to avail themselves of every opportunity of aspersing him.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett was of dpinion that the Constitution actually given had been fairly described as a juggle. It consisted of shew, form, and ceremony, but the real power was in the Lord High Commissioner. Nothing was better than this Constitution in theory—nothing worse in practice. The Lord High Commissioner was, in fact, the Master Punchinello, to direct the pantomimic farce. The Grand Master of Maka, in the plenitude of his power, was nothing to this Lord High Commissioner in the Mediterranean, whose power was as extensive as it was undefined. He had no wish to detract from the panegyric which had been pronounced upon Sir T. Maitland; but he should support the motion, because he thought the power given to that Officer ought not to be entrusted to any one man, whose will was to be the law.

Mr. Evans said he had to acknowledge the attention which had een paid by the Colonial Office to the case of Mr. Martinengo, but he should support the motion, for he really could not see what was the crime of which that individual had been originally charged He thought it would be but justice to the gallant Officer to go into the inquiry, as his character would otherwise not altogether escape e of censure.

Mr. J. P. Grant said, he was confident the conduct of Sir T Maitland required explanation only; but as the motion went to impute misconduct to him, he (Mr. Q.) could not support it. The Constitution upon which he acted had been laid upon the table of the House, and had not called for any comment. He was assured, ter it would appear. Mr. Brougham did not make any charge against Sir T. Maitland but he had seen in the law proceedings of the Ionian Islands a dispensation, which, thank God! did not prevail in any part of the British Empire. He wished to turn the attention of the House to the forms of law in the Ionian Islands. He offered no charge against Sir T. Maitland; he believed he acted according to law. It might be good Venetian law, but he would rather have the Go-vernor of the Ionian Islands sit and try causes on his own discretion, instead of receiving instructions from the Government. The law, as laid down was unjust. It might be law in Venice or Corfu; but it ought to be watched, and perhaps abrogated by the British Par-hament. He supported the motion.

Major-General Wilson thought there was no grounds for censuring Sir T. Maifland. He was, however, for inquiry.

Mr. Money opposed the motion. The Marquis of Londonderry could not admit that the lovian Islands were to be considered as Colonies of England, or the the Government could interfere as if they were living under the controul and in obedience to the Government. He was, Lt the same time, ready to allow, that while the tiovernment of this country was protecting those Islands, there was a superfutending eye over their welfare and interest which ought not to be withdrawn, and as far as they could go on, directing the Lord High Commissioner of the Islands, for the advantage of the inhabitants, they ought to 89.— Government should, however, exercise that power with caution. The Noble Marquis rose, however, principally for the purpose of assuring the Hon. Gentleman that Sir Thomas Multland had come home, attended by the Law Officers of the Government, for the special purpose of forming a criminal process applicable to the criminal system of the island. That circumstance was proof of the purity of the intentions of the legal advisers of Sir T. Maitland. The Noble Marquis had also the satisfaction of stating that an improved. system of Administration had been introduced to the Ionian Islands, and the system of injustice had been removed. They all knew the difficulty of working new systems, but there was every disposition to take advantage of experience. Sending a Commissioner into the island, would be marked as a proceeding infinitely beyond what the occasion warranted.

Mr. Lennard considered the situation of the inhabitants of the Ionian Islandspeculiarly unfortunate. They were entitled to a free Constitution by the Trenty of Paris, but nothing had been resorted to but the mockery of a Constitution.

Sir I. Coffin said be had known Sir T. Maitland thirty-five years, and a more able and gallant officer did not exist. He should vote against the motion of the Hon. Member for Aberdeen.

Mr. Hume replied.

The House then divided - For the motion, 27-Against it, 97-Majority against the motion, 70.

Mr. Chetwynd brought in a Bill to facilitate summary proceedings before Justices of the Peace au l Police Magistrates; and also a Bill to facilitate and render more certain the transmission of informations and other documents from Magistrates to the Justices of Assize. Read a first time; second reading on Thursday .- Adi.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

The King's visit to Ireland will certainly take place before the Coronation, and very soon after the prorogation of Parliament. It is now understood that his Majesty will go by way of Wales, and. return through Scotland.

The Royal State Coach has undergone a complete alteration and repair rince His Majesty last went to the House of Lords; and it is w, perhaps, one of the most splendid carriages in Europe. ball-proof quarters, which were put in after the attack on the late have been taken away, and replaced by plate glass by order of His Majesty, in the same manner as before that atrocious affair. This alteration gives the carriage a lighter and more splendid appearance, and will afford the public the gratification of a full view of the Sovereign in his passage through the streets. The paintings on the quarter-pannels have been rubbed down with infinite care, and retouched by some of the first artists; and the entire exterior of the carriage has been regilt. The interior is lined with richly embossed Genon crimson velvet in chequered tracery, and trimmed with gold lace. The hammercloth is of the same costly material, with deep gold fringes. The wheels are entirely new, and carred after the antique. The harness is not yet completed; but it is to be of Royal blue leather, edged with a sure, instead of the dark res leather, as before.

The Court of Claims resumed their sittings on Thursday in the Printed Chamber of the House of Lords—Eart of Harrowby Pre-sident. The claims of the Barons of the Cinque Ports to carry the canopy over the King at the Coronation was allowed; as were the claims of Baroness Grey de Wilton to carry a pair of silver spans before the King, and to perform other offices; the Duke of Norfelk as chief Butler. Several other claims were allowed, and the Court adjourned to the 16th instant.

COMMEMORATION OF THE LATE KING .- On Monday, a public dinner was given at the Freemasons' Tavern, in commenoration of George the Third. There were about five hundred persons of the first respectability present, and in the gallery a gr indies, elegantly dressed.

At a quarter past seven, his Royal Highness the Duke of York entered the room, followed by the Earl of Harrowby, Earl Buthurst, Lord Brskine, the Marquis Camden, the Marquis of Lothian, Count Munster, Lord Rivers, and several other distinguished persons.— The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Mr. Justice Burroughs, Mr. Justice Park, and Sir John Sylvester, had previously taken their seats at the principal tables. Sir John Doyle, and several other naval and military characters were also present; also a most excellent band of vocal and instrumental performers.

The first toast was, "The King," three times three, - "God save the King," was performed in a very animated manner. The toast was received with loud cheers, which was prolonged several minutes.

The next toust was, "All the Royal Family."—The following

He acknowledged his presumption in rising to reply to a toast of this description, when so many distinguished maval and military officers, were present. A variety of patriotic toasts were drank during the evening; and nt a late hour, the Royal Chairman left the Meeting, attended by most of the Noblemen and Gentlemen present.

The Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to take into consideration the existing Laws relating to Vagrants, have made their Report. They suggest the expediency of revising and consolidating the different Acts upon Vagrancy; and for this purpose, and various others connected with the subject, they recom mend the revival of the Committee in a future Session. The Report among other suggestions, recommends that the practice of passing Vagrants to their places of settlement be suspended for one year from the 1st of September next.

His Majesty will have a Juvenile Ball on Wednesday at Carlton Rouse, to which a great number of the Nobility and Gentry have been invited.

On Wednesday the Marquis of Londonderry had a long audience of the King.

The annual General Meeting of the National Society for the Rducation of the Poor, was held on Thursday, at the Central School, in Baldwin's Gardens, the Archbishop of Canterbury was in the Chair, surrounded by a numerous body of Bishops, Nobility, and Gentry. Among other things, the Report stated, that a legacy of 5,000l, had been bequeathed to the Society during the last year, by James Hayes, Esq. from which the greatest advantages had resulted to the interests of the Institution. The average number of boys under the immediate notice of the Central School is 486, and girls 235; and in the course of the last year 229 of the former, and 64 of the latter, had been discharged from the school, their education having here counted.

The Charity Children of the Metropolis, male and female, a cording to annual custom, went to St. Paul's Church to hear Divine Service. The Sermon was preached by the Bishop of Glouvine service. The Sermon was preached by the Bislop of Gloucester. Te Deum, Jubilate Deo, the Coronatian Anthem, Handel's Grand Chorus, &c. were sung by the gentlemen of the choir.

On Tuesday, the Friends of the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge, dined at the Freemasons' Tavern, his Royal Highness the Duke of York in the Chair, supported on the right and left by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Lord Bishop of London. The company was numerous and of the highest respectability, among whom were needed of the Bishops and Judges &c. bility, among whom were most of the Bishops and Judges, &c.
The Secretary read the Report, which stated, that 32,199 Bibles, 45,882 New Testaments and Pealters, 85,301 Common Prayers, and 75,550 other bound Books have been distributed gratuitously and on the terms of the Society, within the last year. The Committee have also distributed 827,044 small Tracts, and other books and papers to the amount of 176,315, a total in one year 1,242,091.

Lady Morgan's Work on Italy, will appear in a few days.

Among the numerous Travellers who have visited Italy since the restoration, it is certain that no one has been admitted so unreservedly to inspect the interior of its social and political machinery, as Lady Morgan. The notoricy of her work on France, has pro-cured for her an intimacy and a confidence abroad, which have been rigidly withheld from English Travellers. It is therefore with much curiosity that we notice the announcement of a work, which will contain the observations collected by Ludy Morgan during her two years absence from England.

ANYLOM FOR THE RECOVERY OF HEALTH.—A general meeting of the friends of this most excellent charity was held on Monday at the Thatched House. In the absence of the Duke of York, the Patron, the chair was taken by H. Holland, Esq. one of the Treasurers. The other Treasurer, W. W. Pepys, Esq. opened the business of the day, by expressing his regret at the small amount of the subscriptions hitherto collected, and the low state of the balance in the hands of their bankers, Messrs. Drammonds; this he could only attribute to the peculiar claims which the institution had to the support of the nublic, being not yet sufficiently known or understood. port of the public, being not yet sufficiently known or understood. There was, he was convinced, no other charity calculated to produce so much good at so small an expense. It was now universally acknowledged, that to prevent those who were but just above powerty from sinking into it, was a cheaper and better charity than to relieve the actual mendicant. It was in the hour of sickness that such assistance became most efficacious and opportune. Many in the humbler walks of life, while health continued, could live creditably, who when attacked by serious illness were quite unable to de-fray the expence of medicine and attendance. What course could they now pursue?—To beg an bospital ticket—to become mere dependants upon public charity—and to herd with the miscellaneous crowd which fills the heds of a general hospital, was repugnant to their every feeling of independence and honest pride. And yet the only alternative that now remained was to risk the perishing for want of assistance, or, what was yet worse, to put themselves into the hands of some low practitioner, who, from interested views, would prolong their sufferings, until he left them equally bankrupts in fortune and constitution. If this new institution had any enemies, as aroune and constitution. It this new lastitudes had any essentes, it was among such men alone they could be found. Its patients would have the gratuitous advice of skilful and well-educated men, and the religious instructions of a most zealous and pious Chaplain; and while their feelings were soothed by the consciousness of contributing to their own support, the expense to the subscribers would in proportion to the benefits conferred, be trifling indeed. He would only just add, that this was no untried speculation; such establishments, although new to this country, had been found eminently use ful upon the Continent, in a variety of places and of circumstances—

ful upon the Continent, in a variety of places and of circumstances—smid the dissolute population of Paris, and the more moral and domestic habits of Berne and Copenhagen.

Several other gentlemen followed to the same effect, and particularly Messes. Keate and Brodie, the superintending surgeons, adduced many striking instances to show the great want of some such institution, and the eagerness manifested by that class of persons, for whose benefit it was designed, to avail themselves of it as soon as it should be opened. There was, however, another class, which they pointed out as likely to derive no less advantage than the former from this charity: namely, the very noor the than the former from this charity; namely, the very poor, the proper objects of the general hospitals. At every weekly board the applications of hundreds of these, many of them very distressed objects, were of necessity rejected merely for want of room, while would mach prefer, to defeay their own charges in an institution like that proposed. If the hospitals were relieved from this class of patients, they could receive a proportionably larger number of the very poor; thus every shilling bestowed on this institution might, indesemble to the best to the impreciance objects of it, but merceives sendent of the benefit to the immediate objects of it, he the means of extending assistance to an amount of four or five times as great to some other patient in one of the general hospitals. The meeting concluded by appointing a Committee to carry the proposed plan into immediate effect upon such a scale as its finances would allow; and by most of the noblemen and gentlemen present cially that which would be most efficacious, the diffusing the knowledge of it among their respective friends and acquaintance.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The first mistake Fun alludes to is, as he must see, of the press; the other we are not accountable for—it stood as he saw it in the MS. which came from the hands of a man of the first literary character, even in that part of the world.

We confess our promise to CANDIDUS, but are apprehensive that the subject has been worked threadbare.

So far from wishing "A FRIEND TO JOHN BULL" to "sin no more," we beg he will go on, and we shall be happy to hear from him.

The "OLD INHABITANT OF KENTISH TOWN" must have n taken us; we did not mention that place exclusively, nor, if we had, are we aware of either the immorality or impropriety of training up scarlet beans upon packthread, which appears to us to be a most innocent and by no means ungentlemanly amusement.

PHILO-TAURUS has been received, and shall be attended to in our next. We also thank MERCATOR, and shall feel extremely obliged by his communications.

We duly appreciated BUNGAIENSIS in the MS. but he will, we think, perceive that we cannot praise survolves. If we have done good (as he and many thousands more declare we have) we are truly huppy in bondage or out of bondage; but we cannot be our

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JUNE 10.

OUR readers will, doubtlessly, have observed, that we have abstained from any mention of the Constitutional Society in this Paper, and having done so, we think it somewhat hard that, now the whole force of the faction is brought to bear upon that body, we are lugged into the front of the battle, to be thumped and pelted at the pleasure of the Morning Chronicle and its compeers, whenever it happens to be men-

The allusions to our violence certainly come with no very good grace from the Chronicle, who, as we have before said, set us the example of coarseness and virulence of attack. That the crazy Lords, libidinous minstrels, and demoralized politicians whose united services filled the columns of that Paper with abuse and ridicule of all that is good and great amongst us, chose to abandon the rapier for the tomahawk, is no fault of ours; but the mortification and rage which they feel at finding men ready for them at their own weapons, in duces them to designate poor John Bull as debased, profligate, and disgusting, for writing that, which, if it came from the pen of Brougham, or Rogers, or Moore, or Erskine, or even Lord Holland himself, they would cry up to the skies as most agreeable raillery and very ingenious pleasantry.

This is to be expected; their vexation is so perfectly natural, and their anger so excessively entertaining, that we never feel sore about it; on the contrary, we are quite satisfied that we have fought the fight well whenever we see or hear any of their observations upon us. But, as we said before, what we have to do with the Constitutional Association, or the Constitutional Association with us, we really

We have never gone into the question of the policy of the establishment, nor should we now have noticed it, but it appears to us, that upon the dry question of its legality all has not been said which might have been said.

Mr. Brougham, it appears, is of opinion, that it is illegal; and so, it should seem, is Mr. Scarlett. We would ask, if this Association be illegal, why is it not attacked in a Court of Law? Why is it brought before Parliament, who are not the judges of the law? Mr. Brougham brings Mr. Blacow before the King's Bench-why should he bring Sir John Sewell and his associates before the House of Commons? Because such a case could not stand in a Court of Law.

We would ask, Is not Mr. Brougham, if not a founder, a leading and influencing member of the APRICAN Asso-CIATION? And will he say that the African Association has not taken exactly the same kind of steps for supporting the law against slave trading, which the Constitutional Association employs in support of the law against blasphemy and treason? Certain it is, that though the objects are different, the means are substantially the same. Nay, we know that Nay, we know that Mr. Brougham himself drew up, for circulation, sundry expositions of the law of slave trading, exactly similar to that of the circulation of which, by the Constitutional Society, he is represented to have so grievously complained; a complaint, in which, say the reporters, he was echoed by that mirror of Magistrates, Sir J. Seabright.

We say nothing of the Society for the Suppression of Vice which has, for a long series of years, employed itself in this way, not only without accusation, but with applause, with the approbation of the courts of justice, and with extensive success. Nay, we doubt whether Mr. Scarlett has not condescended to hold the briefs of this society, which is neither more nor less than that which he is now stated to visit with his victuous but fee-less indignation.

We shall not waste time on the flagrant case of the subscription for Hone, to which the Duke of Bedford and Lord Section were such distinguished subscribers; nor upon the Costs, 40s.

Manchester subscription, to which most of the friends:0 Freedom contributed.

But, leaving these out of the question, is there a parish in England which has not its associations for prosecuting offenders? Are not all our villages and towns placarded with notices to this effect? They prosecute burglars, trespaners, and sheep-stealers—the Constitutional Association prosecutes blasphemers and traitors. Will Mr. Scarlett or Mr. Brougham be so kind as to shew us the legal difference: the moral difference is obvious. The Constitutional Association being more useful in the same proportion as treason is a higher crime than petty larceny, and blaspkemy worse than stealing apples.

In a Paper called the Black Dwarf of last month appears the following advertisement of a society—a permanent sub-scription society, for the relief of the persecuted friends of reform; in other words, an association against the operations of the law.

N. B.—The Subscriptions of the Company meeting at the New-ton's Head, having been appropriated by them to the telief of a person confined in the County Gaol, are omitted in the above state-

If the Constitutional Association be illegal, why does not Mr. Brougham denounce this association? It prints and distributes its reports; but not a word has this great lawyer used against it.

These are certainly cases in point, and well worthy the attention of those who look to the legality of the Coustitutional Society.

Never surely did any man of certain pretensions prove himself so woefully weak as Lord Erskine has in the late affair with his Lady—the Lady with whom, at seventy, he man away, in girl's clothes, to Gretna Green! and against whom he since preferred charges of adultery; and of whose purity and amiability he has now (with many personal compliments to the Judge, which were better suited to a drawing-room than a Court of Justice,) declared his entire conviction. If it were not that he is a Whig, we should think his Lordship made this private sacrifice for the sake of his public consistency; for never did man more entirely act up to the character we ass-igned him in our first number than his Lordship:

Crazy Lord Erskine is an Ass--ortment of all follies: He was the first to slur the Queen But since his trip to Gretna G He's woudnous kind to Dollies!

There was considerable fluctuation in the Funds during the former part of the week, and notwithstanding the many attempts made to depress them, they have main-tained full as high prices as at the beginning of the present Accounts. The letters received from France and Naples also mention that the Funds in those countries are on the increase; the French 5 per Cents. having been done at upwards of 87fr. and Neapolitan Stock at 73:14. COURT OF KING'S BENCH, SATURDAY.

The Marquit of Londonderry v. Klyne.—Mr. Gurney, for the Plaintiff, stated, that this was an action brought by the Noble Marquis against Mr. Klyne, as an inhubitant of the Hundred of Ossulton. to recover 291. the amount of the damage done to his Lordship's windows by the mob, on the evenings of the 6th and 7th of June, and 10th and 11th of November last, in consequence of his Lordship's house not being illuminated. It had not been the intention of his client to take any notice of the outrage committed in June, but when his Lordship found it repeated in November, he to show to these mistaken people that it was not the individual, against whom their attack was levelled, who suffered, but the ublic at large.

The Learned Counsel then called three of his Lordship's servants. who proved the assemblage of the mob before the house as the evenings in question, the call for lights, and that call being disregarded, the breaking of the windows.

The tradesman who repaired them proved that the damage done in June amounted to 121 and a facilities and the statement of the st wards of 161. making together 291.

The Chief Justice summed up, and stated, that the facts of the case having been proved, it only remained for the Jury to estimate the damage, as the Plaintiff was by law entitled to full compen-sation from the Hundred in which the house was proved to be e Plaintiff was by law entitled to full comp

The Juryman said, such was not the practice in other places, 48 regarded shop-windows broken by accident: only common glass

The Chief Justice observed, that the Court was not bound by any practice which might prevail in any other place; they were bound by the law, and by law an individual was entitled to full coinges-sation for the property destroyed; here it was proved to be plate glass, and the damage was stated by the witness to amount to $90.; if the Jury believed the witness, they were bound to find a verdict for that amount.

The Jury then found a verdict for the Plaintiff—Damages, 291.

HUMBUG.

Was last week mentioned to a correspondent, that the account of her party which was forwarded for insertion, (with three one pound notes,) was left at the office if she chose to send for it—as she did not do so, we yesterday transmitted it by post to her "hospitable mansion," and we hope she got it safe

While we are upon this subject, we cannot avoid noticing with the most sovereign contempt, the custom which has obtained amongst would-be fashionable people of advertising and puffing their dinners and assemblies in the public news s. It is an absurdity which has drawn upon us the redicule of every other nation in Europe, and richly deserves that lash of the "Satirist's cat-o'-nine tails," which is devoted to the chastisement of consummate folly.

What should we think of a man who, meeting us the day subsequent to that on which he had opened his house, should make a speech in these terms:-

"Last night, Sir, I opened my 'hospitable mansion to the fashionable world; 'the company began to arrive about eleven, and before one the whole square was choaked up with carriages.'—'I had the front drawing-room, the back drawing-room'—' my own library'—' my wife's boudoir, and the green drawing-room opened, and lighted with the purest wax candles.'-- 'The company began to pour in about midnight, and at half past one, the supper-100ms were thrown open. My tables groaned with every delicacy of the season—my wines were excellent, and the urbanity of my manners, and those of my wife, the amiable and accomplished mistress of the house, charmed every body. — My elder daughter looked beautiful, and was the admiration of all the company: Miss Maria, my second daughter, was simply drest in white, and attracted universal notice. — Quadrilles were resumed after supper, and continued till Sol gave my delighted visitors a warning to depart.' ''

Then, in addition to this, just as you were leaving him, if he were to add—"By the wey, amongst my visitors, all of whom I invited myself,) I noticed—his Highness the Duke of Gloucester, Count Caraman, and nearly all the fashionable world."

If a man did this, we only ask, should we not denounce him for the silliest, most empty-headed ass upon earth?

If, then, such a tirade of egotistical stuff be not bearable in conversation, how is it to be excused in the grave heads of families, who sit down, with folly "prepense," to make paragraphs for the public Papers, full of similar matter, and couched in nearly the same terms.

Doctor Eady, Sir Harlequin Daniels, the Queen, Alexandre the Ventriloquist, Miss Macauley, the Bonassus, and all such things and persons, require puffing, because, to be notorious is the object; but, that modest, decent, well-disposed people should take the same tone with these mountebanks would appear to us (if we did not see it done daily and hourly) quite inconceivable.

We have said, that we think this national folly-for it has infected the provinces (vide an account of a Liverpool ball some months back)-deserves the hand of the satirist, and we see no reason why the salutary correction should not be administered by those who prescribe it. Apothecaries take that line with their patients, and if we follow them with a view of getting rid of the absurdity, we have their double chance of success in our favour; and therefore, whenever we find ladies and gentlemen making themselves egregious asses by blazoning forth their own agreeable parties, we shall take the liberty to do that, which we promised in our outset—" Tell truth, and call every thing by its right name." We have now given the dunces fair warning—let them look out!

As the Queen has desired, in her Letter, that seven Peeresses may be appointed to attend her at the Coronation—Query—when -Query-where ere the seven Peerceses who would perform the duty?

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.—For the last three or four years the city of Norwich has been infested with the filth of Carille, Benhow, Belby, see, and even amongst the inhabitants insitators of those persons have sprung up to attack every person at all known for level principles.—One who had excited the mob against a imaginate, and led them to obstruct him in the execution of his duty, was detected, the most serious infermation lodged against him, but

The Burt, the Major, a mild, liberal, and excellent patriot, and an amount for the liberty of the press, and a subscriber to Home, the ded the affender's cause with the complainants, who, upon his representations, withdrew their informations.—A little before the election of Mr. Burt to office, and after this affair, a printer, sealous for the bonour of Norwich, and feeling the important station in the state a Mayor of that great city would of necessity fill, published a hand-bill, calling on his fellow-citizens not to give their votes to blasphemers, frequenters of ale (and worse) how men who associated, in their cups, with the very dregs of society. When this bill was published sione but Tories were in nomination; nevertheless, Mr. Burt and two more magistrates (all subaribers to Hone, and all friends to the liberty of the press) had this printer up, fixed him twenty posseds for not knowing the author of the bill, fee posseds more because the street in which he lived was not added to his name as printer, and another five posseds because his press had not been entered according to law. For these fives his press had not been entered according to law. For these flues a distress was levied upon his goods, and if some humane persons had not interfered his press and furniture would have been sold.— It may be necessary to add that the informer got half the penalties.

Public opinion, however warped, generally comes straight at last. In the early part of Miss Wilson's career we were assailed by various correspondents, who called us illiberal, and, we believe, barbarous, because we could not swallow all Mr. Elliston's puts about that young Lady, and her singing. We declared her in the outset to be no singer, and we again declare it; and we would put it to any singing-master, except her own, whether she is, or is not, and we should have no doubt of the answer.

But we come to a point more interesting to the few people who think for themselves;—while Miss Wilson was puffed to the skies by the "Public Press," who are let in gratis on purpose to conciliate them, the houses overflowed. Last week came her benefit—when orders (which never could be admitted) were excluded, and, lo and behold, there was an empty house, and that with a new Opera, which was to beat Artanerxes hollow, at her back. By this exposure the town will learn what real admiration of a singer is, and what the fictitious humbug of theatrical quackery.

LIST OF CLERGYMEN WHO HAVE PRAYED FOR THE QUEEN.

The REV. JOHN SMITH, Curate of St. James, near Liverpool, begs us to contradict the calumnious report of his having prayed for the Queen.

TO THE PROPRIETOR AND EDITOR OF "JOHN BULL." GENTLEMEN—We are a few Loyal Men, who meet together after the fatigues of the day to talk over the news; and as we take in John Bull, and are convinced that you have done the good cause great service, we feel concerned for you. To alleviate in some measure the gloom of your " prison-house," by shewing that even here you are thought of with respect, we request your acceptance of "a Barrel of Nottingham Ale."

Having given an explanation of the motive which induced this intrusion, we presume you will deem an apology un-

We are, Gentlemen, your obedient Servants,
FRIENDS TO JOHN BULL. P.S. The Cask is sent by Deacon and Co. by Canal.

Nottingham, 26th May, 1821. We return our thanks to our unknown friends at Nottingham for the ale, which has arrived safely.

TO JOHN BULL.

Sin,-I have observed that appeals made to you avowedly in the name of common justice are generally inserted in your Paper. I do not profess myself competent to do justice to the merits of the individual on whose behalf I write, but as no other person has ever noticed your attacks upon him. (probably because they have not thought it possible that any attacks, whether from you or others, can materially injure his high public character) I have ventured to introduce myself to your notice as an admirer and a humble vindicator of Mr. Wilberforce.

I accuse you of illiberality, of inconsistency, and of injustice towards him, both in your Paper of Sunday last, and in a former Paper of the 25th of February. Mr. Wilberforce was an early friend of one whom none can admire more than myself—Mr. Pitt. That he was the friend, the valued friend of such a man is of itself no mean commendation. The landari a landatis viris has been truly described as the noblest of all distinctions, and this distinction is, for the reason I have just mentioned, pre-eminently due to Mr. Wilberforce.

Upon the principles of that great statesman he has actedyou know, that he has acted through life. Though taunted, ridiculed, abused by the disloyal of every class, from the discontented Whig to the revolutionary Radical, he has steadily, through the course of a long political life, persevered in asserting, aye, and in voting for, those principles, without reference to self-without regard to his own interests -without considering for a moment his own personal advantage.

That he has occasionally deviated from this strict adherence to Mr. Pitt's successors, is unquestionably true; that he has, in his place, condemned many of their proceedings, cannot be denied; but I appeal to yourself whether this accidental deviation has not afforded the strongest evidence that his ministerial bias is the result of conscientious principle, and not of a blind and selfish party prejudice? And if this is true, is it not most illiberal and uncandid to make such deviation the pretext for charging him with Jesuitical hypocrisy, and contemptible imbecility as a public man? Is it not most inconsistent in you, who avow yourself, and I believe sincerely, the advocate and partisan of Tory principles, to condemn the casual aberrations (admitting them, for argument's sake, to be such) of one of the oldest and steadiest adherents of a Tory Ministry? Is it not most unjust for you to hold up to public hatred and contempt the man who has already, (as far as a man like him can be rendered the object of hatred and contempt) been exposed to them by your op-ponents—by men who are his enemies for no reason that does not equally make them years?

But, Sir, there is yet another consideration which should have some weight with you, with reference to that cause of which I profess myself to be as well as you, as far as lies in my power, a staunch friend and supporter. Is it politic in us (I may say,) to disgust and irritate the numerous, and in some respects, powerful party of which Mr. Wilberforce is avowedly the representative? Is this a period when we can afford to less a single ally or offend a single auxiliary? True, there is a mass of good and loyal feeling remaining in the country, the very existence of that most laudable insti tution, the Constitutional Association, indisputably proves the But no one who is not wilfully blind, can shut his eyes to another fact equally important—that there is a mass of sedition—of disloyalty—of treason, that there is a mass of blasphemy, atheism and overbearing audacious licenti-ousness—both political and religious. That wretches whose breath is pollution, and whose touch is death, are confederating to destroy all that remains among us of what is noble and excellent, and good—that neither excellence of character, nor magnificence of talent, nor elevation of rank can protect its possessor from the shafts of low-bred ribaldry, from the infamous attacks of men who scarcely bondescend to vei their treason—that individuals are pointed at as fit objects for assassins—that personal enmity has been substituted for political opposition. And shall we, who designate ourselves as loyalists par excellence, who profess to be governed by a sort of chivalrous attachment to old-fashioned doctrines of devotion to our King, reverence for our Church, and attachment to the State; shall we, I say, follow the disgraceful example of suffering political rancour to blind our eyes to the merits of all who fall short, however little, of our political

For the reason assigned in my first sentence, I trust you will insert this letter, and if I chose to avail myself of the vulgar plea, I might claim some right to its insertion on the ground of that respect, which (though a constant reader,) I have always felt, and professed for your editorial labours, but I would rather put it to your justice than your courtesy: and such appears to be your consummate skill in developing the truth on most subjects, that I am the more concerned at the necessity I feel myself under of stepping forward to give you a more accurate impression of Mr. Wilberforce's character than you already possess.—Yours, &c. June 4, 1821.

We have inserted S. G.'s Letter because we like to do justice, but, as we have already said, we prefer facts to arguments. S. G.'s Letter is all say, but S. G. says well enough, and we have no fault to find with him; nor should we be very much surprised if he were Mr. Wilberforce himself; however, as facts are the things we stick to, we make no ob-servations upon the defence contained in the communication, but venture to qualify the effect it might have upon our readers by giving an anecdote of the person who is the subject of it:-

Some years ago, when the county of York returned Mr. Wilberforce to Parliament, one of the livings in the city of York, which was in the gift of the Crown, fell vacant, and the Lord Mayor seconded by the Corporation, wrote to Mr. Wilberforce to request him to use his influence with Government to procure the preferment for (we believe,) the Lord. Mayor's Chaplain.

Mr. Wilberforce with that purity of spirit and genuine high-mindedness which belongs to him, returned an answer, lamenting with pious sorrow his inability to comply with their request, as he felt, that asking for any thing would, in some degree, militate against his independence; and, he felt assured, that his constituents far from being offended with the denial, would recognise the principle by which he trusted with the blessing of Providence he should always. regulate his political life.

The Lord Mayor was moved almost to tears at this answer even the Aldermen were affected, and they declared that a more beautiful specimen of uprightness had never met their

Some months, perhaps, years after this, a Yorkshire genfleman happened to be dining in company with the Lord Chanceilor, and touching upon local matters, made some remarks upon the then incumbent of the living in question. What he said, we do not exactly recollect; nor if we did, should we perhaps repeat it: however, it will suffice to observe, that he expressed some little dissatisfaction at the Methodistical turn' of the Rev. Divine, whose name, we believe, is Overton.

The Lord Chancellor, in reply, said, that he did not himself know Mr. Overton, but that Mr. Wilberforce had recommended him so strongly for the living, that they could not avoid nominating him, and that from being the friend of such a man, they had not thought it necessary to make any further inquiries into his qualifications.

ANECDOTE OF DOCTOR PARR AND SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.

Some years since, Sir James, then Mr. Mackintosh, dining in a large party with Dr. Parr, the conversation turned upon an Irish Roman Catholic Priest, who had been executed for treason at Maidstone. Mr. Mackintosh was most violent in his observations upon the culprit, who had already paid the penalty of crime; so violent, and so severe, that the Doctor, who, with all his wrong-headedness, had then a touch of humanity in his composition, turned round, and petrified Mackintosh, by saying,—"Sir,—the criminal, who has been "hanged was an Irishman—he might have been a Scotchman: " he was a Priest—he might have been a lawyer: he was con-" sistent—he might have been—AN APOSTATE."

It will be seen that some paspers have petitioned against the new Poor Bill. This has been cited by several Papers as a proof of the distress in which such persons must be, "as it is the first time a petition so signed was ever heard of."—The whole tone and character of the petition betray the framers, and confirm its real objects; but it so happens that it is not the first petition of the sort that was ever heard of, inasmuch, as at the period when the revolutionists were working upon the feelings of the people in the reign of Charles the First the same trick was played off.—Hume says, vol. vii. p. 277—"Another petition was presented by several poor people, or hergars, in the name of many thousands more." "Such people, or beggars, in the name of many thousands more." "Such low arts," adds the Historian, "of popularity were affected; and by such illiberal cant were the people incited to civil discord and

MARGATE, JUNE 8 .- This fashionable watering-place, on account of the weather principally, is very dull at present, but when Parliament is up, those who now complain of the absence of company will have reason to rejoice. Of late years, Margate has become a place of resort for the Ton, during the recess; indeed, the amusements, and the rides and walks give it a preference to most other watering-places. The public rooms are elegant—the fashlonable lounge is Bettison's, which in the season is crowded; the spirited proprietor is certainly entitled to the thanks of the visitors for the attention which he has paid to their wants, and for the splendid manner in which his establishment is conducted. fashionables here who certainly enliven the town by their prese but Margate is not what it will be when full, all then will be guiety, life and spirit, the tradesmen will dissipate their gloom, the lodging houses draw in their brooms, and then the difficulty will be to find a shelter. I must not forget to notice the accommodation which has been held out to the invalid and other visitors, by the means of steam vessels, which afford a quick and pleasant passage; the accommodations which these vessels afford, and the splendid manner in which they are fitted up are the themes of praise. The Eclipse, Capt. Harvey, is a beautiful vessel, and both the mander and the Steward (a Mr. Watts,) are most attentive to the comforts and conveniences of their guests. The Favourite, Capt. Large, is entitled to no small share of this encomium. As the town fills, you may expect to hear from me, with all the tattle of

The Yeoman Usher of the Black Rod summoned the House to attend the House of Peers, to hear the Royal Assent given by Commission to several Public and Private Bills, for which see the Lords.

Mr. W. Smith presented a Petition from certain Protestant Dissenters calling themselves Unitarians. The grievance which they complain of was, that they were unable to marry except according to the forms of the Established Church.

Dr. Phillimore observed that if it was intended to found upon this measure a Bill similar to the one which had been presented two or three years ago, he should decidedly object to it; because, if he recollected right, that Bill had entirely left out any religious obligation in the marriage ceremony, and made it merely a civil contract.

The Petition was ordered to be printed.

The Report of the Committee appointed to enquire into the procoedings of the Receivers of Taxes was laid on the table.

On the motion of Mr. Henry Grey Bennett, an Account of the Mombers of this House holding Offices under the Crown, &c. was ordered to be laid before the House.

On presenting a Petition from Lancashire against the Poor Relief

Mr. Brougham adverted to the arguments which had been used on the Bill. The argument used on this subject by the supporters of the Bill was, not that the poor-rates were an incentive to marriage, but that the removal of the poor-rates would interpose a check upon imprudent marriages. The long and short of the argument n was, that as long as the poor-rates continued, the poor man looked upon them as a certain resource, and entered into the marriage state without any care for the expences which it might entail upon him. Take away the poor-rates and a check would be im-The truth was, that it was both impolitic and unjust for the poor man to contract a heedless marriage; it was the same thing as going into a shop and purchasing articles which he knew he was unable to pay for.

Col. Wood said, that he thought that the Hon. Member who had brought forward the Bill had not had fair play. It was evident that the Hon. Member had not undertaken the subject until no one else would do so; and he thought that when the consideration of the Bill was entered into, it would be found, that so far from deserving the unpopularity which had been attempted to be cast upon him, the Hon. Member was in fact rendering the most important service to the poor man. He thought its main object was to relieve the poor man from that degrading state of slavery in which he was held by the present system of the Poor Laws.

Mr. Scarlett observed, that as so much had been said about the public opinion respecting this Bill, and as he thought be had had as extensive a correspondence as any other Member, he would venture to say, that his plan had been as favourably received as any other would have been; and that the objections which had been made to it had generally proceeded from persons who had proposed some plan of their own.

After some further conversation, the Petition was laid on the table Mr. Henry Grey Bennett brought in a Bill to amend the Laws respecting the rescue of prisoners.—Read a first time, and ordered for a second reading on Wednesday.

Mr. Serj. Onslow, acceding to the general wish of the House, postponed his Usury Laws Repeal Bill till next Session.
On bringing up the Report of the Ways and Means,
Mr. J. P. Grant made some observations on the state of the debt and the various charges.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, if the assertions of the Hon. Gent. had not been repeatedly made and answered, he should have felt it necessary to have entered into an exposition of the subjects upon which he had spoken. He should only refer to the opinion which the House had already pronounced on the subject, which the Hon. Gent. so unnecessarily revived.

After some further observations the Report was agreed to.

The Marquin of Londonderry moved the House to go into a Committee on the Resolution of the House in 1818, for an increased provision to his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence.

Mr. Monck opposed the Speaker's leaving the Chair. When the House had been told the country was not in a situation to give compensation to the American Loyalists, he thought Gentlemen ought to look with suspicion on any increased allowance to his Royal Highness.

The Marquis of Londonderry thought he should best consult the wishes of the House by refraining from entering into any detailed answer to the Honourable Member. The opinion which the House entertained of the manner and matter of his speech, it would be hest to allow the public to appreciate by the cool-ness of the reception which that Gentleman's statements had met with from the House. The Noble Lord explained, that in the year 1818 a provision had been made for those branches of the Royal Family that might be induced to marry. The Duke of Cambridge, and subsequently the Duke of Kent, received an accession of income, conformably with the general arrangement; and the resolution for granting a similar allowance to the Duke of Clarence, was agreed to. His Royal Highness felt it would not be consistent with his interests, and the peculiarity of his situation, being considerably involved, to accept the proffered kindness of the House. He accordingly thankfully declined the offer, and resolved to retire to the Continent, where he expected his circumstances would shortly be sufficiently improved to admit of his return to this country in greater case as to circumstances. The peculiar state of his Royal Highness's Consort's beath rendered his stay abroad but short. The Duchess returned, and was delivered in this country of an infant, which, had it lived, he should have felt it his duty to come to the House and ask for it, as Heiress Presumptive to the Crown, an allowance suitable to its rank and expectations; at least, he should have felt it his duty to bring forward a motion for increasing the allowance or provision made by Parliament for her illustrious father. It was his intention to move that his Royal Highness should receive a sum equivalent to that which he would have been entitled to receive had the Resolution then agreed to been acted on, and had his Royal Highness received from time to time the additional 60001. a year. The Noble Marquis concluded by moving that this Honse should make provision for enabling His Majesty to ake good to his Royal Highness the Duke of tional provision of 60001. a year, contemplated by the resolution of the House in the year 1818, but which, from peculiar circumstances, had been declined respectfully by his Royal Highness, together with the arrears which would have become due on the said mmuity of 60001 a year since the passing of the said resolution.

Mr. Hume submitted to the Noble Lord whether it would not , be advisable to divide the question into two distinct parts.

The Marquis of Londonderry could not accede to such a proposal, because it would be a concession directly contrary to the spirit of the Resolution of 1818, which had contemplated an increased expenditure from that period forward as inseparable from the alteration which then took place in the domestic relations of that Royal personage.

Mr. Hume said, he would go along with the Noble Lord so far as the principle went of placing his Royal Highness on the same looting as to income with his Royal Brothers. The Noble Lord would however recollect, that his Royal Highness was at least in one respect better off than his younger brothers, inasmuch as he had out of the public money 2,500l. a-year more than any of them. The Hoa. Member then alluded to the property of the late King.

If His Majesty, as some supposed, died worth 1,000,0001. this would leave 200,0001. to his Royal Highness the Duke of Carence, and be amply sufficient to secure an annuity greater than the now demanded. He asked His Majesty's Ministers whether the law of the land had been adhered to, for he would not con-sent to vote away the public money till he knew whether His Majesty's property was legally disposed of. If not so disposed of, it became in fact public property, and ought to be made available in part to the object for which they, were now called upon to vote 6,0001, a-yeur. On these grounds he should propose that the sum of 3,5001, should be substituted for 6,0001.

The Marquis of Londonderry did not expect any opposition to a proposition so reasonable. On the contrary, he felt confident, before the Hon. Gent. had spoken, that the vote would have been unanimous; for he never recollected one that applied more to the good sense of the House, or was less likely, from the nature of it, to excite opposition. It was surprising the Hon. Gent. (Mr. Hume) who took such great pains to obtain accurate information upor other subjects, did not make himself acquainted with the fact, that the 2,500l. was granted on the Civil List, in early life, to the Duke of Clarence. When the allowance to the other branches of the Royal Family was subsequently arranged, this sum of 2,5001. was not taken notice of; it was allowed to continue because the Duke of Clarence was the only one of the younger brothers who did not enjoy a professional income. The circumstances now were materially different to those under which his Royal Highness before refused this grant. He was then uninerried and residing abroad; but he had, during the whole of the interval that elapsed since the proposition was first made, livid in this country, and of course incurred much greater expense. With respect to His late Majesty's property upon a former occasion, he distinctly stated that the tales in circulation about 1,000,000l. left by His Majesty were completely idle and groundless, and the money property left did not, in point of fact, exceed 80,000l. which was little enough to provide for those charitable donations he granted during his lifetime. All the remaining real property was taken by his present Majesty jure coronæ, and was now placed under the proper officer. Under these circumstances it was plain, that the Duke of Clarence could derive no advantage from his father's property. The House would now perceive what foundation there was for those reported accumulations made by the King, and by her late Majesty, who was supposed to be possessed of a large private purse. The truth was, that that illustrious woman, so far from being wealthy, died with hardly sufficient assets to cover her debts. It was for Parliament now to consider, whether they would make this provision for his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence, as for a younger brother?

Mr. Hume said, he made no charge on the private character of the Duke of Chrence. He was willing to make up his income to 24,0001, a-year, but not to give him more than the younger brothers of the Royal Family.

Mr. Tierney supported the grant; under the circumstances of the time, it was honourable to his Royal Highness that he did not then accept it; but from that hour to this he (Mr. T.) was in expectation that the proposition now before them would be brought forward, and his wonder was that it had not been proposed sooner.

Mr. Forbes could not support the proposition for granting the

Mr. Harbord did dot think it the business of the House to it quire at present into the motives which had influenced the refusal of his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence. Though he saw no reason to induce him to vote for the reduction to 3,500l. he could not make up his mind to vote for the arrears. He should not enter into any argument upon the subject, but should beg leave to move as an amendment, that a sum not exceeding 6,0001. should be granted.

After some further discussion, Mr. Hume withdrew his amen ment, and the Committee divided on Mr. Harbord's amendment-

The Marquis of Londonderry said, circumstances of a very painful nature occurred there; but every care was taken by his Majesty's Ambassador, as well as those of other Powers, to protect those persons entitled to it. Circumstances of a distressing nature did in fact occur there, but the Admiralty had taken care that the navigation of the Archipelago should be especially preserved, so that the interests of commerce might not be seriously injured or impeded.

In a Committee Mr. Irving made some observations with resp to the claim of Gen. Desfourneaux, and referred to the Roport of a Committee which recommended that a sum of 20,0061. 12s. 6d. should be paid to him or his representatives for losses suffered by the General in Gaudaloupe. The Hon. Member then proposed this

The proposition, after some conversation, was postponed to give an opportunity for further information on the subject. The next resolution was for granting a sum of 105,9731, for de-fraying the expences of the superannuated list, which was agreed to.

The Committee then reported progress.

Mr. D. Gilbert presented the Report of a Committee, respecting the fees paid to the Clerks of this House, and stated, that next session he should propose a measure for reducing those fees.

There being not forty Members present, the House, at two o'clock, adjourned till Wednesday.

CONSISTORY COURT, DOCTORS' COMMONS, JAK. 5. Lord Erskine v. Lady Erskine.—As soon as the Court met ord Brkine, in parsuance of the public notification which be gave in his letter some days ago, appeared in Court, and took his seut on the Bench, next Sir William Scott, the presiding Judge.

Dr. Swaby said, he was instructed to inform the Court, that the Noble Lord being, since the institution of these proceedings, per-Lady Erskine in justice to her Ladyship, and to his own feelings, to withdraw his suit for a divorce. Certain proceedings were new pending between the parties, which, the Learned Doctor said, he hoped would terminate the matter at issue. The Court was aware that Lady Erskine had also applied for almony, and a separation, and her suit was still pending. Lord Erskine was, however, anxious to state, that he meant altogether to withdraw his application, even if he Ladyship were advised to continue her suit against his Lordship, should the adjustment now going on out of Court, not terminate in a deed of separation between the parties. He therefore prayed, that the assignation granted by the Court should be allowed to stand over until the next Court day.

Or. Adams said, that, as Counsel for Lady Erskine, he could of course have no objection to the application made on the part of Lord Erskine, that the assignation decreed by the Court should stand over until a future day. Upon the other matters referred to by Dr. Swaby, he (Dr. Adams) should perhaps better consult his duty by saying nothing upon the present occasion.

Sir W. Scott then ordered that the assignation should stand over till the next Court day.

Lord Erskine then rose, and observed, that he athended in Court for the purpose of declaring his concurrence in what had fallen from his Counsel. He was the more anxious to do so, and he made the declaration loudly and openly, because there was no person in this land, in whose good opinion he was more anxious to stand well, than in that of the Learned person who presided in that Court. The Noble Lord then bowed to the Court, and resumed his seat. Sir William Scott said, that as the matter now stood, he trusted the Learned Counsel who advised Lady Erskine would concur, as far as they could, according to their sense of the justice of the case, in recommending such a course as would spare the Court the painful necessity of deciding upon this case. He (Sir William Scott) had an ancient regard and friendship for Lord Erskine, and must always feel a deep interest in whatever concerned Lord Erskine, or the ce of his family.

The Court was crowded to excess, and Lady Erskine was present, accompanied by a female friend.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, THURSDAY

Budd v. Duggin .- The Plaintiff, a young lady, twenty-three years of age, the daughter of the late house-keeper at the Richmond Theatre, brought her action to recover a compensation in damages Theatre, brought her action to recover a compensation in damages for breach of promise of marriage. It appeared that the Plaintiff being left an orphan about five years ago, was placed under the protection of her aunt, who sent her to acquire a knowledge of the hat trimming business. For the accomplishment of that object she resided in the house of Mr. Sulter, in the City, who carried on the hat trimming business. The Defendant, who is a young man now established as a batter in Newgate-street, paid his addresses to her, and promised her marriage. He was an apprentice at the time, and he communicated his intention not only to the Plaintiff, but to his master. The courtship went on with every prospect of a union, until a few months since, when the Defendant broke it off, on pretence that the Ludy had made certain confessions, which rendered matrimony on his part imprudent. As she was not conscious of any misconduct, and had suffered much by having her prospects of comfort in life destroyed, she brought this action.

The defence was, that the Plaintiff stated she had married, before the defendant's courtship, with a midshipman. There were also charges of irregularity of conduct which rendered her unit, in the opinion of the Defendant, to become his partner through life. The letters which passed between the parties were quite unique, and those who heard them were highly amused. It was, however, clear, under all the circumstances, that the character of the plaitiff stood fair, and the Jury gave her a verdict for 1901. damages.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The East India Company's ship Canning arrived off the Wight on Thursday; she sailed from China in company with the Asia on the 16th February, arrived at St. Helena on the 20th April, and sailed from thence on the 25th for England. The Asia left St. Helena twelve hours before the Canning. The Marquis of Huntly and Dunira have arrived at Whampon from Bengal, and were expected to sail for England early in March. The Winchelsen and Dorsetshire were to be dispatched from China on their homeward voyage, about the middle of February. The Lady Melville had arrived at Lentin from Bengal.

The Countess Lieven and suite sailed from Dover for Calais on Sunday, on her way to Russin. Count Leven accompanied her from London no farther than Gravesend, where he embarked in a gunbrig to save travelling by land.

The cross and ball are now surrounded with poles, which have a most fearful effect from the street, and it seems that the whole work is directed from within, as none of the mea are observed on the outside. We understand that by order of the Dean, and other Dignitaries of the Cathedral, the admissions to the upper part are to be very limited during the period that the building shall be under repair, with a view to prevent the possibility of accidents.

CHARITABLE DONATION.—An old gentleman, seeing the advertisement from the parish of Mary-le-bone for a loan of 20,0001. at 4½ per cent. for the purpose of building churches, has presented the parish with the sum, on the condition of receiving 5 per cent. dur-

RELECTION OF A COMMON COUNCILMAN. - The election for the Ward of Aldersgate closed on Thursday, when Mr. Waiton was delared duly elected, the numbers being-For Mr. Walton, 124; for Mr. Diggens, 114; -majority, 10.

A curiosity of great antiquity, and unique in its kind, has lately been brought to this country by a Gentleman, who acquired it with a deal of trouble and expence on the Continent; it condats of our Saviour and the Twelve Apostles, in amber, of large dimensions, with the boads of hard stone; they are supposed by several professors who have seen them to be of the sixth century, and by the desire of friends will in a few days be exhibited for public inspection.

Wooler, Edmunds, and Maddocks, who were sentenced on Friday last to different periods of imprisonment in Warwick Gaol, were on Tuesday removed to that place from the King's Beach prison.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO THE MANSION HOUSE. - The bubble has at length burst beyond the power of reparation. Through the whole of last week the sapient Alderman and the worthy Chief Magistraie of the City, have been at work to create something like a display of public feeling towards the illustrious Carolina Columbina. The intended visit to the Mansion House, and intention to dine there yesterday, was published in every quarter, and Alderman Wood was so anxiously engaged in preparing for her reception, and endeavouring to excite a feeling in her favour on this last expiring effort, that even his Parliamentary duties were neglected; and he prevailed on a friend to postpone his important motion relative to the private rights of an individual in a Welch State Mine to a future day, to enable him to devote his sole attention to the important visit of her Majesty to the Mansion House. The Lord Mayor was equally anxious, hoping at least, that on this occasion he should obtain the honor of being appointed a Knight of Saint Caroline. Men appoint, but Providence disappoints; about four o'clock her Majesty passed along the Strand, Fleet Street and Cornhill to the Mansion House, in her carriage and four indeed, but unaccompanied by the common tokens of ect which generally accompany the royal liveries in this happy and free country. She arrived at the Mansion House uninterrupt by any symptom of popular approbation, and was received with a silence rather resembling that attendant on a funereal feast, than the joyous expressions of heart-felt satisfaction which has heretofore accompanied a City banquet in the metro-polis of the British Empire. She was accompanied by Lady Anne Hamilton, and one of the daughters of the sapiant Alderman, who we understand, looks forward to the honour of being appointed a Maid Attendant, we will not say of Honour, on her Most Excellent Majesty. On her arrival, she was received by his Lordship, and the Sheriffs Waithman and Williams, satellites of his Lordship; but we have in vain endeavoured to discover any other persons, eron equal with them in rank, who were assembled to greet her on her arrival. Even her Majesty appeared to feel the degradation of her situation, for not even the charms of a Civic Monarch's table could engage her attention. She appeared impatient to retrent to the peculiar enjoyments of her own domestic circle, and quitted the Civic Palace soon after seven o'clock, returning to Brandenburgh House in happy obscurity-not a single chimney-sweep or dustman being found, in her whole progress, hardy enough to profane the English language, or to outrage the feelings of the English people by exclaiming—" God save the Queen."

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

TUESDAY .-- Robert Bingham, Esq. was indicted for provoking James Browne, Esq. Member for the county to fight a duel.-The defendant had come over from Ireland to complain to the prosecutor of the postmaster of that place, (whom he understood had been appointed by the Right Honourable Denis Browne, the prosecutor's father), and to procure his removal. The prosecutor promised to acquaint his father, which he did, and on a subsequent meeting shewed him the disavowal of Mr. D. Browne as to the appointment. The defendant, as the prosecutor was about to leave the room, called him back, and said, he had other business with him, for, said he, "Your father has made my uncle promises which must be enforced, and I have brought a friend from Ireland for that purpose, and I espect a meeting from you." The prosecutor re-pited he had nothing more to say, and was leaving the room, but the defendant called him again, and insisted on a meeting, saying at the same time, "We can't fight in this country; I am going to Mayo, and I know you will be there soon." Some time after this the desendant wrote a letter to the prosecutor, which manifested his determination to force the prosecutor to fight a duel.

James Browne, Esq. the prosecutor, proved the facts, and stated that he never had any quarrel or dispute with the defendant, nor had be ever given him the slighest provocation.

Mr. Alley addressed the Jury on behalf of the defendant The Chairman charged the Jury, that if they believed the defendant intended to provoke the prosecutor to fight a duel, they must find a verdict of guilty.

The Jury found the defendant guilty, and the Court sentenced him to pay a fine of 501, and find security for keeping the peace, himself in 2008, and two sureties in 1001, each, for two years. The defendant paid the fine in Court.

WEDNESDAY.—Edward Rush, alias Smith, alias Cid, &c. Wil-tism Horn, Thomas Condell, and Wm. Jones, were indicted for desperately assaulting and heating William Hewitt and George Par-tridge, Officers of the Police Office, Shadwell, in the execution of their duty in preventing bullock hunting, on the 12th of Pebruary "Rush to twelve mouths' hard labour in the House of Correction, and Hora to eight months' imprisonment."

FaidAv.—George Copestake was indicted for assaulting Martha

The prosecutrix stated, that her husband rented a shop and parour from the defendant; that he came in with a distress for rent; that she took up a chemise, and put it under her arm to prevent its being taken; upon which the defendant struck her several blows on the side; she was at the time far advanced in pregnancy; she was taken in labour that night, and continued so three days, when she was delivered of a dead child, whose body was marked with bruises from the blows she had received; her own person retained the marks of the blows for six weeks.

The Jury immediately found the prisoner Guilty, and after an imonition from the Court, he was sentenced to pay a fine of 201. Richard Wade and Ann, his wife, were severally indicted for re-wiving stolen goods.

Mr. Andrews stated the case for the prosecution. He said the de fendants kept an old iron shop in St. Andrew-street, Seven Dials. In March last, the plaintiffs, Messrs. Spode and Copeland, of Portugal-street, had property stolen to a considerable amount. They had information that part of it was at the house of the defendant and upon searching their premises 13 dozen of delf plates, with the marks of the firm, were found concented in a room up stairs. The property was identified by one of the clerks in the employ of the plaintiffs. The defendants would not give any account as to the manner in which they came by the acticles in question.

This statement was corroborated by three witnesses, and the defendants were found Guilty.

POLICE.

BOW-STREET.—Riot in St. Giles's.— During the whole of Sunday afternoon the parishes of St. Cilles and Bloomsbury were one scene of riot and disturbance, arising out of one of those brawls which occasionally take place between the low Irish residing in that quarter. About three o'clock a mob of about two hundred persons assembled in Buckeridge-street, armed with sticks and other weapons, and commenced a most desperate fight, each party being decorated with distinguishing colours. The women em-ployed themselves in collecting brick-bats for their respective champions, and at length one party beat the other into High Hol-The latter then rallied, and forced the others back to St Giles's again, where the affray was truly dreadful, and no less than twenty men were shockingly wounded, and conveyed to the hospitals and doctors' shops. At length the constables of the parish arrived, but were speedily repulsed; and it was not till Sir Robert Baker sent a strong detachment of the Bow-street patrole, that any thing like order could be maintained .- Patrick Egan, Patrick thing like over court be maintinged.—Fatter Egidi, Taiter M'Cartly, John Pitsgerald, Thos. Dopley, John Drew, T. Bryan, T. Kenough, Phellm O'Donaghue, Patrick O'Shaughnessy, Patrick Kyle, and Michael Taylor were all ordered to give forty-eight hours notice of bail for entering into sureties to keep the peace towards all the King's subjects.—It was stated that these rows would be neither so frequent nor so ferocious if it was not for a Mr. M Cormick, who keeps a large depôt of shildaghs, and hires

Maksion-House.—On Wednesday, an application was made by a person named Thackery, to the Lord Mayor, to procure warrants against a number of individuals, forming part of a society, entitled "the Constitutional Association." The ground of the application was upon three charges. The first for subscribing to and publishing a declaration not required by law, nor registered with the Clerk the Peace, in manner and form required by the statute, 39 Geo. III. cap. 79, s. 2. The second for constituting part of a branch Corresponding Society within the meaning of that Act. The third, for having members thereof subscribing to the same, whose names are not known to the Society at large. His Lordship deemed this to be a question of great importance, and some nicety of legal construction, and required time for deliberation and consultation.

OLD BAILEY.

WEDNESDAY .- The Sessions were opened by Mr. Justice Bayley, and Mr. Baron Garrow this day.

Henry Williams, a respectable looking man, stood indicted for burglariously entering the dwelling-house of John Bruce, Esq. at Brompton, and steeling therein a considerable quantity of plate, his

It appeared in evidence, that on the 2d April a quantity of plate en stolen from the house of the prosecutor by mean hole made in the panuel of the door of the butler's pantry. On the 4th April the prisoner sold part of the property at the house of Messrs. Merle and Company, refiners in Little Britain. Amongst the property stolen was a curious antique silver ladle, which had been in the family for many years, and Mr. Bruce, wishing to get another similar, applied to Mr. Salter, his silversmith, for that purpose. Mr. Salter mentioned the circumstance to a person of the name of Foligno, who happening to call at the house of Messrs. Merle, purchased a silver ladle, which, on being shewn to Mr. Salter, was immediately recognised as the identical ladle stolen. Shortly after the prisoner called at the house of Messrs. Merle, and information having been given in the interim, he was detained. I appeared that all the property offered by the prisoner to Messrs Merie belonged to Mr. Bruce. l t

Mr. Justice Bayley, in summing up the evidence, stated to the Jury, that it not having been proved that the robbery was committed before day-light, the prisoner should be acquitted of the charge of

The Jury accordingly found him guilty of stealing in a dwellinghouse a sum exceeding 40s.—Death.

Mr. Justice Bayley then called Mr. Alcock, a clerk in the house of Messrs. Merle, and observed that it would be much more bene ficial to the public that plate should not be melted down immediately on receiving it.

Mr. Alcock replied, that having known the prisoner for twelve months, they thought he was a regular dealer.

John Saxton and William Radding were indicted for burglariously breaking and entering the dwelling-house of Mr. John Barlow, victualler, of the Two Brewers in Goswell-street, on the night of the 25th of March, and stealing therein Elank-notes and silver to the amount of 3251. The trial occupied the Court nearly four hours; but none of the property being found on the prisoners; and the Jury, not considering the evidence strong enough to convict them, after retiring for about twenty minutes, acquitted them both.

THURSDAY.—Joseph Blakeney was indicted for assaulting
Joseph Foote on the King's highway, and stealing from his person a gold chain and seal, value 51.

Joseph Foote stated, that on the 5th of May, he was passing through Brick lane, in company with his wife, when the prisoner, who pretended to be intoxicated, ran violently against him, snatched at his watch, and succeeded in detaching the chain and seals; witness collared the prisoner; a struggle ensued; when he was instantly surrounded by several of prisoner's companions, and at the same moment received a violent blow on the back of his bead, which felled him to the ground, and the prisoner escaped. A few days afterwards, the prisoner was observed talking with a female in Spitalfields, when he was taken into custody. The Jury found him Guilte.

Mr. Baron Garrow addressed the prisoner, who he said had been onvicted on the clearest evidence of being one of a desperate gang of thieves, and earnestly desired him to employ the allotted in preparation for the awful fate that awaited him, as no mercy could be extended to him here.

eph Lilly, a lad 15 years of age, was capitally convicted of stealling in the dwelling-house of Hannah Hawkshaw, two silver spoons, three silver forks, &c. her property.

David Adams was indicted for stealing in the dwelling-hou of Sir Alexander Crook, 451. in Bank notes, his property.-Net Guilty.

John Smith stood capitally indicted of having stopped and robbed Philip Jones, on the King's highway. Philip Jones, a tailor, deposed, that on the night of the day mentioned in the indictment, he was walking at the corner of Parker-street, in Drury-lane, when he was struck by the prisoner on the back of the neck, and that he afterwards trippe! up his heels. He instantly cried, "Stop thief," and called the watchman. A handkerchief containing a new coat and some silk was taken from him. The prisoner set up in his defence, that Jones was in a state of intoxication when he came to the watch-house. But he called no witness to support the accusation.

After a few moments consideration, the Jury found the prisoner Not Guilty.

Bryan M'Phelan and Bridget M'Lachlan were put to the bar, on an in lictment, charging them with violently assaulting and taking from the person of James Hogarth, 11. 14s. in silver, a 51. and six

Both prisoners, (one of whom, the male, was so lame, as to be carried into Court on the back of a man,) denied all knowledge of the transaction, and the case was sent to the Jury, when several Gentlemen unexpectedly rose and gave the female an excellent character for industry; describing her to have carried for eight or nine years very heavy loads of hearth stones, which she dealt in.

The Jury consulted for a short time, and then found both prisoners Not Guilty.

FRIDAY.—Mr. G. Patmore was then put to the bar, and tried for the murder of John Scott, on the 16th of February, in the Parish of St. Pancras, in a Duel.

Mr. Walford detailed all the circumstances of the case, with which our readers are already acquainted, assured them that the duty which had devolved upon him would upon any occasion have been extremely painful, but more particularly so when he had to discharge it by charging with the crime of murder one whose whole previous character and conduct had been above censure. On the last trial, the Learned Judge who had presided was of opinion, that as Mr. Christie had not returned the first fire of his adversary, there was reason to conclude, that the irritation caused by the firing of his adversary's second pistol urged Mr. C. to tire that shot which had deprived Mr. Scott of life. If the Learned Judge on this trial should be of a similar opinion, the prisoner could not be found guilty of murder.

The first witness called was Mr. Pettigrew.

Mr. Justice Bayley.—Mr. Pertigrew, I think it necessary to give you this caution, if you think the evidence, which you are about to give, likely to expose you to a criminal prosecution, you are not bound to give it.

Mr. Pettigrew .- My Lord, I am not competent to form any opinion of my legal guilt; I have not taken the part of principal or second. The part which I have taken was merely to exercise my professional duty; and in that, I do not think there is any more

Mr. Justice Bayley .- If you went (knowing a duel was to take place) for the purpose of giving surgical assistance, I apprehend that you are liable to a criminal prosecution.

Mr. Pettigrew .- Then, my Lord, I must decline answering any

Mr. Justice Bayley.—I recollect having seen a surgeon of eminence tried in this Court on a similar occasion.

Mr. Baron Gurrow.—I was myself Counsel in a similar case; believe in the case alluded to by my Learned Brother.

Mr. Wm. Bevil Morris, a pupil of Mr. Petfigrew was called, and declined giving evidence for a similar reason. George Darley is a physician, and lives in Brunswick-square attended Mr. Scott, who died in consequence of a bullet wound in the right groin; heard Mr. Scott say, on his death b Mr. Justice Bayley .- Did Mr. Scott think himself at that time in danger Mr. Darley .- Yes, he did.

Mr. Justice Bayley.—Did he give up all hopes of recovery?
Mr. Darley.—No; to the last he entertained hopes of recovery.
Mr. Justice Bayley.—The declaration made by a dying man as evidence, unless the party making it were satisfied that recovery was impossible.

Hugh Watson keeps the Chalk Farm Taven. On the evening of the 16th of February recollects two gentlemen, whom he does not remained there upwards of know, having come to his house and twenty minutes; in about an bour afterwards, on bearing of the accident, sent men to give assistance, and the deceased brought to the tavern, accompanied by the prisoner, who remained there three or four hours, and who continually visited Mr. Scott until his death.

Thomas Smith, a carpenter, proved that he assisted the ostler in bringing Mr. Scott to the tavern; saw the prisoner in the field where Mr. Scott lay; there were four or five persons about twelve yards distant from Mr. Scott, whom witness saw again on the next day; did not hear the gentlemen in the field say any thing in the hearing of prisoner.

Mr. Justice Bayley, in summing up, said there was no evidence to show that the prisoner had a hand in the death of Mr. Scott, nor any evidence to show how the death of Mr. Scott had been effected.

The Jury, without besitation, delivered a verdict of Not Guilty. Mr. Justice Bayley said, he thought it necessary to declare, that the law held not only the principals and seconds in a duel guilty of murder, but all persons witnessing the duel, having previously expested it to take place.

Mr. Patmore then bowed to the Jury, and left the Court with his friends.

SATURDAY .- Herne Bay Smugglers .- This morning the Court was filled at rather an early hour, when Mr. Justice Bailey and Mr. Baron Garrow took their seats upon the Bench, but the first trial was of no interest to the public.

About half after twelve o'clock, Joseph West, William Beere, John Richardson, Thomas Richardson, William Williams, and Thomas Webster, were capitally indicted for having, with others, unlawfully assembled with Are-arms on the 24th of April last, and assisting in landing prohibited goods in Herne Bay, in the county of Kent. There was a second count, which charged the prisoners with the wilful murder of Sydenham Snow, a Midshipman in the reventive Service, then on board his Majesty's Frigate the Severa, whilst off Herne Bay, in the aforesaid county.

The case for the prosecution was stated by the Attorney-General at considerable length, when witnesses were called in support of it.

The first witness examined was David North. Witness was quarter-master in the Severa frigate, and deposed that they were sta-tioned at Herne Bay in the month of April, and were called out on the 23d of that month at midnight. They were under the command of Mr. Sydenham Snow. About a quarter before three o'clock on the morning of the 24th April they perceived Mr. How, About a quarter before three and soon after heard a pistol or a musket shot, and then a volley of musketry, in the direction where Mr. Snow was standing. The next heard repeated cries of "Kill every b--r that is on the beach." Witness then retreated up the bank till some of the party came to his assistance. He discharged a pistol after he had been fired at. Witness saw their men approach in all directions; but could not distinguish one man from another.

James Smith was next called. He was apprehended about eight days after the transaction. He was told that three tubs would fall to his share in the event of success; witness consented like the rest in it. Nine days afterwards he saw T. Richardson in a wood, where he (witness) was at work; he went to the sea side that night, but nothing was done. On Easter Monday he went, of his own accord, to Grove Ferry, where he saw Richardson; all the prisoners had fire-arms, except Webster; they had large pistols. Witness was supplied with 12 cartridges. There were about 16 of the purty; 12 of them were sent first across the fields; and there were three carts and horses to carry away the goods. At the commencement of the transaction witness heard firing, but could not say which party fired first. Witness fired, but did not aim at any body; he seized some barrels of brandy, and three of Hollands.—In his cross-examination he said be merely fired his pistol to alarm and frighten the blockend party, but Griffiths might have fired without witness knowing it. He kept a hovel in the wood, where he frequently had fire-arms and spirits. He never promised a man, named Shaw, 101 to join their paris. He never heard Griffiths brng of shooting Mr. Snow.

Mr. Eups, and his son, together with several other witnesses, were then examined as to the minor points of the evidence.

Mr. Danowny, a surgeon, of Herne Bay, was called to attend Mr. Snow. He found him with a wound in his thigh and another in his shoulder, besides other wounds. He found they were mortal. Lieut. Snow told him, as he was on duty at the coast of Herne Bay, he directed three of his men to keep a good look out on a bont in the offing. As he was going into the watch-house he was attacked by a party of armed people. He immediately attempted to fire his pistols, but they anapped. Whilst drawing his sword he received a wound in his thigh from a pistol-ball; he afterwards received another in his shoulder. Mr. Snow was conscious he could not live at the time he made this declaration.

J. Smith and Salmon, the officers, proved the apprehension of the

The prisoners, and finding fire-arms in their premises.

The prisoners were then separately called on for their defence.

West then proceeded—"My Lords, I am innocent of the crime with which I am charged. I do not deny that I crossed Grove Ferry, and went into Epps's house, and that I met Griffiths; but knowing him to be a bad man, I did not wish to have any thing so do with him and I crossed the form as being two miles never the second second the form as being two miles. to do with him, and I crossed the ferry as being two miles nearer to my bome." Beere, the two Richardsons, and Williams, then respectively made protestations of their innocence. Webster put in a written decument, stating his innocence, and endeavouring to prove an alibì.

He was supported by a person named Shaw, who deposed, that Griffiths had offered him 101, to shoot Mr. Crook, the Excise-officer. It was the opinion of this deponent that Griffiths was not a man to be believed on his oath.

Witnesses were now called to the characters of the prisoners, who were examined by Sir James Dowling.
The first witness was Peter Duthroit, a farmer. He deposed he had known Beere for upwards of nice years, and West several years; and that he also knew Williams. They bore the general character of good men; but he admitted he had heard of their having been engaged in sanuggling transactions. The witness would not believe Griffiths on his oath, because of his general bad charucter.

William Machin, another farmer, had known the prisoner West from a child, who had borne a good character for 20 years; he knew the prisoner Beere for five or six years; was a steady, hones man; he also knew the prisoner Williams as an honest and humane

Daniel Bushell, also a farmer, gave West, Beere, and Williams good characters for honesty and humanity.

John Tucker, a shoc-maker, bore testimony to the good character of West and Beere.

John Collard hore testimony of the good characters of the two Richardsons and Beere. Thomas Cooper, a farmer near Canterbury, spoke to the characters of West and Beere; the lutter of whom he described as bearing an excellent character. Several other witnesses gave prisoners good characters.

Here the evidence for the prisoners was closed, when Mr. Justice Bailey found it necessary to retire for a few minutes from the

Mr. Justice Bailey at length summed up the evidence, pointing out to the Jury the effect of testimony to character as it respected the prisoners, where conviction could not be brought home. He expressed his confidence, at the same time, that no evidence as to expressed his confidence, at the same time, that he is not be therefore would do away the conviction as to guilt; and left the case entirely to the conscientions consideration of the Jury, who, he was persuaded, would do their duty to their country and the prisoners At a quarter past nine o'clock the Jury retired to consult together; and at half past nine o'clock they returned a verdict of-Not Guilty.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

ILCHESTER.—The Commissioners appointed by Government to inquire into the conduct of the Keeper of Ilchester Gaol, sit daily, Sundays excepted, from nine o'clock in the morning until one, when they adjourn for about an bour, and continue the investigation till seven o'clock in the evening.

LINCOLN.—A few days since the wife of a labourer, named Crowther, had her pocket picked of a pocket-book, containing 551. the amount of their savings; 501. of which she was going to deposit in the Bank.—The same day a gentleman's housekeeper in the neighbourhood had also her pocket picked of about 51. in the same

PRESTON.—On the 30th ult. as Thomas Wilson, Esq. of this town, banker, was returning on horseback, from a country ride, he was seized by apoplexy: he dismounted, seated himself on the road side, was observed by two persons in passing to place his hand on his forehead, but when they got to him he was dead.

SHREWSBURY .- A dreadful accident occurred at an early hour on Tuesday morning (soon after midnight), a part of the southern gable wall of the Theatre in this town gave way, and fulling on the roof of an adjoining house, forced a part of it, together with a portion of three room-floors, and all that intersemed, down to the kitchen floor, rather below the level of the street. A poor labouring man, named Edward Davies, with his wife, and two children (one a boy about seven years old, the other an infant at the breast,) slept together in a hod in the garret, immediately under the dislocated mass, which fell upon, and forced them, together with a quantity of stones, timber, the bed, &c. down to the kitchen, where they were huried in the accumulated heap of fallen materials. Four other children of the same poor man lay in a bed in another part of the room, and providentially were undurt. In the next room underpeath, the chief tenant of the house, John Jones, milknun, with his wife, and a young woman their niece, occupied two beds; the young woman received some serious, though, we hope, not dangerous, cuts and contusions. Jones and his wife, on being roused by the breaking of the floors, &c. got out of bed, and with difficulty escaped; Jones at first clung to a rafter, and his wife clasped him round the body, finally they fell down upon the rubbish, and received no material injury. In the lower room slept a lodger named Hant, and his wife, and their bod being also out of the line taken by the rums, they providentially were not burt.— The timber, stones, doc. were removed as promptly as a due precaution to prevent additional injury accruing to the unfortunate persons beneath would permit, and near two hours had clapsed before they could be taken out. Edward Davies was found bruised and otherwise injured in a most shocking manner, and was a corpse before taken from the ruins; the hody of his wife, Blianbeth Davies, was dreadfully injured, and as her remains were quite cold when taken up, it is presumed she must have died at the instant of the fall; Thomas Davies, their son, opened his eyes when taken from the rubbish, but died immediately; the infant was miraculously saved, having fallen with its unfortunate relatives through three stories of the house, it was found, nearly unbart, clinging to, and almost under, its hapless mother, with scarcely a single scratch, two spars having met over it, and protected it from the falling SLEAFORD.—A few days ago, a singular discovery was made by the workmen of Mr. John Payne, cabinet-maker, in this town; whilst they were cutting up a log of mahogany, they found in the middle of the log a fine cocon nut, having in it a sound and perfect kernel.

WARRHAM .- Last week, as two men were cutting timber at Woodstead, near this town, the ground, a circumference of 20 feet, suddenly sunk under one of them, to the depth of about 50 feet. The men, by catching hold of the root of a tree, were fortunately saved. The wood had been standing thirty years, and is supposed to have been undermined in forming a smuggler's cave.

Windson.—Monday being the 4th of June, his late Majesty's birth-day, the young Gentlemen of Eton College kept it as usual by going on the water, in fancy boats, to Surley Hall, where they partook of supper at their usual place. The Royal Horse Guards' Band attended them, and played several fine Pieces. The boats that they went in, consisted of eight and ten ours each. The sight was very gratifying; the young Gentlemen were all dressed different, in elegant fancy dresses, with colours flying in the bonts. They returned about half past eight o'clock, when fireworks com-menced from the Height to the left of Windsor Bridge, where there were variegated lamps, in very fine style, with G. R. and the Crown in the middle.

YORK.—The following is a melancholy instance of the uncertainty of human life:—Tuesday seenight, Miss Mills, of Ripley, was given in marriage, by Sir William Ingilby, Bart. High Sheriff of the county, to Mr. Houseman, a man worthy of her choice. The same day she attended our Races, and the dinner to celebrate the nuptial union was prepared for her and her numerous friends, at the Falcon Inn, Micklegate. Previously to such celebration, she drank a glass of cold water, retired from the festive circle, became convulsed in the night of Welnesday, and on Thursday evening died.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

A man who lately lodged in Stewart's Rents, Drury-lane, is in custody on a charge of having set fire to his apartments, and attempted to murder his wife.

DREADFUL OCCURRENCE.—On Thursday afternoon, after the departure of Mr. Alderman Smith from the Town Hall, Southwark, a person, almost breathless, ran into the Justice-room, to request the assistance of some officers in Blackfriars-road, where an enraged mob were pulling a house down. Reeves, the murshalman, and George Welfare, one of the constables, accompanied this individual to the key to be beginning which turned out to be a beetled. and elerge weart, one of the constances, accompanied this in-dividual to the house in question, which turned out to be a brothel, when they found a crowd of several hundred persons, breaking the windows and endeavouring to force open the door. The officers inquired the cause of the disturbance, and were informed that a gentleman had been entired into the house, and, there was great reason to believe, had been robbed and murdered, as he had been seen at the window with his throat cut across, and struggling with two other men, one of whom held the razor, with which it was supposed they had inflicted the wound. The officers, on receiving this alarming intelligence, knocked at the door, which was soon opened by a female, who what in tears; and her version of the story was, that a gentleman had cut his own throat in consequence of having lost all his money at play. She conducted them into a room up stairs, where they found a young man, of gentlemanly appearance, stretched upon the sofa, with an extensive wound in his appearance, stretched upon the sort, with an extensive would in sneck; two men and some females surrounded him, and were endeavouring to staunch the blood. The constables sent a messenger for a surgeon, but, under all the circumstances, refused to let any of the people in the house leave it, lest it should turn out that violence had been exercised towards the gentleman, and some of them might be implicated in his murder; they therefore got a person in the crowd to fetch a neighbouring surgeon, who attended promptly, and whose exertions soon restored animation. As soon as the young man could speak, the officers questioned him, and in a faint tonfrequently interrupted by weakness, he gave the following account of himself :- His name he said was -. and about a week or ten days ago he came to that house (where they found him) in company with a young woman, of whom he was very fond; he had a considerable sum of money in his possession, but he was soon persunded to gamble, and in a few days his fortune passed into other hands; and the lady with whom he came to the house, finding his money was gone, abandoned him, and began to lavish her favours on another man. This so curaged him that in a fit of despair be seized a razor, and before any one could prevent him, he cut his throat; he was going to repeat the blow when the two men, who were present, seized the weapon, and wrenched it from his grasp. He next rushed to the window, with a view of precipitating himself into the street; but here he was again defeated, and the persons in the street seeing him wounded and bleeding thought the two men were assassinating him. By the advice of the medical gentleman, a coach was sent for, and he was conveyed to the hospital, where he still lies in a dangerous situation. His friends are said to be highly respectable.

TRLING'S LACE (of the real Point and Brussels fabric), 174, Strand, near Somerset House, removed from 392, Strand.—G. F. URLING and CO. beg to inform the Pashlonahle World, they have prepared for the Season a variousand extensive Assortment of their PATENT LACE DRESSES, from Pour Onliness to 100 Guineas each; some dwhich, from recent improvements, they humbly presume to compare with the most perfect foreign productions. Also a great variety of Veils, Searfs, Squarce, Laces, Nets, &c. of every description. This peculiarly clear and transparent Article having, in the higher civales, superseded the use of oursemen Lace, which becomes rangh and ful of fibre on the first waching, the Patentees respectfully apprise the Public, that the latter is frequently starched to conceal its defects, and make it resemble Urling's Lace, which becomes, can only be relied upon as genuine at their Wholesale and Ectablishment in London, or of the Conviry Dealers supplied by them.—
Every Article is distinguished by a Seal, with the Patentee's Initials. "G. F. U. and Co." and the words, "by the (late) Queen's authority." Specimens, shewing the superlevity of Urling's Lace over common Lace, may be seen in Ackermanu's Apopol orcy, La Belle Assemblee, and other fashionable works, and may be had gratis, by application, post-path, to G. F. Urling & Co.

PATENT ECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMP. This Invention embraces every requisite to render it a domestic confort in the mane general use of Lamps instead of Canlles, giving to the Public the choice of an improved light, in which there is perfect safety, at half the expense of Canlles. The Chamber or Night Light being universally interesting to all families, and particularly to many professions, may be heat appreciated by a fair comparison with others, which are most resorted to, viz, the Rush Light, an old secrent, but it must be allowed, a drawsy one, and totally unfit for notion. The wax-wick, stuck upon oork, floating in oil upon water, of more modern date, but must be stationary, subject to the cork catching fire, branking the glass it floats in, sansing a sufforating smell, consuming much oil, and a constant expense for the wicks. The Patent Economical Chamber Lamp; no expense but for oil, and that only at the rate of a halfpenny for eight or nine hours, giving a brilliant light, always ready at the moment it is wanted hearing any motion, and can be regulated to burn the longest or shearing nin japan stands, and 20% in larey bronze and Imperial metal. The same principle applies, with peculiar advantage, to the larger Lamps, for the dining table and sideboard, upon a handsome scale, suited to the affluent, with elegant pedestals, 55s. to 65s.; and for the study, to write or read by (siname bra) they are every thing that can be wished, at 33s. these are universally approved and patronised by Clerical and other Prefessional Gentlemen in every part of the kingdom, and for all minor uses they are every thing that can be wished, at 33s. to 45s. and upon a smaller scale. 25s. to 33s. these are universally approved and patronised by Clerical and other Prefessional Gentlemen in every part of the kingdom, and for all minor uses they are every thing that can be wished, at 33s. to 45s. and upon a smaller scale. 25s. they are c

MR. FLINDELL OF EXETER, BDITOR OF THE WESTERN LUMINARY,
Fas sentenced in the Court of King's Bench, on the 28th ult. to eight Months' Imprisonment, for a Libel on the Queen; and further, to give Security, kinself in 500l. and two sufficient Survices in 250l. each for his gwid behaviour for three Yours from the Period of his Confine-Ais good behaviour for three Years from the Period of his Confisement.

This veteran Editor, who has, for a long series of years, realisately and uniformly defended the cause of Church and State, under many discouragements, proved, in his late Defence before the Judges, that his Libel was bottoned on the previously published Report of the Lords' Committee, and made almost necessary to repel the imputation altempted to be fixed in the public mind on the highest Personage in the kingdom, through the medium of Her Majesty's declaration to her Westminster addressers, that the public Trial then about to take place was the fruit of "a mefaricus couspiracy against her honour and her life."—Yet Mr. Flindell closed his Spefence declaring himself "sorry he had used the words his Jury had pronounced a Libel; sorry, because it was a breach of the laws of his country, if my punishment (he added) be necessary to the justice or policy of my country—he it so—I will bear it with such resignation as God may bless me with; but have mercy, my Lords, on my unoffending family."

Which a wife and twelve children, of whom nine are dependent on him "for protection and bread," he is now, at an advanced age, and in deciding bealth, undergoing the punishment assigned him in the Devon County Gool.

A few Friends, who think his long services have established a strong claim on the public consideration, formed themselves into a Committee, and set on foot a Subscription to defray the Expenses of his Trial, and semewhat compensate his sufferinges; and finding that many most respectable individuals of various ranks in life, have, without approving the Libel, construed their judgment by handsome contributions, the Committee now feel themselves called upon to lay the merits of Mr. Flindell's case thus briefly before the Public at large.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

WEDNESDAY.

The House went into a Committee on the Irish Law Courts Bill. in which a long discussion ensued on the different clauses. bringing up the Report,

The Earl of Donoughmore moved, as an a Report should be received on that day six months, to enable him to enter his protest against the Bill.

The Amendment was negatived, and the Report received, and the Bill passed.

The Earl of Limerick presented a Petition from the Proprietors of Wharfs on the north side of the river Thames in favour of the London Wharfs Bill.

Counsel was afterwards heard in support of the Bill. To proceed again on Tuesday

The Earl of Darnley postponed his motion relative to the Navy

The Irish Nisi Prius Regulation Bill was passed .-- Adjourned. THURSDAY.

In a Committee of Privileges Mr. Serjeant Blossett was heard at considerable length on behalf of the claim of the brother of the deceased Earl of Strathmore to the Strathmore Peerage .- Further hearing on Tuesday next.

Lord King moved the Order of the Day for hearing the petition of the Rev. Henry William Neville, Clerk. The petition set forth that the petitioner was Rector of Blathwhite, or Blackwith, and had also the curacy of Scotsmoor. He had nominated the Rev. Mr. Green as his Curate, who had signed the 39 Articles of the Established Church, and offered to sign them again; but this offer would not satisfy his Diocesan (the Bishop of Peterborough), who put to the proposed Curate no less than 87 questions of his own framing, and would not consent to ordain or admit such clergymen as happened not to appreciate them. The petitioner then appealed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, from whom, after some time, he received an answer to his application, which decided that the rights of examination and institution both appertained to the Bishop of the Diocese where the complaint lay. The Noble Lord admitted that he was unacquainted with the Canon Law, and was fearful of proceeding, because the Petition affected the spiritual conduct of a Right Reverend Prelate. It involved, however, the rights of the Rectors of the Church of England as a distinct class. He was aware, here, that it would be contended on the other side that the Diocesan had in all cases the discretionary power of admitting or rejecting such claims; and be would admit the difficulty of defining the precise limits of the power so derived from the Canon Law, in distinction from the Civil Law; as the 39th and 40th Articles of the former gave the power of institution to the Bishop, and left the remedy for his refusal to the Common Law. He could agree to the right of examination as possessed by the Right Reverend Bench; but he would ask any man, having read the 57 series of questions propounded to the Clergy by the Bishop of Peterborough, if they were bona fide meant to ascertain the ability of the candidate?—
The Noble Lead observed that to disturb the reverse of the Church The Noble Lord observed, that to disturb the repose of the Church was the greatest of mischiefs in the present day, when religion was in danger; and be had hoped that the Right Rev. Preinte, who was the greatest controversialist of his age, knew better than to attempt to force another standard of opinions on the Clergy. He should conclude with moving that the petition be now read.

The Bishop of Peterborough in answer to the allegations of the Petitioner, wished their Lordships to observe, that he had stopped short at a given point; he had dwelt upon the non-acceptance of the curate first nominated by him, but he omitted to mention that on the 20th of September, 1820, he nominated another, who agreed to the questions then submitted to him, and no complaint had been sade either by the parishioners or by the curate then licensed. They might, perhaps, judge his surprise when, after this affair, he as informed by the Petitioner of his intention to bring the subject "Measurement by the retailment of his intention to bring the subject "Mebefore the Legislature. The petitioner had been apprised that the "regular way for proceeding was, if he was dissatisfied with the conduct of his Diocesan, to appeal to the Archbishop of the Prevince which he actually did, and abided by the result at the time; and this alone, he conceived, had barred all appear to the House; but five himself he wished to take no advantage of this. The grounds of complaint were totally new in the present case, and the objection nov made was against his mode of examining. That method was a co. mon one; he put to the candidate such questions as were likely to ascertain the religious opinions he held before he ordained or licens d him. Whether these questions were rather in some cases too s. arching or not, the nature of the Petition might enable their Lords tips to conclude. The questions were questions of upmixed and pure theology, and not questions of law, and the expedien of propriety of such questions had never, he believed, been agitat. In their Lordships' House, According to the Church Establishmen, the 16th Article of the Canon Law left the power of examination entirely to the Bishop, and neither House of Parliament could alter it. He was required to demand a sound doctrine;" such doctrine was necessary to the diocese he himself held, to correct some opinions which had latterly sprung up, and he believed in his conscience that he had exercised the discretion he possessed for the benefit of the Church. Surely, then, so long as there existed (hose forty-eight Canons of the Established Church, originating in the two Houses of Convocation and sanctioned by Parliament, their Lordships would not prevent the Bishop's right of examining the candidates for orders or offices? Yet this Petition would interfere in the examinations for Holy Orders, a thing never known before to the House; and therefore, a fortiori, the prayer could not be granted without violating the constitution of the Established Church.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in reference to some observa tions on the appeal made to his Grace, said, that the answer which he had returned to the letter was gratuitous, and had been to the effect that the Bishop could not admit a curate without examination, and he had particularly referred to the 48th canon.

Lord Calthorpe thought the course pursued by the Right Rev. Prelate would have the effect of weakening that unvaried and unvarying standard of faith which had hitherto preserved the established faith.

The Earl of Harrowby did not see any necessity for laying the Petition on the table. He wished that Calvinists were not excluded from the Church of England.

Earl Grey contended that the House had a jurisdiction in the present case. With respect to Calvinists, if it was right to exclude them, that should be done by a full convocation. The eightyseven questions had that tendency.

Bishop of Peterborough denied that he had any intention of excluding Calvinists by his examination.

The Marquis of Lansdowne admitted that it was material that the right of examination should be vested in the hands of the Bishops; yet he thought, that by that fallibility to which all were subject, the exercise of it might be instrumental in straining from their direct and literal meaning the Articles of the Church of England. His Lordship referred to the opinion of Bishop Burnel from which he read liberal extracts to the House.

The Lord Chancellor then put the question, that the petition should be received, when it was negatived without a division.

FRIDAY.

In the Appeal case of the Marquis of Cholmondeley v. Lord Clinton, the judgment of the Court below in favour of Lord Clinton, was affirmed.

The Royal Assent was brought down by the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Earl Bathurst, as His Majesty's Commissioners, to the following Bills:—The Crown Lands Revenue Improvement Bill, the Irish Law Courts Fees Regulation Bill, the Irish Nisi Prius Bill, the Irish Rate of Interest Bill, and several Private Bills.

The Irish Elections Expenses Rill was passed, and returned to the Commons.

The Marquis of Lansdowne gave notice, that on Wednesday next he should move an Address to the Crown on the subject of the Foreign Slave Trade, and that on Thursday next he should move the second reading of the Bills for mitigating the punishment in cases of robbery on navigable rivers, and stealing in private houses. — Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. WEDNESDAY.

Mr. Hutchinson postponed his motion upon the state of Europe until the 21st instant, on account of the indisposition and absence of the Noble Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; to which day the motion of Mr. S. Wordey for the production of the circular dis-patch issued by the Allied Sovereigns at Laybach was postponed. Petitions from Stockport, Leeds, Huddersfield, and St. George the Martyr, Southwark, against the Poor Laws Amendment Bill, were laid on the table.

Mr. Custois presented a Petition in favour of the Bill from the Select Vestry of the parish of Burwash in Sussex.

A Bill for permitting, for a time to be limited, the transfer of certain Stock or Funds in Ireland into the English Funds was read a first time.

The Bill for regulating Stamp Duties in Ireland was read a first time, as was one for raising a loan of 13,000,000l. on the Sinking Fund, and one for renewing the issue of 29,000,000l. of Exchequer Bills; one for raising a certain sum by Lottery, and one for raising 1,000,000l. by Irish Treasury Bills.

On the third reading of the Woollen Cloth Stamping Regulation

Bill.

Mr. Baring observed, that this Bill also contained a provision for permitting the exportation of sheep. Why was such a provision introduced into a Bill of this nature? It had created considerable alarm among persons concerned in the woollen trade, who deemed it of vital consequence to resist such an innovation on the established trade of the country. He should oppose the passing of the Bill.

Dr. Lushington said there was no foundation for the Hon. Member's alarm. The Bill was, in fact, intended to repeal the 28th of the late King, and to prevent the export of sheep merely to our colonies. No injury could accrue to the manufacturers from the nature of such an export of wool. It would be absurd to suppose that sheep would be exported to the West Indies or North America for the purpose of being re-exported to Flanders or France, while so many sheep could be conveyed across the Channel in the course of one night.

Sir J. Coffin stated, that if all the long-woolled sheep were sent to the West Indies they would not retain that wool for one year.

Mr. H. Davies was against allowing the exportation, which he considered injurious to the manufacturing interest, as England possessed alone the raw material.

Mr. F. Lewis did not apprehend any injurious consequences could arise from relaxing the old prohibitory system.

Mr. Pearce was against the Bill. He thought our ancestors had acted wisely in prohibiting the exportation as a means of saving the trade of the country. Mr. T. Wilson Was on, without good reason, to pass a law of experiment. Mr. Calcraft could not see the necessity of allowing our sheep to be exported to the colonies, as the colonists might have as many as they required for consumption from America Mr. Ricardo supported the Bill. He did not feel that alarm which some gentlemen expressed.

Mr. Ramsden wished the Bill to be postponed.

Dr. Lushington consented to postpone the debate on the Bill till

On the motion of Mr. Farre, the papers and correspondence relative to the Extra Post were referred to a Select Committee. The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. Curues adverted to two grants, amounting to 4,000l. made to Mr. M'Adam, a gentleman employed in constructing public roads, which be complained had taken place without the knowledge of the House. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, that one of the grants had been recommended by a Committee of that House. It did not appear that the grants were unjustly made.

Mr. Hume contended, that the grants ought to have been reported to the House, and therefore he wished a distinct answer why no report had been made. He asked when the Report of the Committee on the grant to the Duke of Clarence was to be brought up.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer repeated his former declaration. With respect to the Duke of Clarence, the report would be deferred till his Noble Friend, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, was in his place.

In answer to a question from Mr. Hume

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said it was not intended to reduce the number of Commissioners of Excise in Scotland. Lord Milton asked whether the Spoiled Stamps Bill was to be proceeded with this session.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said no inconvenience would arise from not proceeding with the measure this session.

Mr. Baring adverted to the grant to Mr. M'Adam, which he considered a gross misapplication of the public money.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer contended it had been made under the proper sunction. The House then went into the Committee.

The following sums were voted:—

4,000i. for the arrears of Public Buildings for 1821.

26,500l. for the extraorlinary expences of the Lord Chamberlain's department.

The next Resolution was for 75,000!, for the charges on making awards for the capture of Portuguese vessels irregularly made. for trading in staves within certain limits, which grants, after some observations from Mr. Warre, was agreed to.

A sum of 18,7001, to defray the salaries and incidental expences of a commission under the aforesaid slave trenty, was moved.

Mr. Bernal said the trade was carried on in manner than formerly. In the Courts at Cuba, Surinam, Havan-nah, and other place, not a single case had been decided with effect. Spain, notwithstanding the 400,000i. paid to ber, still carried it on with the greatest activity. Spain and Portugal were pouring in slaves to all their colonies from all parts.

Mr. Warrs observed, that Sir George Collier had complained of the atrocities which had been committed at Sierra Leone, in consequence of the neglect of our officers. Sir G. Cockburn vindicated the conduct of the British Officers, whom, he said, frequently seized vesséls under other flags than those of the nation to which they belonged for trading in slaves. Sir J. Coffin thought, after seeing Sir George Collier's Report, that nothing but a declaration of war could put an end to the Slave

After some further observations from Mr. Warre, Mr. Smith, &c. Mr. Arbuthnot said it was his intention to bring in a Bill to give more effect to the system of bounties.

The vote was agreed to.

The following sums, after some trifling conversation, were agreed to:—50001. for defraying the expence of prosecutions relative to the coin of the kingdom; 25,0001. Law Charges; 22,8001. Salaries and Allowances to the Officers of the Houses of Lords and Commons; 90,5021. expences of Convicts at Home; 300 Vaccine Estabashment: 100,000l. Bills drawn from New South Wales.

A sum of 69,4151. was then proposed by Mr. Arbuthnot, to make good the deficiencies of the Fee Funds in the departments of the Treusury, the three Secretaries of State, and the Privy Council.

Mr. Hume wished the Hon. Gent. had laid on the table a detailed Estimate of the expence of these departments. He observed the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Harrison, had a salary of 38001. for examining accounts alone; this was too large a sulary for such an officer. The Establishment of the three Secretaries of State, which cost the country in 1796 only 25,4581. was now swelled to 58,1531.

Mr. Arbuthnot could see no objection to a detail of the several departments. With respect to his own appointment, the public were saved 2000l. a-year, for he (Mr. A.) chose rather to continue in office than take the pension to that amount, to which he was entitled for being employed formerly in a diplomatic capacity. The services of Mr. Harrison were invaluable; his health, however, was declining, and when it became necessary for that Gentleman to retire from public life, it was intended to reduce the salary of the Assistant Secretary.

The Resolution was agreed to.

25,000l. was then voted for Foreign and Secret Service Money; and 25,0001, for the extra expences of the Gold Coinage for 1821.

Mr. Arbuthnot then proposed a vote not exceeding 21,000l. for the expences of printing Acts of Parliament for both Houses of Parliament, &c. At the same time he was aware that objections were made to the great expences of printing. His Majesty's Government was disposed to agree to the appointment of a Committee to examine into the subject.

Mr. Hume was of opinion no department was more open to reduction than this. He instanced the charge for printing the 58th volume of the Journals of this House, viz. 39461. He had seen an estimate, by which it appeared that this volume could have been printed for 12001. or, at the utmost, 15001.

The vote was agreed to. A vote, not exceeding 80001, was agreed to for the American Loyalists; 33601, for Criminal Lunatics; and 50001, for the Refuge for the Destitute Mr. Arbuthnot proposed a vote of 33,5671. to defray the expences of the Public Office in Bow-street; and of the Horse and Foot Patrol attached to that Establishment. After a few words from Mr. Clive and Mr. Bernal, the Resolution was agreed to.

The following sums were then voted:

23,0001. to defray the expences of the Milbank Penitentiary. 24561. for the repairs of Henry the Seventh's Chapel. 15,0001. for the expences of the African Company.

22.4441. for the Civil Establishment of Sierra Leon

In consequence of a question put by Mr. Bernal, Mr. Goulburn explained, that the increased amount of the grant for this island arose out of the necessity of providing better residences in the island for those who were sent out of this country there.

The following sums were then voted: — 17,0811. for the Civil Establishment of New South Wales. 62831. for that of Newfoundland.

35201, for that of Prince Edward's Island. 85751, for that of the province of New Brus

14.2671, for that of Nova Scotia.

11,1071. for that of Upper Canada.

31471. for that of the Island of Bahama.

49011. for supplying the Charges that may arise for this year is rying into execution an Act for the improvement of Westminster. 100,0001. for completing the New Street from Mary-le-bone to Charing-cross.

86,7601. for conveying Passengers to the Cape of Good Hope 10,0001. to be applied to the use of the Commissioners for making Roads and erecting Bridges in the Highlands of Scotland.

Mr. Hobbouse presented a Petition from a man named King, complaining of the conduct of the Constitutional Society in prosecuting him for selling libels. The Hon. Member offered a variety of observations for the consideration of the House, and stated the object of the Petitioner was to find out the Committee who had bired Orton, the boy, to purchase the pumphlet for which he had been prosecuted, and which he (Mr. H.) said was done with a view to entrap the Petitioner.

The Petition was laid on the table.

Lord A. Hamilton presented the Report of the Committee on Scotch Burghs, and complained, that during his absence in Scotland the Report had been prepared without a full examination of witnesses. He complained of the deficiency of the Report, and on its being founded on contracted statements. He moved that the Report be read; afterwards intending to move for the production of Lord Binning thought that neither he nor any Member of the Committee would object to the production of the minutes of the proceedings, although be could not but think that they would be as barmless and as useless a document as had ever been laid before the House. The Noble Lord had arraigned the conduct of the Committee. By what rule would the Noble Lord shew that the Chairman of the Committee ought to be the writer of the Report?

After some observations from Mr. Abercrombie, Sir G. Clark, Sir R. Fergusson, Mr. K. Douglas, Mr. Hume, and Mr. W. Dundas, the report was laid on the table.

Mr. Freemontle brought in a Bill for regulating the supply of water to the metropolis; the object of it being to prevent the exercise of arbitrary and unlimited power, and that the Companies should not be at liberty to cut off the supply when they chose.

The Bill was read a first time, and ordered for a second reading

On the motion of Mr. Hume, the evidence taken before the Committee on the Water Companies was ordered to be laid before

Mr. Curven moved for the repeal of the Agricultural Horse Tex. He could not but regret that the lateness of the session made it imperative on him to bring forward this motion in the absence of the Noble Marquis (Londonderry.) This was a subject most material to the agricultural interests, and stood on a very different ground now from what it stood when he had formerly brought this question before the House. The proceedings of the Committee on this subject proved that the distress of the agriculturists was great beyond precedent; and they had come to a resolution unanimously, that the distress of the country was actually proved. Under these circumstances, it remained for Parliament to consider what was the last wattled of remained for Parliament to consider what was the best method of removing that distress. He was sorry to believe that the present Administration had no feeling of sympathy with the agricultural interests. He hoped, however, that the Right Hon. Gent. opposite would even now think it incumbent upon him to grant this boon to the country—a boon, which, in its present circumstances, would be very acceptable to it. The Agricultural Committee had instructed their Chairman to move for the repeal of this tax; but repeated attempts were made, and wishes expressed, to have this question put off to next session. He for one, could not agree to such a postponement, seeing the necessity which already existed for having some relief extended as soon as possible to the oppressive, since it would be equally just to tax the loom of the weaver as the horse of the farmer. It also subjected the farmer to endless vexations. In this department there were no fewer thin 539,000 surcharges, a stretch of the law that could never have been in the contemplation of the Legislature. A case had lately come to his knowledge which showed the spirit in which these laws were executed:—a poor woman at Berwick had at the back of her cottage a fruit tree, which was at once a source of pleasure and of profit to her: it wanted pruning, and she employed for that purpose a gardener, to whom she paid sixpence for the job. The consequence was, that she was taxed as employing an occasional gar-dener, and, in order to make up the assessment, part of the little furniture of her House was sold. This showed the spirit in which the laws were enforced, and the extent to which they increased the miseries of the country. One of the great causes of the sufferings of the country at this moment was the want of employment. He was decidedly hostile to any system which would allow the importation of corn; he believed the people now began to see that cheap brend without employment was not so desirable a thing as might at the first blush be supposed. If the House wished to show that it was anxious to afford any relief to the distress of the countries and the supposed. try, here was an opportunity offered for doing so, and the only opportunity it would have this session. He concluded with moving for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal so much of the 43d and 52d of Geo. III. as related to the duty on agricultural horses.

Mr. Gosch said, that as Chairman of the Agricultural Com-mittee, he would second the motion, and, at the same time, say that he had been instructed by the Committee, on a former day, to come down to the House to move for a repeal of the Tax in question, but that, in the mean time, the Committee had changed their mind. He confirmed the statements of the Hon. Member who preceded him, and expressed his opinion, that since the means of Government were not equal to their expanditure, they ought to cut down their establishmens, so as to square with the resources which they had at their command.

cordially concurred in opinion with th Mover, and hoped the Tax would be repealed.

prove of very little injury to the revenue.

Mr. Gipps observed, that if the Agricultural Horse Tax were taken off it would be a great boon to the farmer, whilst it would

Mr. Buring said, that having done his best to press the Ministers to retrenchment, without success, he felt it to be his duty (the judgment of the House having fixed upon a certain extent of expenditure) not to vote for weakening their resources. He felt astonished conduct of those, who, after having voted for every extravagant grant that Ministers required of the House, would now seek to take away a part of the resources which were in contemplation at the time of these extravagant grants, because the removal of it would be advantageous to themselves. He (Mr. B.) conceived, that the first duty of the House was to take care of the means of providing for the wants of the State; and, although he felt, as strongly as any man, the distress of the agricultural body, yet he was sure that the country would scout the opinions of those, who would first vote for the most extravagant scale of expenditure, and would offer no other remedy for the distractes of the country than to injure the property of those, by whose assistance they and their principles were supported for so long a time. He denied that this motion came with the authority of the Agricultural Committee. He opnosed the motion.

Mr. Benett (Wiltsbire) supported the motion, not because the tra was so triffing as that the Government could easily dispense with it, but because the principle of it was impolitic. The tax was object tionable because it was a duty on an implement of husbandry. He would ask those who were anxious to have cheap bread, was it likely that the farmer could sell his corn at a cheap rate when the cost of production was high?

Mr. W. Burrell considered the tax now sought to be repealed as most unjust one, if for no other reason than that it operated so unequally on the farmer. Was it not an unjust tax which operated with the same pressure upon the proprietor of 200 acres of land worth only 2001, and the owner of 200 acres worth 6001. He would beg the House to recollect that the proprietors of grazing farms, such as Romney Marsh, were totally exempt from this tax, as also were all the nonunningue districts. were all the mountainous districts.

Lord Milton exhorted the House to make this motion the begin ning of a series of measures for economy; for as in the case of the Property Tax, Ministers would never retrench, unless the power of expenditure were taken out of their hands. He gave notice, that if this motion were carried, and the Bill went to a second reading, he would propose an instruction to the Committee to insert a clause repealing the Wool Tax.

The Chancellor of the Exchanger begged the House to recollect, that this was only the beginning of a series of assaults on the finances of the country, the extent of which was to be measured by the opinion of each of the individuals who had a hostility to some particular tax. If, this system of attack would prove successful, it would be impossible for any Government to go on. He explained the embarra-sment which the loss of a tax that was estimated at 500,0001. a-year should occasion to the country. He said that Go vernment had carried economy to the utmost extent possible, and if it was imagined that the reduction of this tax would constrain then to any further measures of economy, he could answer for it that the design was wholly unnecessary. He begged the House to observe also, that in considering the pressure of this tax upon the farmer they should recollect that his other expended had been considerably lessened. Ministers had the greatest wish to relieve the agricultural interest—the causes of that discress were beyond the control of Their acquiescence in granting a Committee was a proof any one. of their disposition to relieve the agricultural distress. He moved the previous question.

Mr. Scarlett said that the finances of the country would be improved by the repeal of the present tax, and that the increase of taxes did not tend to increase the Revenue. The proper application of the Sinking Fund was not in keeping up the price of stock and funds, but in the repealing of the taxes, and remitting a portion of them to the people; and it was on that ground he would vote for the motion. He hoped that Hou. Members would persist in com-petiting Ministers to adopt a system of economy. The best mode of supporting the credit of the country was by retrenching unnecessary expenditure; and Hon. Members should never forget the maxim, Magnum rectiful est parsimonia. He hoped that would not be lost sight of.

Mr. Huskisson said that the argument of his Right Hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, was misunderstood. His Right Hon. Friend had stated that if every particular tax pointed out by every Hon. Gentleman, and suitable to the views of every Hon. Gentleman's constituents, was to be repealed, it would be impossible to administer the finances of the country, and carry on the machine of government. He (Mr. H.) was well aware of the difficulties under which the agriculturists laboured; and if the repeal of the present tax could effect the removal of those difficulties, he would himself vote for it. The subject came under the consideration of the Agricultural Committee, and not one had proposed the repeal of that particular tax. And of the 112 petitions which were presented to the House on the agricultural distresses of the country, only one prayed the repeal of that tax. The Right Hon. Gentleman then contraded that the prosperity of the country was not retarded by the first and that takes. by taxation, and that other countries, where there was not one-tenth so much taxes, were more distressed. The Agricultural Committee, he believed, would not recommend the repeal of the present tax, and Hon. Members ought to wait till next Session, when they might give the subject more mature consideration. The taxes, for the present year, were already assessed, and it would be April next before the assessment for that year would be made.

Sir J. Newport supported the motion.

Sir C. Burrell adverted to the hardship which this Tax imposed upon farmers, who might have had four or five small farms on their hands, which tenants had thrown up to them. Having so large a farm as these united would be, the farmer would, in that case, be subject to the greater ratio instead of the less. He entreated the House to take this matter into their hands, as the landlords had shewn so great an indifference to the interests of their tenants. Mr. Calcraft supported the motion.

Mr. Maberley recommended economy, and condemned the use which had been made of the Sinking Furd.

The Speaker took the Chair at half-past three, and shortly afterwards was summoned to attend the Lords, to hear the Royal Assent given by Commission to certain Bills (for which see Lords.)

Mr. F. Buxton gave notice that If the Paving Acts of the Me olis were not taken into consideration this Session, be call the attention of the House to them.

Mr. Curuen moved the Order of the Day for the Second Reading of the Agricultural Horse Tax Repeal Bill. As it was very de sirable that the country should have the decision of the House on this question early, he should move that the Bill be committed on Monday next.

After some conversation between Sir E. Knatchbull, Mr. Calcraft, Sir J. Newport, and Mr. Curwen, as to the most appro-priate day, the Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Monday.

The Irish Deeds Stamp Bill was read a third time and passed.

Sir E. Knatchbull presented a Petition from certain Landed Proprietors in the Parishes of Buley, Starley, and Hoxden, is the county of Kent, complaining of being assessed heavily to the poors' rate, in consequence of the Government having purchased some lands in that quarter.

The Chancellar of the Exchequer said, that the lands in question had been purchased for the use of the Royal Navy, as they were appropriated to the growth of timber for its service. He could not think there was any peculiar hardship in the case of those Petitioners;

all Crown Lands were exempt from the poor rates, and it was but right they should be so. Whatever attention the Petition was entitled to, he was convinced it would receive it from his Right Hou. Friend connected with the Trensury.

The Petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Grattan inquired whether the Right Hon. Secretary for Iroland had received any intelligence from that country, authorizing certain counties to be proclaimed?

Mr. G. Grant (as we understood him) said, he had not received

In a Committee on the Irish Revenue Inquiry Bill, some conver-sation arose with respect to the appointment of the Commission and the proceedings of the Commissioners.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer declared that the Commissioners desired no remuneration beyond their mere expences; but with respect to several of them, the House would decide after the Commission was concluded how much they were entitled to.

Mr. Hume was not aware five Commissioners were necessary. He thought to appoint Members of that House on a Commission, with a prospect of future remuneration, was in effect to hold out a bribe to bring them under the influence of Government.

At length the Committee divided on a proposition by Mr. Maberley, that the Commission should consist only of three Gentlemen to be named— For the amendment, 23—Against it, 81—Majority, 58.

A division afterwards took' place for excluding Mr. F. Lewis's name—Ayes, 31—Noes, 77—Majority, 48.

A clause was agreed to for preventing the appointment of any

Mr. Bankes objected to the grant, and considered that the claim ought not to have been brought before a Committee.

· Mr. Grenfell opposed the motion. He was surprised that His Majesty's Ministers did not resist the claim with indignation after the Trensury had put a decided negative on it. He moved that 1,458l, he substituted in lieu of the original sum.

The House divided - For the Original Sum, 53 - For the Amend-ment, 19 - Majority, 34.

Mr. C. Grant brought forward the Irish Estimates. He movedthat a sum not exceeding 2,000l, be granted to defray the expenses of Protestant Charter Schools in that kingdom; which, after some conversation was agreed to.

The following sums were then voted:— 30,0001, for the Founding Hospital. 92,6001, for the House of Industry. 9601, for the Retired Governors of ditto.

5,500l. for the Lunatic Asylum. (Mr. Hume objected to one article in this grant, which he

Mr. Dawson observed, that however ludicrous it might appearshuff was a source of comfort to Lunatics, which it would be cruek to deprive them of.)

4,5001. for the Fever ditto.
3001. for the Hospital of Incurables.
6,4541. for the School for Promoting Christian Religion.

The latter vote occasioned some conversation, Mr. S. Rice objecting to the largeness of the grant; three years ago, 3,0001. only being demanded. He admitted, however, that the institution was conducted on liberal principles.

DEATH OF THE COUNTESS OF LIVERPOOL.—We announce with sincere regret the death of the Right Hon. the Countess of Liverpool. The melancholy event took place at half-past six o'clock on Tuesday morning, at Fife House, Whitehall.—Her Ladyship had been for some time in a declining state. Her death will prove a great loss to the poor, to whom she was a liberal friend and benefactor. # JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JUNE 17.

THE QUEEN.

The Queen's visit to the Manston-House on Saturday, as the very last little effort at popularity, seems to have been quite decisive. Invitations were actually published to " such of the Nobility and Gentry as were to dine with the Lord Mayor." requesting them to assemble at her Majesty's residence in South Audley Street, and accompany her through the City; and her own Paper professed, in numerous advertisements. the intention of giving a correct list of the distinguished persons who were to have the honour of meeting her Majesty on this " interesting occasion."

In the outset the Queen's mortification must have been excessive, for of all the Nobility and Gentry who were to dine with the Lord Mayor, not one was in attendance to form a procession as she had desired. Her own two carriages rolled through the streets, and, as we said last Sunday, in our hurried account of the affair, not even a dustman or chimney-sweeper could be found hardy enough to insult the national character by calling out " Queen for ever."

By the shortness of her Majesty's stay at the Mansion-House, the satisfaction she experienced may be accurately measured; and, really, when we come to look at the "distinguished persons" who graced this "interesting" banquet we are not much surprised at her disgust and disappointment.

First on the list appeared the Earl Fitzwilliam, whose age and rank entitle him to every notice; but it must be allowed that if his Lordship had not been removed from the Lord Lieutenancy of his county for associating himself with Wooler and the thorough-paced fadicals of the north, the year before last, his delicate attentions to the Queen would have had more weight with the world, as being probably the result of a conviction of her innocence; whereas now every man breathing (justly or not, it does not become us to say) attributes his devotion to her Majesty to a mean and shabby feeling of malice and personal resentment against the King for doing his duty to the country—the said Earl forgetting that he himself succeeded the late Duke of Norfolk as Lord Lieutenant. when he was removed for conduct less flagrant and less indecent than his Lordship in 1819.

Next appear my Lord and Lady Milton.-When the Earl Fitzwilliam adopts a line of conduct however wild and extraordinary, it is not very surprising that his only dutiful son should tread in his steps; but the modest ladies of London wonder that Lady Milton should have appeared gracing the odious feast. We should say, in her defence, were she any body but Lady Milton, that her husband's orders exonerated her from any share of blame on the occasion; but her Ladyship has no need of such excuse, she can plead the feelings of the nearest relationship to Earl Fitzwilliam; for so closely are Lord and Lady Milton allied by blood, that it would puzzle the cassist to determine whether they ought to be man and wife at all; therefore her Ladyship may be allowed to plead in her defence either the obedience due from a wife to a husband, or the natural affection of a lady for a first cousin!

We then have the Hibernian Adam and Eve, Mr. and Mrs. Ponsonby. This couple of persons have just arrived from Chaos, and come before the world suddenly as Queen's friends, to the great astonishment of themselves and their acquaintance, who never imagined, that at her time of life the gentlewoman would have made herself so perfectly ridiculous. It is quite necessary to let the world know that this pair have nothing to do with the Beshoroughs.

Lord and Lady Robert Spencer, every body knows therefore remarks are useless.

And this was the party of distinguished persons, who actually met the Queen on this interesting occasion.

"After the base and 'unmarily attempts,"—thus writes the triumphant Times of Friday,-" that have been made to ex-chide the Queen from the society suited to her sex and shall we standword to see her surfounded with the company which attended her Concert on Wednesday evening." The Times may be proud of such society, but we doubt much that the Queen is; for this boasted list of visitors, after all the efforts which faction and fellow-feeling could make, after two er. three hundred cards of invitation had been lavishly scattered about the town-after ransacking the muster-roll of demireps-after digging out of their obscurity the most vulgar creatures—this boasted list contains just SIXTEEN formals names!!!—and what names?—why, the same old, hackwied, fly-blown names, which have become bye-words of obloquy and contempt ever since the list of the Queen's visitors has been published. Disgusting as the task is, we shall repeat these names as we find them in the Times, and our Readers will then judge of the progress the Queen has made in the public opinion of the Ladies of England.

1. Lady Milton, daughter-in-law of the discarded Lot Lieutenant of Yorkshire.

2. Lady Jersey.

3. Lady Tavistock, daughter-in-law of the Duckess of Het. ford, mentioned before.

4. Lady Robert Spencer.

5. Lady Anne Hamilton.—We spare her blushes, for she is paid to keep the Queen in countenance, and does so in spite of her teeth.

6. Lady Hood generous rival-vide Delicate Investigu-

7. Lady Francis-her Landlady and looks the character? 8. The Lady Mayoress and her sisters—the Misses Twiggt

9. Mrs. Damer—the rival of Praxiteles in his best worker

10. Mrs. Brougham; produre late (too late) Mrs. Spalding.

11. Mrs. Hume-" Poll and her partner Joe."

12. Mrs. Denman—Go and sin no more!!

13. Mrs. Wilde.-We thought that she had other fish to 14. Mrs. and Miss Waithman-with an assortiates of

15. Mrs. Ponsonby !-- last from Ireland. 16. The Miss Maries!-Who are they?

Now, of all these names, our Readers know that the two last alone are new! What Mrs. Ponsonby is, we know. As to the Miss Maries we are ignorant; nor can we guess what Maries they are-but we should suspect, from the company they keep, that they may be MARY MAGDALENES! we trust the time of repentance will come.

Such is the numerous and illustrious list of the Queen's Assembly, but where were all her other friends? Where was the Duchess of Bedford and Duchess of Somerat? where the Countesses Grey and Tankerville? where Ladies Lindorse and Rush? where Lady Sarah Butler and Lady Mary Bennett? where Mrs. Barber, and Mrs. Michael Angelo Taylor, and Mrs. Bennett?

Here are twelve ladies who before visited the Queen, and who seem to have abandoned her; and, if we cared a fig about the testimony of such women, we should be justified in balancing the remorse of these twelve have deserted her, against the effrontery of the other twelve who stick by her.

But it is not by the coming or going of women who have once contaminated themselves by the Queen's society, that we will judge the cause. If the whole twenty-four had resolved to brazen it out, of what weight would their protection have been? There are at least twenty-four thousand laties in London of a rank and station fitter for a Queen's society than Mrs. Waithman and Mrs. Wilde; and against the wretched one or two who visit Carolina Columbina, we must set the innumerable majority who shrink from the polluted atmosphere of her sham Court.

We are well aware that the Times and the Chronicle, and Bennett and Scarlett, and Fergusson, Taylor and Co. will renew their outcries of "infamous," " slanderous," "unmanlu!" " of the rescality of drugging women before the public," and "of the baseness of traducing female virtue." But these outcries affect us not. It is the Times who has again dragged these unhappy women to light-which has not contented itself with noticing them simply as persons who attended # Concert in Audley Street, but as EVIDENCES, " whose rank, whose propriety of conduct, and whose virtues (we quote the words of the Times,) testify the purity and innocence of the persecuted Queen."

Shall the Times be allowed to use women's names and characters to support such an impudent and audacious imposture; and shall not we be permitted to state our reasons or rejecting such testimony? God knows tuated by a love of scandal, we could have told stories of some of these visitors, both male and female, which would have made them tremble.

THERE has been much steadiness observable in the public securities during the last week, and the fluctuation has not exceeded i per cent. Monday and Tuesday being holidays, there was no business of a public nature transacted until Wednesday, when Consols were at 75# for Reduced, and 77# for the Account; they have since varied a trifle, and have been done at 76 for Reduced, and 773 for the Account, at which prices they closed yesterday. The continental securities seem to maintain a pretty steady price. The French 5 per cents, having been done on Wednesday at 85-50; and Nespolitan Stock has experienced a trifling risk since out last, their price being now 73%.

HIS MAJESTY'S BALL.

On Wednesday, the King was graciously pleased to give an entertainment to the children of the Nobility and gentry of distinction; some of the guests were of very tender years, and His Majesty, with his usual kindness and consideration, fixed half-past eight for the hour of meeting.

The staircase leading from the hall was decorated with nants, which filled the air with fragrance; a temporary room, Latted up as a tent, was appropriated to refreshments, and the supper was laid in the new dining-room, at the east end of the suite of apartments, all of which were opened on the occasion.

The King's condescending assiduities and affable conversation with his youthful guests were most gratifying, and rendered the scene particularly interesting. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke of York, the Duke and Duchess of Clarence, and the Princess Augusta, were present; as also the Duchess of Kent, and her daughter, Princess Feodor.

Amongst the company were, the Earl and Countess Grey, and family; the Marquess and Marchioness of Lansdowne, Viscount and Viscountess Ossulston, his Grace the Duke of Devonshire, the Duchess of Richmond, Viscount Granville, &c. &c. &c.

MR. CANNING AND SIR FRANCIS BURDETT.

THE town has, during the last week, been much interested in the affair between these two Gentlemen; in matters of this nature we think it quite right and quite delicate not to interfere. On a recent occasion, Mr. Scarlett is reported to have said, that some allusion which appeared in this Paper, "smelt of blood." If he had known men as well as we do, he would have known that it smelt of no such thing; however, on the present occasion, we shall make but one observation:-

However highly weadmire the resplendent talents and acquirements of Mr. Canning, and however we may be supposed to lean towards a man upon whose political character we pin our faith, we have always, in our minds placed Sir Francis Burdett far above the dirty creatures with whom by his infatuation in public matters he is doomed to be associated, and are by no means disposed to view his conduct or principles with the severity of many of our contemporaries; but, we must confess, that in the present transaction, Sir Francis appears to us, to have most decidedly the worst of it; inasmuch as he has distinctly retracted the words he used, which, if they had any meaning at all, could have but one.

CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN MR. CANNING AND SIR FRANCIS BURDETT. (No. 1.) " TO SIR FRANCIS BURDETT.

"Gleucester Lodge, June 7, 1821. "Sin—In a letter, bearing your signature, and purporting to have been addressed by you to the Chairman of a dimer of Parliamentary Reformers, on the 4th of April, which was published in several of the newspapers of the following day, a liberty is taken with my mane, as little justifiable (in my judgment) by differences of publical epinion, as it is reconcileable with the ordinary courtesies of private life."

sies of private life.*

"The obvious meaning of that passage in your letter of which 1 complain, is, to harpute to me, that, in upholding the present system of Representation in the House of Commons, I am actuated by the corrupt and dishonourable motive of a personal pecuniary interest.

"It cannot be matter of surprise to you, that I should feel myself under the necessity of requiring at your hands a disavowal of the imputation which that passage appears to convey. Should you be unable, or unwilling, to afford me a satisfactory explanation upon this point, I have then to demand of you the only other reparation which are interesting to the control of the which an injury of such a nature admits.

"It can hardly be necessary to state to you, Sir, the reason why this demand has not been sooner made: but I owe it to myself to preclude the possibility of any doubt or misrepresentation, as to the causes of that delay. The first and natural impulse of my own feelings, was to address myself to you, the instant that I had zeed your letter in the newspapers.

"But it was represented to me by the friend whom I requeste to take charge of my letter, that your then situation rendered it impossible for you to accept the second of the alternatives proposed to you (a stroumstance which, I must be permitted to observe, con-siderably aggravated the offence offered to me:) that the utmost which I could obtain from you was an engagement to afford me sa-tisfaction, as soon as the term of your confinement should have ex-pired; that the interval must be full of hearrd as to secresy; that without in any degree impeaching either your honour, or that of any gentleman whom you might select, the mere fact (which could hardly be concealed) of a communication between me, or any friend munication between me, or any friend e, and the King's Bouch, could not fail to excite su and that such suspicion would necessarily be strengthened by my prolonging my stay in England, till the middle of May, after having repeatedly and publicly amounced my intention of waiting only for Mr. Lambton's motion of the 17th of April

"Yielding, for the time, (and I know not how I could have done otherwise) to the force of these representations, it remained for the only to keep my own council, and to quicken, as much as possible, my return from the Continent.

so yesterday evening. My first business on my arrival has been to communicate with Lord William Bentinck, who has the goodness to undertake to deliver this letter to you, and to settle, on my behalf, all necessary arrangements on the matter to which it relates. I assure you, upon my honour, that Lord William Bentinck is the only person who has any knowledge of this latter, or of my purpose to write it.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, (Signet) "GRO. CANNING."

and at the same time have avoided making any allusion whatever rsonal character.

Not having intended, and not having made (as I read the letter) my such allusion at the time, I cannot now hesitate, in a more purticular manner, to disclaim having over had such an intention. "I have the bonour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

HUMBUG.

VANITY, has been, they tell us-cured by the mirror. Perhaps, by shewing ladies and gentlemen their own follies, we may put a stop to them. We see no necessity for any remarks upon the subject of self-puffing, when the puffs themselves are in evidence. Our country readers should be told, that the following are not selected for any particular absurdity, nor with any personal feelings, from the Morning Post of last week :- we really do think, when their writers read them in "cold blood," they will-

"Tremble at the noise themselves have made," and wonder how egotism, conceit, vanity, and stupidity, could have led them to such ridiculous exposures.

Should the gentle mode we have adopted in the first instance not abate the symptoms, we shall take another method of making the thing (if possible) more ridiculous, by offering a few criticisms, literary and other, upon the works of these fash onable authors.

At Mr. MITCHELL's splendid Rout, in Charles-street, Berkeleysquare, the ROYAL ROMAN PONCH ICS, from Grange's, Piccadilly, was handed round to the high gratification of the whole company.

LADY DUCIE'S PARTY .- Her Ladyship's Rout, on Monday evening, was distinguished by every thing splendid and elegant. The refreshments were of the most exquisite kind; and the company included a LARGE PORTION OF THE FARRICKABLE WORLD.

THE COUNTESS OF ST. ANTONIO'S CONCERT, in Hanover square, on Monday evening, was attended by 200 fashionables.— Madame Camponson and the Opera corps attended. The great thrown open at ten o'clock. The music closure at one; the party broke up at two.—Among the company present were—Prince Leopold, Princes Supicha, Chuntelli, Patrella, and the Ambassador from the Netherlands.

LADY GEORGE CAVENDISH'S FIRST ASSEMBLY, at Burlington House, Piccadilly, was preceded by a sumptuous direct, served by with institute taste, at half-past seven, in the Noble banquetting room, on a new and Massive service of plate, of an antique pattern. The following were of the party, vis.:—Prince Leapold, Barl Fitswilliam, Viscount Ebrington, Hon. J. Macdonald, Earlof Rosslyn, Col. Upton, Lady Sophia Macdonald, Lord Fitaroy, and the Duke of Portland.—In the evening the any an drawing-rooms were The furniture a la gree, the gided ceilings, and the golden pilasters. were superb. From the mirrors, of vast magnitude, the scene was heightened; the whole had a magical effect. The refreshment tables also displayed the munificence of the noble owner.

MRS. WENTWORTH'S CONCERT.—This fashionable Lady opened her magnificent and spacious mansion in Hanover-square, formerly the residence of the Duchess of Brunswick, on Monday evening.— The grand staircase, which is profusely adorned with paintings after the Italian School, led the visitants into one of the finest saloons in the kingdom. The drawing-rooms and the barquetting-rooms were illuminated by the most splendid specimens in out glass, or bronze! The chandeliers, in the former, of vast magnitude, were of the cessus pattern; the latter was lighted up by an antique lamp, after a real antique pattern. These inimitable specimens of the arm were from Hancock's Great Room in Spring-gurdens. A temporary conservatory was erected, communicating with the gar-den, filled with choice exotics. The LAWN AND TERRACE WERE likewise illuminated.

LADY SHEFFIELD'S BALL, in Upper Wimpole-street, was attended by upwards of 200 fashionables. The drawing-rooms and the apartments on the ground fleor were all illuminated. Flowering shrubs decorated every part of the house. The dancing commenced at eleven, the supper at two, and at four the party broke up!

MRS. WINGSIELD STRAFFORD'S ROUT. At Straford Hou on Tuesday evening last, the above Lady held a brilliant assembly there were six spacious apartments throws open. The very fine staircase was entirened by—an infinite number of plants. The refreshment tables were laid out in the bangudting-room! The WRYMOUTH, JUNE 11 .- On Wednesday last Mr. and Mrs. Rad-WRYMOUTH, JUNE II.—Un Wednesday last Mr. and Mrs. Rad-cliffle entertained at dimer, at their house, on the Royal Terrace, Col. Clifton, and the Officers of the 1st Regiment of Royal Dre-goons, Sir Henry and Lady Onslow, Sir John and Lady Meade, J. W. Weston. Esq. (Mayor), and his Lady, T. Billett, Esq. (late High Shoriff) Miss Billett, Rev. Henry Poole, &c. &c. The Evening Party was numerous; the Supper and Refreshments were of the best kind, and at one o'clock this furtherable Assemblage nections!

A PARODY

" Come, tell me, says Rosa, as kissing and kins'd." BY THOMAS MOORE, ESQ.

We confess that there is a certain looseness of style in the following Parody, which gave rise to some streng doubts in our minds as to publishing it, but upon turning to the original, which is to be seen on the piano-forte of every young lady in the hills of mostality, we find it chaste and correct by comparison, we therefore can have no hesitation in giving it to our readers.

- " Соми, tell me," says Винсич, as kissing and kiss'd, My donkey he led through a grove,
- "Come tell me the number—repeat me the list
- " Of the swains you have blest with your love."
- "Oh, they have been many, I own, yet to rove " My heart till this moment was free!
- "But I'll tell you, my dear, who have shar'd in my love, " And the number shall finish with thee.
- " My tutor was Winness; in youth gay and wild,
- I sak'd him the way to be blest;
- "He started, and stammer'd, and talk'd of a child,
- " And then-you may funcy the rest; " His lesson of dear and enrapturing lore
- " I have never forgot, I allow,
- " By stealth I have practised it often before, " But never in public till now.
- " SIR SIDNEY came next—but so weak was his frame, "And his noddle so full of romance,
- "That I should not have envied the chivalry dame
- " To whom he were knight of the lauce; For I never was of that funciful school-
- " I like a more broad-shouldered Knight;
- " He thought me a drab, and I thought him a fool-
- " And in faith we were both in the right! " My soul was now calm, till by SAPIO's good looks,
- " Again I was tempted to rove;
- "But he was so deep in his curs'd music-books,
- " That he gave me more fiddling than love: " So I left this mule Sappho, and hastened to fly
- "To a sweeter musician of blies, "Who played on the finte, with a shake made one die,
  - " And marked with Da-Capo his kiss!
- "Ob, LAWRENCE was next, but SIR THOMAS, like me. " To painting was very much given ;
- " And the worst of it was, we could never agree
- "Who laid on the colour most even.
- "Ob, Towar, I've said in our squabbles of mirth. "What's painting to you or to me?-
- "You may paint all the signatu heav'n or on earth,
- "But you'll ne'er paint another like me!"

The original Song contains only five verses, and, therefore, according to the rules of parodists, this must end here; but had it pleased Mr. Moore to have carried on his sentimental indelicacy to greater length, we should have been able to have followed have through at least a dozen more.

TO JOHN BULL.

THE Queen's Chaplain, Mr. Fellowes, was, some years back, Curate at Fakenham, near Euston, in Suffolk. Here an agreeable companion joined him, the wife of an Italian, but separated from her husband. It is not to be imagined that a man, who laid claim to a greater degree of morality and rationality than Jin neighbours, and who was enlightening the world with her "Christian Philosophy," "Religion without Cant," and other similar works, could admit into his bosom any thing more than the purest Platonic affection. The foolish, prejudiced villagers, however, would draw conclusions that militated against all constructions of modern liberality; and mistaking the innocent Italian manners their kind-hearted Pastor bail adopted, raised such a din about his ears, as induced the Lady to decamp; and a hint was soon after given to her protector, (and not in vain) that he had better follow her example.

Can you wonder that this amiable benevolent man should, from that time be desirous to leave a bigotted Church, and which he found nothing but persecution; or that he should afterwards fly to the great patroness of such impocent sulferers?—Yours, &c. SLY-BOOTS.

TO JOHN BULL.

MASTER BULL,-I am a pretty constant reader of your, although I detest your politics, and do not altogether approve of the calumnies upon private characters, in which you too often allow yourself to indulge. You are, however, a clear fellow and deserve encouragement for your sincerity; and i really cannot let you spoil one of the best stories ever told of Dr. Parr, without doing my best to set you right. manner in which you relate his famous reply to Sir J. Mackintosh, quite misses the point, and tumbles flat in its aim at a climax. What infamy does it impute to a man to say, that he was an Irishman- a pricet-and " consistent ?" tency is certainly per se a virtue, and under some circu :-stances, is almost thought to give respectability to vice. Now do out of pure justice in your next, correct your blund r and tell the story thus:—"Sir, he was an Irishman—he migt.t have been a Scotsman; he was a priest—he might have been a lawyer; he was a Traitor—he might have been an Apostate."—I am, John, in hopes of your reformation in policies, your well-wisher. Furnival's Inn, June 13.

TO JOHN BULL.

STR.—Allow me to correct a mistake that crept into your secount of certain qui tam convictions of a Norwich Print . Mr. Burt, whose present severity contrasted with his former lenity has caused no little surprise, was elected Mayor to: year, and retires from office next week. It was a Mr. Marsh. another subscriber to Hone, that was a candidate at the late election, and that afterwards lodged an information against the printer, and became entitled to half the fines. The eletion was carried against him in favor of a Tory by a grast majority—so low has the Queen's cause sunk his party in the estimation of the public.—Yours, &c. CORRE TOR. Norwich, June 13, 1621.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JUNE 8 .- On the 7th inst. the Minister of the Interior brought down a Royal Message to the Chamber of Deputies, requiring that the operation of the law of the 31st of March, 1820 which subjects the journals and periodical publications to a pre-vious Censorship, be continued to the end of the Session of 1821. His Excellency addressed the Chamber, in Justification of the proposed measure, after which the communication was registered, conformably to usage.

A fact of very considerable importance is communicated in letters received from Cadiz of the 18th ult. It is, that the two Commissioners sent by Bolivar from the Spanish Main (by hon directed to treat with the Spanish Government) on their arrival at that port were detained, and informed by the Authorities of the place, that they could not be allowed to proceed further without instructions from the King. This circumstance has given rise to much surmise.

PARIS, JUNE 9 .- The Genoa Gazette states, " We learn from Naples that 8,000 Austrians are about to be embarked for Sicily. Yesterday was fixed for the anniversary service in bonour of the young Lallemand, student at Law, who was killed on the 3d of June last year. His numerous former fellow students assembled in the Church St. Eustuche to assist in the service; but a bill posted on the Church door announced, that by command of superior authority the ceremony would not take place. The students remained some time in the Church, observing the most profound silence. They afterwards directed their steps towards the Church-yard of Pere Lachaise, to the amount of several thousands. They found the avenues to the Church-yard guarded by horse gend'armerie, and about 200 on foot. A serjeant and two privates advanced to forbid them entering Pere Luchaise. Mr. L.—, Doctor of Medicine, demanded their reason; he was referred to the Commandant of the gend'armes, who declared that he had orders to prevent any one entering the Church-yard. All the young men then retired in the same good order that they came, contented with having by this solemn proceeding rendered a noble and affecting homage to the memory of young Lallemand.

A duel with pistols was fought on Wednesday last, near Paris, between an Officer of the Cuirassiers and a silk-merchant. A dispute at the Theatre was the cause. The former was killed on

They write from Barcelonn, May 19th, that the Commander of a ship of the line (the Guerrier) has written from Makon, saying that the Algerine corsairs are now disarmed and in port, and that the Dey Lad declared to the Admiral of the Dutch division (who had just cust anchor at Mahon) that he would not commit any hostility against other nations, if they did not in the first instance insule

We learn from Stock bolm, that the son of King Charles John is attacked by a languor which causes alarm for his life. It is to be attributed to the climate of Sweden, which has hitherto prevented the Queen, Oscar's mother, from residing in the kingdom.

PARIS, JUNE 11.—A Turkish Bulletin states that a battle has been fought between Ali Pacha and the Turkish Pachas, in which the former was at first victorious, but that he was finally defeated by the latter, who, says the Bulletin, "fought like so many Leonidases." The Greeks, however, give a very different account of this action. They state that Ali had laid a skilful ambuscade for Chousrid l'acha, in the defiles of Macrimoros, and that all the Turks who ventured into the defires were slain. In the Turkish Bulletin Ali Pacha is designated as Satan Ali—a circumstance which seems to remove all doubt of his having really changed his religion. The Divan is said to be more seriously statuted by the state of the Peloponnesus than even by the insurrection of Wallachia an I Moldavia.

PARIS, JUNE 12 .- Our Bayonne correspondence, dated the 5th instant, announces that Merino and his Guerilla hand are stronger than ever. He has now in his troop four hundred cavalry well mounted. He excites great fear in the Spanish Government. A portion of Old Castille is occupied by this intrepid Curate, and it is thought in Madrid that he is about to be declared out of the pule of the law. The Empeciando dares not come in contact with him An entire company of Carabineers, with arms and baggage, re-cently deserted and made common cause with the Insurgence. The regiment Oceana has received orders to repair to the capital.

A letter from Madrid, dated the 31st ult. states, that on the previous night, the Prior of the Convent of the Dominicans, in which the King has a private Chapel, whither his Majesty often retires, has been arrested. The Prior is suspected of being the nuther of a plan of counter-revolution. He is now confined in the prison which was occupied by the ill-fated Vinnesa.

The Moniteur amounces officially, that on Sunday last, in a public audience, M. Pozzo di Borgo and the Baron de Vincent presented their credentials to the King; the former as Ambassador Extraordinary and Pienipotentiary from the Court of Russia, and the latter as Ambassador from the Court of Austria.

VALENCIENNES, JUNE 5 .- A terrible occurrence has spread consternation throughout this town. On the 4th instant, at a quarter to seven o'clock in the morning, a loud explosion was heard. It was soon announced that the Liste gate, under which was a powder mugazine, was on fire. Alarm instantly became general, the inhabitants precipitately flying in all quarters to avoid the danger. The garrison mustered under arms, and the Mayor and his assistant (M. Dinaux), and the Sub-Prefect of Domay, repaired to the spot without delay, and, by their presence, contributed to maintain order. Some bembs and gremates explicted from time to time.—About eleven o'clock the four towers of the gate, in which were a considerable quantity of arms, gave way. One man only were a considerable quantity of arms, gave way. One man only has been killed; it is thought the deceased is the individual who imprudently caused the ire.—A thousand conjectures are advanced on this point. The loss is immense. The lead, iron, and brass, formed a rightful torrent of burning lava. Of this immense edifice, there only remain the walls, which are expected to fall every instant. Thus a monument of the 14th century, which has resisted several memorable sieges, has fallen in a few hours.

BRUSSELS, JUNE 8 .- The affair of Mademoiselle Le Normand (the Sybil, as she is called) came on before the Tribunal at Louvain. It began at ten o'clock and lasted till five in the aftermoon. The number of persons present was very great, and many could not find room. The famous, Sybil was defended by M. Van Meener; afterwards she made a speech, which was very well but together, and in which she again endeavoured to enforce the arguments in her favour, but they were not allowed by the Court. Mademaiselle Le Normand was condenned to one year's imprisonment, to fifty florins fine, and the costs. A great many persons from Brussels gave evidence on this singular trial. In the sentence it is stated that ske pretended to hold communication with the Genius Ariel, to possess the Arrow of Abaris, the mysterious Game of Thurst, &c.

A letter has been received from M. Zen, the accredited agent of the Government of New Columbia, dated from Bayonne, in which he mentions that he had heard that General Bolivar had broken the armistice; but that he should, notwithstanding, proceed to Madrid, in the hope of the King acknowledging the independence of South America, and that his negociations would be attended with South America, and that his negociations would be attended with success. They referred entirely to pecuniary matters.

A letter from Genoa, dated 2d June, says—"Arrived here on the 31st ult. from Villa Strama, his Sardinian Majesty's ships Christina and Triton, having on board their Majesties, King Victor Emanuel, the Queen, and Princesses."

VIENNA, MAY 30.—Preparations are making at the residence of Lord Stewart, which indicate the early departure of this Ambassador. The sale of horses, and a great part of the familiare, authorises the idea that he will be long absent, if even a climage of post does not take place, which has long been talked of in Vicuma.

A Louisiana Gazette arrived yesterday. It appears that the Lieutenaut-General of the Mexican armies, President of the Supreme has issued a proclamation, declaring that the Patriots "have burst asunder and dissolved for ever the bonds by which they were united to European Spain." The Mexican insurrection has already been subdued.

Letters from Valparaiso, of 1st March, communicate news respecting the operations of the forces of the Patriots. Lord Cochrane had given up the blockade of Callao, and part of the coast of Peru, in consequence of the appearance of the Prueba and Vauganza Spanish vessels of war. His Lordship had sailed in pursuit of them NAPLES, MAY 22.—On the 20th inst. the King went, in grand state, to the church Del Carmino Maggiore, to offer thanks to the Most High, for his happy return. The people united their prayers to those of the Monarch; and, with an unanimous voice, prayed Heaven to preserve the august dynasty of the Bourbons.

TRIESTE, MAY 25 .- Two Turkish frightes, of fifty guns each, and four brigs, which recently sailed from Constantinople, in order to support the operations of the forces destined against the Insurgents of the Morea, have been given up to the latter by the Greeks, which formed the majority of the crews of this squadron. The Turks on board, in number about nine bundred, were at first landed, as prisoners, on the Island of Milo; but as soon as the munier of the Patriarch was known the Greeks sacrificed them to their vengeance.

CONSTANTINOPLE. MAY 13.—We are constantly in a state of alarm here. In addition to the scenes which have already occurred, last week was characterised by some bloody conflicts between the Janisaries themselves. As we do not go out of our houses, we are ignorant of the cause of the quarrels. There only remains one Greek chapel which has not been profuned or demolished by the opulace of this capital.

Intelligence has been received from Mogador of the recent date of the 10th of May. The contest which agitated the Empire of Morocco has entirely censed; and the surrender of Tetuan, the last place that held out against his authority, has reinstated the old Emperor, Muley Soliman, in all his original power and the undisturbed possession of the throne.

NEW SHETLAND, FEB. 16 .- The Russian frigate Wostock, and a sloop of war, have been on a voyage of discovery to this part of the world. The number of seals here is much smaller than was expected. The country is a wild mass of snow and ice, and its shores extremely dangerous; but the harbour is full of vessels of one sort and another. No less than nine sail of English vessels have been lost on this coast. The harbour lies 62. 30. South lat. and 63. 5. West long.—There are twelve American vessels here."

HALLEAX, MAY 18.—Recent Intelligence from Havannah mentions that a revolution was momentarily expected. The regular roops had shown great symptoms of disaffection.

A letter from an Officer of His Majesty's ship Topaze, dated Mocha, January 0, 1821, states, that after that ship had fired upwards 3,500 thirty-two and eighteen pound shot into the forts of that town, articles of peace were agreed to, and satisfaction given for the gross insult committed on the British Resident, who was hamboord through the streets.—The Topaze had one man killed, and several wounded.

Intelligence has been received from St. Domingo, stating that President Boyer had succeeded in suppressing the late insurrections, and had behaved with great leniency to the prisoners, extending free partion to all, except one or two of the ringleaders.

The American Papers state, that the newly discovered lands in the Antarctic Ocean, which have been denominated New South Iceland, lie in about 62. 30. S. latitude, and 63. 5. W. longitude. The American navigators give a very discouraging description of those regions, but we know that American captains are not the most remarkable in the world for the accuracy of their statements.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

The Attorney-General v. Wyatta.—This was an information filed by the Attorney-General against the defendants in this case, who are extensive ale-brewers in Portpool-lane, to recover penalties under the 59th of George 11I. c. 58. s. 10, for having concented 1,250 bushels of malt with a view to evade the additional duty imposed on that article in 1819.

It was calculated, that the quantity of malt, which had escaped being charged with duty, amounted to 1,250 bushels. For this fraud the penalties recoverable was ferty shillings per bushel, amounting together to 2,500l.

The defendants consented that a verdict should be given against them for Eleven Hundred Pounds.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, GUILDHALL, FRIDAY.

Cupon v. Cross .- This was an action to recover from the De fendant 2001, the amount of certain stock, alleged by the Plaintiff to be her property, and to have been paid over by Defendant to a third party, against her positive prohibition. By the evidence, it appeared that the Plaintiff was the widow of a person of considerable property, who, during his life time, followed the trade of a prewer. Mr. Capon died in June, 1818, and in November, 1818, brewer. Mr. Capon died in June, 1818, and in November, 1818, the Plaintiff, having 6001, stock in the 3 per Cents, directed the Defendant to sell it out, and to purchase for her with the produce 4501. Navy 5 per Cents, which was to be invested in the Defendant's name. The Defendant contended, that the Plaintiff had consented to the first step, and that, therefore, he was exculpated.

The Chief Justice left it to the Jury to decide on this conflicting testimony, and they found a Verdict for the Plaintiff—Damages 2001.—Costs 40s.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, DUBLIN, JUNE 8

Richard Davis, a young Gentleman of most respectable con-nexions enlisted as a common soldier some years ago, in consequence of disputes with his family. He married, and whilst he was sloing duty in London as a private in the Guards, his wife was delivered of a daughter, who was christened Theresa Davis. Some time after the birth of this child, the father was killed at the battle of Waterloo, and in consequence of the decease of some relations, the little Theresa, though born under such adverse circumstances, became heir at law to an estate of two thousand pounds a-year. Her claim, however, was impeached by the husbands of her two aunts (the sisters of her father). Several witnesses, were examined on behalf of the child; and the Jury returned a verdict, "That Theresa Davis is the legitimate daughter of Richard and Bridget Davis."

COURT OF CLAIMS, June 16.

Proclamation was made at one o'clock, when there were pre-of Donolphmore, Lord Amhurst, Sir W. Scott, Sir John Nicoli, and the Judge Advocate.

Sir John Silvester, with the City Remembrancer, attended to prefer and support the claims of the Twelve Livery Companie nttend the Lord Mayor at the Coronation, in State.

Postponed to Friday.

The claims of Lord Gwydir, who was sent for, to officiate as Grand Chamberlain of England, was postponed to another day.

The Marquis of Ormond's claim, to the office of Chief Butler for Ireland, was next heard, the farther hearing was adjourned to

Mr. Gazelee addressed the Court, on behalf of Mr. Dymocke the younger, claiming to officiate for his father, the Rev. John Dy-mocke, in the character of Champion for the King, and that at eatain coronations, deputies had been allowed in the cases of minors, who had neither father nor guardian; the learned counsel cited a variety of laws, from the time of Edward the Third, down to the reign of William and Mary, (when the Champfon was personated by Charles Dymocke, Esq.) to shew that the right had been recognised in the family of Dymocke, as Lord of the Manor of Scrivelsby.

The decision of the Court was read by the Clerk, namely:—

That the Court were of opinion, that the Rev. John Dymocke, Clerk, had established his claim to the Office of Champion at the Coronation; and that being in Holy Orders, and thereby not able to sustain the office in person, he was entitled to appoint a rafficient deputy to appear for him."

Mr. Dymocke the younger was in Court, when it appeared be had formerly been a Midshipman. He is about 5 feet 11 inches high, strongly formed; he was 20 years old last March.

This decision is of some importance, as furthering the Dymocke claim to the Marmion Peerage, which has already so long eagaged the House of Lords.

The Court adjourned, at four o'clock, to Friday next at one o'clock.

THE CORONATION.

The preparations for completing the arrangements for this splendid ceremony, which is to take place on the 19th of July, are proceed-

The Throne on which his Majesty is to sit is to be of a square form, surnounted with a square canopy, formed of crimson vehet, richly trimmed with gold fringe, bearing on the festoons the escutcheons of the Royal Family embroidered in gold: the Royal arms will be embroidered on the back. There is now a large square table in front of these preparations, on which the Royal Regulia is to be laid previous to the departure of the procession for the Abbey. On the return of His Majesty to the banquet, this table will be increased in dimensions by means of temporary leaves, and thus afford additional accommodation for the Royal Dukes, who will disc with the tional accommodation for the room broken, who will make what are King.— The Royal platform is approached by a succession of steps; the first by six steps, the second by five, and the Royal presence by three. There will be distinct ceremonies on surmounting each landing-place. There will not be, as at the last Coronation, any railing in front of the platform; but the whole will reach from one side of the hall to the other, and present an uninterrupted view of the King's table, and of all the forms observed in paying him the customary attentions. The galleries are to be covered with scarlet The fronts of the galleries will be prepared with Gothic pannels, and the tops of those fronts, on which the spectators will lean, will be covered with scarlet cloth cushions, and gold lace fringe. As a further security, an iron rall has been added to the fronts, of about 12 inches in height, which will be covered with scariet cloth.

Every attention has been paid to the private accommodation of the visitors; retiring rooms, with proper attendants, will be appointed, together with rooms for refreshment; the latter, we appointed, dersund, will be let to persons, who will sell every description of viands. Those visitors highest in rank will, as a matter of course, e entitled to places nearest the throne, with the exception of the individuals who take part in the procession. None will have the opportunity of quitting the hall, till the ceremonies of the day are completed. Those desirous of witnessing the splendid pageant, must, therefore, make their election between the Abbey and the hall, as they cannot have the means of seeing both.

The tables in the hall are six in number, placed lengthways; three on each side. Each table is 52 feet long, and will dine 26 persons on each side. The whole number who are expected to dine, therefore, independent of the Royal Family, will be 312. The King's table will be served with peculiar state. Each course will be attended by the Lord High Steward, the Earl Marshal, and the Lord High Constable on horseback, with several of the officers of His Majesty's Household, and the Sergeants at Arms.

The ceremony of the entrance of the champion will take place between the first and second courses, so that ample time will be afforded for the requisite changes.

Rails will separate the spaces allowed for the tables, from the centre of the hall, leaving an avenue of 19 feet in width, which will be first covered with marting, and afterwards with blue cloth. The lust Coronation feast took place by candle-light; but on the present happy occasion the whole will be finished by day-light. The hall, from the introduction of the windows in the roof, is infinitely lighter than ever it was before; and, from the manner in which that light is admitted, the effect of the whole will be surprisingly

The kitchens, confectioneries, and other offices connected with the preparations for the least, are in a forward state; and all the ranges, ovens, hot hearths, and boilers, were lighted in the course of

The platform, on which the procession is to move from the Hall to the Abbey, will extend over a line of 1,500 feet. It was originally proposed to take it by a short direction over the square or gar-den, in front of New Palace Yard; but, upon consideration, the circuitous and ancient route was preferred. The canopy over this platform will be so high as in no respect to obstruct the view of the procession; and a covering of an ingenious nature has been invented, which, by mechanical means, may in a very fer minute over the whole, so as effectually to shut out the shower, if it should unhappily rain.

A stable will also be erected, without delay, in New Palace-yard, for the horses of the Champion, and the Lord High Steward, the Earl Marshal, and the Lord High Constable. These horses are now training for the performance in which they are to be engaged. The principal art will be to teach them to move backwards with celerity, as both in coming and going, their riders must keep their faces towards the King.

The organ to be used at the Coronation is, we understand, that at present in the Hanover-square Rooms.

THE CROWN.—His Majesty will be crowned with the ancient Crown of England. The new Crown is intended to be worn immedistely after that solemn form has taken place. The former has however, received several improvements and embellishments, and nowever, received several improvements and embetitionization one for many false jewels real ones have been substituted. The Crown, made expressly for his present Majesty, presents an appearance of one invaried mass of diamonds. The curve of its branches, which meet at the top to support the ball, is not so, sharp as the old one; it is more extended and graceful, and the whole is consequently much higher. The velvet with which it is or an mented is of a heautiful crimson colour. The whole is surmounted by a pearl of immense value.

THE SCRPTRE.—His Majesty's Sceptre with a cross, called the Sceptre Royal, is of solid gold; the handle plain, but the upper part wreathed. Its length is two feet 0 inches; the pommel at the bottom is enriched with rubies and small diamonds, and for five inches and a half above the handle, it is curiously embossed and embellished with supphires, rubies, emeralds, and diamonds. The top rises into a fleur de lis, enriched with precious stones, above this is an assethyst, value 15,000l. surmounted by a cross, wholly covered with precious stones, with a large table diamond in the centre.

The Sacred Oil.—The golden vessel which will contain the sacred oil is in the form of an eagle, with its wings extended, upon a pedestal of pure gold, finely chased. The head screws off at the middle of the neck, for the convenience of putting in the oil, which pours through the beak into the spoon. The height of this is 9 inches; the breadth, from the points of the wings, 7 inches; the weight between eight and ten ounces; and the body capable of containing six ounces of oil. The anointing spoon is of pure gold, with four pearls in the broadest part of the bandle, the bowl of the spoon finely chased, of curious antique workmanship.

The Staff.—His Majesty's Staff is four feet seven inches and a

THE STAFF.—His Majesty's Staff is four feet seven inches and a half in length of solid gold, weighing 8th. 9ozs. with a pike or foet of steel about four inches and a quarter in length, and a half and cross at the top; the ornaments of simple raised gold; three different fillets, or bandages of leaves, are at equal distances; its dameter is three quarters of an inch. The Ball is of pure gold, with a raised bandage of precious stones encircling st, and a half bandage of the same round the top; it is surmounted by a cross, upon an amethyst of immense value, as a pedestal.

THE SPURE—are of pure gold richly embosed. They are the same that was worn by William the Conqueror, and have plain points instead of rowels. The bracelets, supposed also to have been worn by William, were of plain gold, but have been enamelled for the ensuing occasion with the Harp, the Thistle, the Shamrock, and the Rose alternately.

THE SWORD.—The Sword of State is a very large two-braded sword, with a rich acabbard of crimson velvet, adorned with gold plates of the Royal badges.

THE RING.—His Mujesty's Coronation Ring is of plain gold, with a large ruby violet, on which is curiously enchased a plain Cross, or Cross of St. George.

THE SALTCELLAR—is of pure gold, and a model of the White Tower of London. The four corner towers and the large centre one separately contain salt. There are also other smaller Saltcellars of immense value.

The Sceptus with a Dove.—This differs materially from the Sceptus with a Cross. It is not wreathed, but of an even surface; it is pure gold, three feet seven inches in height, three inches in circumference at the handle, and two inches and a quarter at the top; the pommel is adorned by a fillet of diamonds and precious stones of different sorts: the ball or globe at the top, is ornamented by a band or filler of rose diamonds; u on the ball is a small cross, which is surmounted by a dove with extended wings, as the emblem of Mercy. For this Sceptus, His Majesty, in the course of complying with the different forms required, will exchange the hall or globe of empire. The Sceptus with the Dove will then he held in the left hand, while the right bears the Sceptus with the Cross.

Three swords will be borne naked before the King in the procession, besides the sword of State which less been already mentioned. The latter will be carried singly, and the nearest to His Majesty's person, but will be immediately preceded by the Sword of Justice to the Spirituality on the left; and the Sword of Mercy in the middle. The Sword of Mercy, or pointless sword, known in the heraldic account by the name Curtuna, is the principal of the three swords in dignity; the length of its blade is thirty-two inches, the breadth almost two inches; the handle, which is covered with fine gold wire, is four inches long, besides the pommel, of an inch and three quarters, which, with the cross or guard, is plain steel gilt; the length of the cross is almost eight inches. This sword, for the purpose of answering allegorically to its name, is made to appear as though its point were broken off. The scabbard is covered with rich brocaded cloth of tissue, with a gilt ferule, hook, and cape.

The second Sword in dignity, that of Justice to the Spirituality, is a pointed sword, but considerably more obtuse than the third; the length of its blade is forty inches, the breadth au inch and a half; the handle is covered in a similar manner to the former with fine gold wire; it is also of the same length, and in all other respects it coincides.

The third Sword in dignity, the Sword of Justice to the Temporality, in an extremely sharp pointed sword: the breadth of its blade is one inch and three quarters, the length forty inches; and resembles the Sword of Justice to the Spirituality.

Places in private houses in the neighbourhood of Palace-yard, commanding a view of the line of the procession of the Coronation, are now sought after with extraordinary avidity. Various prices are demanded from ten to forty guineas per seat. These sents will be generally on scaffolding erected in front of the houses, the safety and sufficiency of which will be inspected by the Board of Works. The proprietor of one house in Great George-street expects to elear 7,0001. The landlord, in most cases, is entitled to divide the profits equally with the tenant.

The dress allotted to the band of Gentlemen Pensioners is particularly gay. The original picture representing Lord Hunsdon in the dress, is now in Sherborne Castle. His Majesty has been very particular in ordering theirs to be exactly like it. The jacket and short breeches are of scarlet cloth, covered with several hundred yards of narrow gold lace, and have besides 1200 small sugar loaf buttons on each dress. The puffs or sashes are of light blue velvet; scarlet silk stockings, black shoes with rosettes, straight antique-looking sword; a short mantle edged with gold bullion, and fastened by an immense bow of gold cord on the left shoulder, something like an aiguilette; Elizabeth's ruff round the neck, and a bonnet with three white feathers, with scarlet satin puckered round the crown, and turned up in front with a gold loop. The dresses are all ready; and it is said each will cost 2001. The above dress is to be worn on state occasions only, and the present uniform at levees, &c. which is a full dress of a Captain of the Guards.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Fix PAUL's.— Wednesday the cross at the top of St. Paul's was takenydown from the ball. The ball is found to be so injured, that it is deemed necessary to have a new one.

BANKRUPT LAW.—In the draft of the new hill, there is a clause declaring that "no offer of composition shall be entertained for less than 5s. in the pound, without the consent of every creditor who has proved his debt;" the object of which is, to induce persons in business to cease trading as soon as their affairs are in a desperate condition.

On Wednesday, the piece of plate, the glft of the county of Herta to U'm' lurquis of Selisbury, in tactimony of their approbation of his Lore, was services during the 50 years which he has held the office of Lord Lieutenant, was presented to him at Hutfield-house, by the Earl of Bridgewater, as Chairman of the Committee, in a neat speech; to which his Lordship returned a handsome acknowledgment. The Marchioness of Salisbury, Countess of Westmenth, Viscountes Cranborne, Lady Georgiana Wellesley, and Lady Caroline Lamb, with a numerous assemblage of the neighbouring No-bility and Gentry, were present at the ceremony.

It is understood that Mr. Brougham has abandoned his Education
Bills, in consequence of the opposition which they called forth, particularly from the Dissenters.

Crisp, the Pedestrian, has for a considerable wager, undertaken to double the number of miles performed by Captain Barclay in 1,000 successive hours, on a half mile piece of ground, at Norwich.

No less than 317,000l, in gold has been landed at Portsmouth from on board the Venus, from New York. This sum is sent to this country, to an eminent mercantile house, for the payment of a part of the dividends due to individuals in London from the Funds of the United States.

Every arrangement has now been made for continuing the War-wickshire fox-hunt, the ensuing season, in high style; permission has been given already to draw the covers.

BUYING HORSES AT FAIRS.—By the 31st Eliz. cap. 12, every person purchasing a horse at a fair or market may have a description of it, and the price paid, registered by the Clerk; in which case, if it prove to be stolen, and the owner should claim it within six months, by repaying the money entered on the Clerk's book, within 40 days from the time claimed, the horse must be restored; but if no entry be made, the person from whom the horse may have been stolen may take it at any time, giving the purchaser no recommence.

A very important discovery has a short time since been made of the original books of Registry of Marriages and Births which occurred in the Fleet Prison and its Rules from the year 1686 to 1754, together with those also celebrated at the Mint and Mayfar Chapel. Of the authenticity of these records no doubt is entananed; and they have, by an order from Lord Sidmouth, been lately deposited with the Registrar of the Diocese of London, in Godliman-street. The long period of doubt and difficulty which obscured the union of the marriages and births of that era, before the date of the Marriage Act, will now be cleared, and the titles to estates during that period find a clear elucidation, hithertovery much required.

Commencial Report, from the 11th to the 18th of June inclusive.—There is little if any alteration to notice in the Sugar market; the new supplies are picked up as soon as offered, whilst the old percels are comparatively neglected. Brown Jamaicas command from 57s. to 61s.; middling 63s. to 66s.; good bright Scales 68s. to 73s. up to 80s. and 62s. for very fine.—Extensive parcels of Coffee have been brought to the hammer, which were freely taken at rather improving prices; the arrivals are heavy, but as the downed is more than commensurate, there is every probabi-lity of higher prices being speedily realized; yesterday upwards of 1600 bags of St. Domingo were disposed of in one contract at 112s. for immediate payment, which is foun 2s. to 3s. below the regular currency.—Spirits of all kinds are exceedingly depreciated in value; Proof Leeward Rum 1s. 5d. to 1s. 6d. and Jamaica, 16 over 2s. per gallon; there is, however, much less disposition to sell Brands, and choice marks could not be purchased under 3s. 5d. per gallon.—Less demand has been experienced for Cotton than for several weeks preceding, which may principally be attri-buted to the gloomy accounts received of the Liverpool market; a few Benguls at 54 to 6¼; Surats 6 to 6¼; Smyrnas 8 to 6¼; and Peruambucos 124, all in bond, constitute the operations to which publicity has been given.—Advices from St. Petersburgh state the price of Yellow Candle Tallow had improved equal to 51s. a 52s. see Cwt. imported here; notwithstanding which, the contrary has been the case in this market; and for arrivals, and on the spot, 46s. to 48 s. 6d. are the prices, at which, however, there has be demand.

PHILITARMONIC SOCIETY .- The Concerts of this Society ck on Monday evening, with an eclat that promiseer to sustain the high tharacter which, from an onrly period of their establishment, they have possessed throughout Europe. Keisewetter played, as usual, with extraordinary ability, and drew down thunders of applause and the symphonies were performed with the greatest precision under the direction of Mr. Mori; but the novetty and great attraction of the evening was Mr. Mescheles, the Pinnoforte player from Vienna. This gentleman's fame had already reached this country, -so often and so and the expectation of something extraordinary cruelly-fatal to the reception of even great talent—had risen to an unprecedented beight. It is, however, not too much to say of this truly extraordinary performer, that he not only reached this perilous height of expectation, but far surpassed it! leaving his astouished listeners in a state of marvel at powers, which, to be accredited, required to be witnessed. Mr. Moscheles's Concerto has also stamped him as an author of considerable merit and originality. We canno close this brief notice, without expressing our gratification in be-holding the unfeigned candour and liberality of feeling with which this gentleman's high eminence was bailed by those distinguished performers on the piano-fore, whom the musical world has been accustomed to regard, and will still regard, as shiping ornaments of ADVENTISEMENT.]—GENERAL REDUCTION OF TAXES.—The nocessity and expediency of striking off a portion of the National Debt is very ably argued in the "Pamphleteer," No. 36, just published—by which, it is proved, that the injury to the public creditor will be very little felt. The subject is expected to be brought under consideration during this Session of Parliament. In the same Number, are published, Bowles' Letters to Lord Byron; B. Beaumont on the Criminal Code; Cornaro on Longevity; with several other entire Pamphlets.

POLICE.

Marinorough Street.—A soldier of the 1st Regiment of Guards presented himself before W. Mainwaring, Esq. the Magistrate, and made the following singular statement:—Having found it necessary lately to change his lodgings, he and his family, consisting of a wife and three children, took up their quarters in Hopkin's-street, Golden-square, in an apartment adjoining to the Chapel, in which Wedderburn, the Black Preacher, used to hold forth. In the course of the last week they have been frequently alarmed, by the hideous yells of some ferocious animal, and the shouts of an assemblage of persons, to all appearance little less savage. On inquiring into the cause of this annoyance, he ascertained, that an amusement called a "bear-bate," was held in the Chapel twice a week, which being separated from his apartment by a very thin partition, he and his family were in a constant state of nlarm, fearing that the bear might, in an unlucky moment, take it into his head to pay them a visit. It appeared that his apprehensions were not altogether groundless; for, on Sunday night last, when his family were retiring to rest, his wife had occasion to go to the cupboard, where, to her great alarm and astonishment, she beheld brain, all fours through the partition, regailing himself with the contents of her cupboard. She and her children were so terrified, that they all ran into the street, and did not return till their uncourteous visitor was escorted to his own apartment. The poor soldier wished to be informed how he should proceed, in order to prevent a repetition of the visit. The Magistrate ordered the apprehension of brain and his master, as well as all persons found attending the sport of bear-bating.

General Eden was on Friday morning stabbed by a discharged servant, at about half past eleven o'clock, with a double-edged pig-knife, in the right breast. The man, whose name is William Padmore, was immediately secured, and brought to this office, where he was examined before J. E. Conant, Esq. He was ordered to be committed to Newgate.

GULDHALL .- A decent looking young man, named Joseph Niar, apparently in a state of wildness, without either coat or bat, was brought up for examination on Thursday, before Alderman Ansley, charged under the foll wing curious circumstances:—The prisoner, it appeared, was one of the deeply enamoured admirers of Miss Budd, the Richmond young lady, whose action for breach of promise of marriage against Mr. Duggin, a hatter in Newgate-street, was reported in the public prints last week, and had been subwas reported in the point prints has a week, the prisoner pernaed as a witness on the trial, but not called. The prisoner having attended according to his subperna, conceived, although not examined, he ought to be paid for his time; and accordingly wrote a letter on the 6th of June, demanding the sum of 5s. and challenging Mr. Duggin to the field. Hannah Kemplay, who keeps a clothes abop in Weston-street, in the Borough, stated that she knew the prisoner, who is a correr and gilder, and resides near her: he is the son of a respectable bookseller at Twickenham. Her first acquaintance with him was through Miss Budd. He called on her on Tuesday afternoon, and stated to her that it was his intention to kill Mr. Duggin for his conduct towards Ann Budd; that he had a chain round his neck with a dagger to it for that purpose; that he would kill Ann berself, and any gentleman he should find walking with her; and that no one had a right to her but himself. She endeavoured to persuade him against so rash an act; but feeling that she had made no impression apon him, she contrived to apprize Mr. Duggin of his danger. Harris, the officer, who apprehended him in the wild and disordered state of dress in which he appeared at the har, produced a dagger, which he found suspended by a chain round his neck. The prisoner, when questioned respect-ing this instrument, said it was one which he used as a performer at the Richmond Theatre, and that he had also pistols at home. He acknowledged the letter of the 6th of June, to Mr. Duggin, to be his bandwriting.

Alderman Ansley, perceiving the unfortunate situation of the prisoner, did not press him for any explanation of his conduct; but ordered him to be remanded, and gave directions that, in the meantime, his friends should be made acquainted with the circumstances.

OLD BAILEY.

THEADAY.—R. Ho'ding and C. Wade, the two youths who were tried on Friday se'insight, for a burglary, in the house of Mr. Croydou, Blackmore-street, Drury-lame, were this day again put to the har, on an indictment preferred against them by Mr. Brown, of Soho, charging them with feloniously entering his premises, and stealing therefrom property to the amount of upwards of 3001. The witnesses called in support of the prosecution, clearly proved the facts relative to part of the property found on the prisoners, being that of the prosecutor's, and also to the finding the picklock keys, crow-bar, phosphorus-box, &c. and likewise to the recovery of about 2001. in silver, notes, and copper.—Several persons gave Holding a good character for honesty and sobriety.

The Jury, after consulting for a short time, returned a verdict of Guilly - Death.

WEDNESDAY.—Sarah Gilham, aged 18, was capitally indicted for stealing two silk shawls, the property of Messrs. Reeves and Bonnell, privately, in their shop.

Bonnell, privately, in their shop.

The prosecutors are linen drapers, and reside in Shoredith. From the evidence of Mr. Reeves it appeared, that the prisoner came into his shop, and requested to look at some silk shawls, which were accordingly shewn her, when the selected some for purchase. The prisoner then asked for some cambric muslin; and, while being served with that article, she took the property stated in the indictment, over which she had placed her handkerchief, and put it under her arm. Mr. Reeves took no notice at the instant, but proceeded to make up the order; and, on its being completed, she said she had to go farther, and would call on her return. On her leaving the shop, the prosecutor took her into custody, with the property in her

The prisoner made no defence, but called a respectable lady who gave her a good character, and stated that she had for a length of time supported her aged mother by industry.

The Common Serjeant summed up the evidence, and the Jury returned a verdict of Guilty—Death: but strongly recommended the prioner to mercy on account of her previous good character.

the prisoner to mercy, on account of her previous good character.

FRIDAY.—Charge of Murder.—J. Summer, who stands charged upon the Coroner's Inquisition, as well as the Pre-entment of the Grand Jury, with the wilful murder of his wife, at Paddington, was put to the bar, when

Mr. Andrews applied to the Court to postpone the trial until the next Sessions, on the ground, that as the prisoner had only been committed four or five days, his friends had not yet had time to prepare for his defence in so satisfactory a manner as could be wished, under so heavy a charge.

The Common Serjeant said, he had read the depositions, and he was convinced that justice was not likely to be done either to the public or to the prisoner, by so hasry an investigation. He would, therefore, readily accede to the motion for the postponement of the trial.

The prisoner was then informed that he would not be tried until the next Session. He is a stout looking man, apparently about 50 years of age.

Henry James was indicted for burglariously breaking and entering the dwelling-house of George Byug, Esq. M. P. at South Mimms, and stealing therein a silver watch, the property of Edward Lloyd.—The Jury found the prisoner Guilty, but strongly recommended him to mercy, on account of his having a confederate, not in custody, and of his having alsolated from personal violence towards the prosecutor, which was recommended by his companion.

The Common Serjeant said that the recommendation should cer-

The Common Serjeant said that the recommendation should certainly reach the Royal ear; but advised the prisoner by all means to prepare himself for the worst.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

CANTERBURY.—Colonel Hugonia, on retiring from his late regiment, the 4th dragoons, on Tuesday last, was drawn by the privates (who had previously decorated his carriage with laurel), through the streets of this city, preceded by the regimental band, and a handsome fing, on which was inscribed "Colonel Hugonia, 4th Dragoons, Hero of Toulouse."

DUBLIN.—Royal Visit.—Orders, we understand, have been received for putting the Castle into a state proper for the holding of the King's Court, without delay. His Majesty will steep at the Lodge in the Park, and will hold his Levees at the Castle.

Windson.—We linesday morning a party of the Royal Horse Guards marched from here for quarters near London, supposed to be the Banacks in the Regent's Park, and a party of the Life Guards marched into the Barracks at Spittle.—Thursday Morning, at seven o'clock, the whole regiment left the Barracks, with their excellent band, in front, playing "God save the King," as they marched through the town. This fine regiment has been much respected by the inhabitants ever since they have been quartered here, which has been for the long period of seventeen years, and, in consequence, John Bannister, Esq. the Mayor of the Borough, the day before they went away, gave to the Privates three butts of Windsor porter to drink, for their good behaviour so many years. About half-past twelve o'clock the 2d regiment of Life Guards marched into the town, from London, Lord Catheart, their commander, in froat, with the band playing. The spectators were numerous to see these two fine regiments march out and in.—The King's Cottage is nearly fluided, and in readjust to receive His Majesty.

AUCHBENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

On Saturday se'unight an Inquisition was held at the Key Tavern in Bell-street, Paddington, on the body of Sareh Samner, aged about 40 years, the wife of a milkman. There were fourteen witnesses examined. It appeared that the husband of the deceased had two other wives before her; that at Christman last he occupied a house in Stephen's Buildings, Bell-street; he lived unhappily with the deceased, and heat her shockingly; after Christmas day she was missing, when he gave out that she went to her friends in the country, and afterwards he said she died, and was fouried in the country; to others he said she was buried by the parish, having died in the workbouse. A man named Smith, whom he had made his confident, called at lodgings be had taken in Cato-street, Edgware-road, to see a box of clothes, and found a young woman, whom he at first took for his daughter; but an explanation taking place, she said she married him since the death of his last wife. The people in the house next to the one which he occupied were aumoyed by a stench, and applied to the landlord to have some water which inundated the kitchen conveyed to the comsmon-sewer. Thursday last a man was sent into the kitchen for that purpose, and in feeling with his spade, he found the body of the deceased in a most horrid state of putrefaction; her nose was entirely off, and there appeared a wound in the neck, as if perforated By the prongs of a pitchfork. She had her clothes on, a few pance in her pocket, and some pawnbrokers' duplicates. The husband was sent for, but he expressed no alarm or emotion.

The Coroner sunmed up the evidence, and the Jury had considerable difficulty to come to a decision; but at last they returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the husband, who was immediate ly taken into custody.

On Tursday morning at Thothill-fields Fair, whilst some young ruen and women were amusing themselves in a swing, which was going with great velocity, a young woman was nitched beadfare-most from the machine. She was taken up in a state of invensibility, and carried to the hospital, where it was discovered that shoulder was dislocated, and her arm and collar bone broken. Sho remains in the hospital in a very dangerous state; and about the came time, a young man who was passing one of those dangerous play things, was struck on the eye with great force, by which the we was completely forced out of the socket, and he was rendered pseusible for a long time. He was also carried to the hospital.

On the 1st of July will be published, No. 1, of a New Periodical Work, entitled,

THE CABINET REPOSITORY of LITERATURE and the ARTS.

No pains nor expense will be spared to render it a Work acceptable to the fashionable and intelligent reader; some of the first literary and scientific men in the country are engaged to conduct and support it.

The Articles will chiefly consist of original matter, and, we trust, will not easily be found to afford agreeable recreation, but to contain much valuable and unried information.

Whatever in fashloughla clibes in the contained of the co and unried information. Agreement the second residence in this country or on the Continent, in Dress, Manners, Education, or the Polite Arts, will be noticed and dissussed with the greatest liberality, and without the slightest degree of parchality. It will, however, be sur-study to avoid every thing personal, and to render our publication worthy of the patronage of every class of the community, and every iriend to morality. Many of the Articles will have a permanent interest, and such as accord a temporary nature will be found to retate to subjects which the fashionable world are always disposed to consider of in portance.

reciate to aubjects which the fashionable world are always disposed to consider of is portance.

It has efter (and justiv) been remarked, that, although every Article of Trade in this Country has lately been reduced in price, yet Books and other Literary Publications have suffered no diminution. This single circumstance cannot but preclude many from enjoying the pleasurenand advantages arising from the study and cultivation of Letters. In order to remove, in some measure, this obstacle to Literary Amusement, The CABINET REPOSITURY of LITERATURE and the ARTS will be published at the low price of 1s. 6d.

Each Number will contain 72 pages of letter-press, elegantly printed on the bot-pressed paper, and embelished with three heautiful coloured Plates; one representing the fashiounble Bresses of the Ladies; another that of the Geottlemen; and the third, some new or uncommon subject connected with the Acts or Sciences.

the Arts or Sciences.

After the explanation we have given of the Plan upon which this Work is to be conducted and exceuted, we shall just remark, that it will not only be found to be the sheapest periodical publication published for the last twenty-five years, but one of the most entertaining and merial. It is, therefore, to be about that it will meet the patronage and support of all true friends to Literature and the Arts.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY, THURSDAY.

Rowe v. Alderman Wood.—Mr. Knight stated that a motion was made when the Lord Chancellor last sat, for a further time spe-cially to answer the plaintiff's bill, which had been filed in February last, and also to stay the proceedings on the process issued for want of that answer, he then consented that no steps should be taken with that process until the defendant's motion had been heard; but as that now stands over indefinitively, he requested his Lordship would name a time when the defendant's answer was to be put upor

Mr. Sidebottom said he had been exceedingly assiduous in preparing the answer, but which was not yet complete; he would, however, undertake to furnish it by the time his Lordship should appoint.

The Lord Chancellor.—Shall we say now then?

Mr. Sidebottom observed that he had at this time drawn three or four hundred sheets of the answer, and he believed he could flatter himself that he had got half through it, but the shortest possible time that it would take to put it into a condition to be sworn, would be a month.

The Lord Chancellor-If you wish for time you must make a motion for it.

Mr. Knight said that it would be recollected that the motion to have a receiver appointed of the mines had been refused; that the balances said to be due to the defendant had been overpaid, and he was fighting to get over the long vacation before he filed his answer.

The Lord Chancellor—Take a fortnight's time to answer, and if more time is then required you must apply to the Court.

Mr. Sidebottom feared he must be compelled to trouble his Lordship.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, THURSDAY.

WAKLY v. BARRON AND OTHERS.—This was an action of asmpett against the defendants, Directors of the Hope Fire Assurance Company, to recover a loss by fire in the plaintiff's house, No. 5, Argyll-street, Oxford-street, on the 27th August, 1820, under a policy of Assurance, executed for 12001. on household goods, &c. on the 9th of May, 1820.

The particulars of the cases have already been before the public. The plaintiff, a young man, of 26 years of age, had been a surgeon, in Argyll-street, where he had taken a house, No. 5, in December 1819; and then insured his furn ture, plate, linen, &c. in the defendants' office for 6001. In the month of February, 1820, he mar-ried a Miss Goodchild, the daughter of a vespectable gentleman of that mame, residing at Hammersmith; and in consequence of additional operty then purchased, he doubled his it gurance to the amount of Property then purchased, he doubled his in wife was from bome.

He was then all sted with inflammation in at her father's house. He was flathis eyes, and had sent his two cert and wife, to bed, inling to relieve the pain in his analysing leaches to his tenning to reneve me pain is as expect, applying seaches to his temples, which he did accordingly; and when he was retiring to bed, about half-past twelve at night, he was called to the door by a person who desired his immediate attendance upon a Mr. Ivall, an unkeeper in the City, an old patient of the plaintiff's. He excused himself by saying that it was impossible for him to leave his house that night from indisposition, but that he would wait on Mr. Ivall in the morning. The person at the door then said he had run very fast, was warm, and asked for some small beer to drink. The plaintiff gave him his choice of beer or cyder; the man chose the latter. He was let in; the plaintiff wrapped a towel round his head, and went down stairs to draw some cycler, leaving the stranger in the hall, and on his return up the kitchen stairs he received a violent blow on the head which deprived him of his senses. On recovering about two hours afterwards, as he supposed, he found the house in flames, and was almost suffocated with heat and smoke. He attempted to escape by the front of the house, but could not advance from the density of the smoke; he then crawled into the back kitchen, and in the terror of the moment he raised himself by means of a meat screen to a sky-light, broke the glass, and escaped into the adjoining house. The house was discovered to be on fire between one and two in the morning; the neighbourhood was alarmed, and the plaintiff's servants escaped in a state of nudity. The plaintiff himself was missing for about three quarters of an hour, and was at length found in the passage of the adjoining house, covered with blood, his clothes wet, with two or three wounds, as from a dagger, on his breast, and in a state of mental derangement. He was taken to a neighbour's house, and medical assistance pro-cured. He afterwards sent in his claim for the loss, the house and furniture being completely destroyed. His loss was estimated at 16001, and he delivered in vouchers for goods destroyed to the amount of about 10001. The defendants resisted the claim on account of the extraordinary and apparently incredible manner in which the fire was supposed to have occurred. The defendants now resisted the claim on two grounds: first, that the plaintiff bad attempted to support his claim by fraud and perjury, contrary to the previsions of the policy; and second, that he was himself the in-

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

The Sale of Poor Houses and the Irish Stamp Duties' Bills were brought up from the Commons and read a first time.

The Earl of Coventry presented a petition from Tewkesbury, praying for a revision of the Criminal Code. It was laid on the tuble.—Adjourned.

TUESDAY.

Mr. Sergeant Blossett was heard for the appellant in the Strathmore Peerage case, and Mr. Wetherall in reply. Further proceedings on Tuesday next.

Marquis of Lansdown postponed his motion re

Foreign Slave Trade to Monday next, and the Earl of Darnley his motion respecting the Navy to Tuesday.

The Earl of Darnley called the attention of the House to the mode of supplying the Public Offices in Ireland with Stationery. He had moved for certain papers on the subject, from which he found that the present Lord Mayor of Dublin was the person who supplyed Government. A patent had been granted by the Lord-Lieuteuant of Ireland in 1780, in lieu of one granted in 1750, for serving the Public Offices in Ireland with Stationery—the total amount of that supply for the last ten years was 228,6061. 17s. 84d. which formed an average of 35,1291, per annum. Half of that amount he contended could be saved to the public by another mode of supplying the offices. The Noble Earl then read various parts of the Report shewing instances of great inaccuracies. In one instance, the charge for ruling was 6001, which ought to have been done for 301.—The same person had offered to do for 501. what had been charged 1,5001. The Commissioners of Excise had discovered that books furnished to their offices ought to have been bound in vellum, but were bound in an inferior manner; the amount of that fraud was 1,1921.; he admitted, that it had been done without the knowledge of Mr. Bradley King, the Patentee. He enumerated other instances of negligence and overcharge, and moved several Resolutions declaratory of the points in his statement, and that the public had suffered materially from a monopoly vicious in principle.

Lord Sidmouth observed, that the Noble Earl had admitted that Mr. Bradley King stood clear of fraud; but the charge of negligence was justly applied to the officers under him. Mr. King had always been anxious for enquiry into his conduct, and had even presented a memorial to the Lord Lieutenant for that purpose, and offered over and over again to refund the overcharges;—the Lord Lieutenant after examining all the papers, had declared Mr. King stood clear of connivance with the Agent in the fraud; but that he should make up all the deficiencies which had been done. There was no proof of direct fraud, but there was of gross error. The Noble Viscount under all the circumstances moved the previous

The claims of the Earl of Ormond, and Viscounts Molesworth and Doneraile to vote at the Election of Peers for Ireland, were allowed in the Committee of Privileges.

The Irish Prisons Regulation, the Poor Employment, the Irish Deeds Stamp Duties, the Justices of the Peace Acting, and the Irish Insolvents Relief Bills, were passed.

The Marquis of Lansdown moved the second reading of the Penal Laws Bill, substituting transportation in lieu of death for robbing in dwelling-houses, on canals, &c. The Noble Marquis enforced the necessity of agreeing to this Bill as a principle of humanity—a general opinion now prevailed that the punishment of death was too severe, an opinion which had led to immunity of crime; as in the Excise Laws, where the Solicitor had conceived that severity had frustrated the object of the laws, since rigour had d the danger to which property was exposed. He instanced the verdicts of Juries found contrary to the principles of the particular law, on the score of mercy, as reasons for altering the present mode of punishment by death.

The Lord Chanceller opposed the motion for the second reading on the ground, that it would not operate to prevent the increase of crime. With respect to the prevalence of opinion in favour of lenient punishment, he (the Lord C.) previous to his being called upon to attend to the Recorder's Reports, had been of a similar feeling; but nineteen years of inves i ration of the e reports had led him to think differently. There was no way of legislating on the subjects of burglary but in general terms, which, however, might bear hardly in general cases. Among the class of erimes it was lamen. able to see to what an extent depredations by servants on their master's property had come,—property was taken by those sort of servants to set them up in trade, and thus they were established at their muster's cost in business. In prosecutions he had never seen the least disinclination either in the prosecutor or jury to lean to the side of mercy; and, therefore, he could not give his consent to any alteration in the existing law.

The Earl of Caernaryon, Lord Calthorpe, and Lord King, supported

Lord Sidmouth observed, that the proportion of convictions to executions was as one to thirteen, and this demonstrated the lessty by which the law was administered. In the present state of so-ciety, property must be protected; for, with respect to tradesmen, they were robbed from week to week, month to month, and year to year, hy servants, in whom they placed the greatest confidence, and in these circumstances the law must be supported.

The Marquis of Lansdown replied, and the House divided:—

HOUSE OF COMMONS. MONDAY.

Mr. Goock presented the Report from the Agricultural Committee, which was ordered to be printed.

On the question for reading the Tobacco Duties Bill a second time, Sir F. Burdett moved an amendment, " that it be read a second time this day six months." On a division-For the second reading now, 75-For the Amendment, 43. The Bill was read a second time and committed.

Lord Nugent gave notice that he would early in the next Session bring in a Bill, for better securing the administration of justice in Tobago.

In answer to a question from Mr. H. Sumner, respecting the pulling down London Bridge,

Mr. Alderman Wood observed, that there had been no time for the Corporation to come to a decision on the subject since the Committee had made their Report. He had reason to hope the Corporation would agree with the Report; the Committee had almost unanimously agreed to the necessity of erecting a new Bridge.

Mr. Curioen moved the Order of the Day for going into a Committee on the Husbandry Horse Tax Repeal Bill. He had to state to the House, that no opposition would be given to this Bill by Ministers. It was gratifying to him and must be to the country to see the handsome manner in which the Noble Marquis had acceded to the opinion of the House.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, he had reserved his assent to the Bill until he had ascertained the sentiments of the House—he should not oppose the opinious of a majority in favour of the repeal of the tax, although he felt they were making a great sacrifice to the general interests of the country.

Mr. Birch noticed that some Gentlemen who supported the repeal of this tax, had voted for all the estimates in the supply, which according to Ministers were on the lowest possible scale; if this were the case, some new tax must be in the contemplation of the Right Hon. Gent. to supply the deficiency occasioned by the repeal of the present tax.

The Marquis of Londonderry observed, that the tax in the present situation of the country was most important, and its recessity of the most urgent nature; but the opinion of the House and the distresses felt by the agricultural interests had induced then to look at the loss of the tax with less regret. It was fallacious to suppose that any general relief would be afforded by its repeal. respect to proposing any new tax in lieu of the Agricultural Horse Tax, he could relieve the Hon. Members anxiety on that head, as undoubtedly the repeal would be a boon to the country unaccompanled by any thing which would be likely to countered its effects. He hoped, however, the House would bear in mind that this tax had been given up, when his Right Hon. Friend next Session should, in making his statements of the economical arrangements of the Government, from a Revenue by no means too abundant for the necessities of the State.

Mr. Baring could not compliment Ministers either on the score of their liberality or wisdom with respect to the present concession—the Right Hon. Gent. had not made the present sacrifice without great reluctance, but he had brought upon himself this sudden attack by his boastings of the flourishing state of the Revenue. In fact, the Right Hon. Gent. had done what many people had done who possessed more money than wisdom, he had brought a set of thieves about him who robbed him of his property.

The Marquis of Londonderry thought the Hon. Member (Mr. Baring) was desirous in future that no Minister should give up a tax, as far as his ungracious remarks could operate to that effect. Col. Wood hoped the exceptions would be extended to those persons who obtained a livelihood by carrying ore from the pit's mouth in Wales, on horses.

Mr. S. Wortley denied that he had been inconsistent in voting for the estimates, and for the repeal of this tax.

Lord Milton admitted, that the repeal was a boon, and be would not bereafter deny, that concessions had been made to the agricultural interests. The landed interest could not now complain they were not represented in that House; the agriculturalist would experience only a temporary benefit by the repeal.

Mr. Gooch believed the repeal of the tax would be productive of the greatest advantage to the country.

Mr. Lockhart was of the same opinion.

Mr. Gipps congratulated the House upon the repeal. He thoughs e supplies having been granted, it would be unfair to call for the reduction of the tax at present. He supposed it would take place from the 5th of April next.

Mr. Peel dissented from the general tone of congratulation which seemed to prevail. He believed it would have been for the best interests of the country that it should have remained, and would have voted for it.

Mr. Grenfell was anxious to know how the deficiency was to be made good. Whether the repeal of the tax would have the effects of reducing the sum laid out in Stock for the reduction of the ma-

The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied in the negative, be-cause the reduction would be made from the Consolidated Fund in gross, and not from the particular fund to which the Hon. Member had alluded. With respect to the commencement of the repeal, if he were to choose, he should say it had better commence from the 5th of April, 1822.

Mr. Curwen observed, that it had always been his intention date the repeal from April last. He thought it should be carried into immediate operation. The Hon. Member expressed his acknewledgments for the handsome manner in which Ministers had behaved, and thought that the repeal should commence from the 5th of July next. With these feelings, he would consent to give up the Bill to them, wishing that they should have the full credit of passing it through the House.

Mr. Brougham denied that Ministers were entitled to credit for aling the tax, for the repeal had been wrung from them.

Mr. Colbourne said, the deficiency would not be experienced till next year, as the assessed taxes were always one year in advance.

The Bill was then committed for Wednesday.

On the Order of the Day for receiving the Report of the Committee on the grant of an annuity to his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence being movel,

Mr. Hume objected to the allowances granted to the Royal Family of late years, which were quite inconsistent with the means of the country. If the Duke of Clarence received any allowance beyond the 24,000l. a year allowed to each of the other branches of the Royal Family, it ought to be made up out of the Pension Lists placed at the disposal of the Crown. He moved a resolution to the effect of restricting the allowance in addition to 3,500l. as competent, but advising that any further sum should be paid out of the

The Marquis of Londonderry was of opinion that no grant could be made out of the pension list, exceeding 1,2001.

Sir J. Coffin declared that he was indebted to his Royal Highness for every thing he possessed. There was no officer in the service more master of his profession than his Royal Highness.

Mr. Curwen said, the declaration of the Hon, and Gallant Memher did him howour, but he thought it would be too much to ask the Royal Family to share in the burthens of the country.

Mr. Lockhart opposed the grant.

Mr. Monck opposed the grant.—The amendment was negatived. The Report was then brought up and read:—
Mr. Curves moved, that the resolution of the Committee be read a second time that day three months. On a division the numbers were—For the amendment, 18—Against it, 144—Majority, 128.

The House afterwards divided on an amendment of Mr. Hume's, for reducing the grant to 3,5001.—For the amendment, 30—For the original motion, 167-Majority, 137.

Mr. Bernal protested against granting the arrears. He moved that the grant of 6,000l. a year be made from April, 1821, instead

The Marquis of Londonderry put it to the Hon. Member, whether the decision just come to was not conclusive, and a pretty good bint to him as to the vote which he was about to call for. The sum in question ought not to be viewed as arrears, but merely in the light of a retrospect of the grant. He wished Gentlemen opposite not to confine their scruples on this head to purticular persons and occasions. When the Queen was lately to be provided for, an Hon. Gent. opposite had said he would not hear of her refusal to accept the provision offered by Parliament, but would leave it deposited in the Exchequer, for her Majesty to take up when she chose. Thus, twenty years after, she might have taken up the whole accumula-tion. The Queen's annuity was dated from the time of the late King's death, when she became Queen Consort, and Parliament was not called upon now to do more than they had done before on the like occasions. It was but equitable that his Royal Highness should not suffer a loss from an honourable self-derial. He felt that he could not reside in this country, and maintain the dignity of a Prince of the blood, without incurring debts, unless his pension

Lord Milton thought the grant should have been preceded by a Message from the Crown.

Mr. Curves was of opinion, the case of the Queen and the present one was quite different. He should like to know what had been done with the residue of the late King's property. He saw no reason why the debts of the Duke of Clarence should not be paid out of that fund. In answer to the observation of an Honourable Member, that no official notification had been received of the Queen's having taken up the provision granted her by Parliament,

The Murquis of Londonderry and, her Majesty had taken up the whole amount of her income from the time of its first commence-

Mr. Abererombie opposed the grant.
Mr. Williams asked why the Royal Duke did not come forward and make his claim two years since, when he found it necessary for the support of his station.

J. Graham replied, that his Royal Highness would have so, but but been advised to the contrary.

Mr. Denman complained of the manner in which the Noble Lord had introduced the Queen's name, who was entitled to 90,000L of arrears, since she refused 15,000L of her income in 1814.

Mr. Alderman Wood also complained of the illiberality used to-wards the Queen. Ministers had promised to provide her with horses, carriages, a house, plate, &c. and yet when she received the five quarters of the grant made her by Parliament, they deducted for those conveniences, and instead of receiving 60,0001, she only received 12,000l.

The Hon. Member was interrupted in the midst of his harang by the call of Question! Question!—The House divided—For the amendment, 81—Against it, 131—Majority for the original motion, 50.

In a Committee of Supply,

Mr. C. Grant moved a variety of grants for the service of Ire-land. Among the sums were:—

10,0001, for the Education of the Poor. 7.0001, for the Dublin Society.

9,2301, for building Churches and Globe House

On moving that a sum of 18,4611, he granted for purchasing

Mr. S. Rics opposed the grant and divided the House.—For the motion, 48—Against it, 11—Majority, 37.

The following sums were then voted:—
11,0001. for Widening the Streets of Dublin.

2,5001. for expences of the Farming Society.

The House then resumed and the Committee reported progress.

There being only thirteen Members present at four o'clock, the

WEDNESDAY.

The Naval Stores Bill, the Vagrant Bill, and the Coul Drawback Duty Bill, the Loan Bill, the Irish Trensury Bills Bill, and the Exchequer Bills Bill, were severally passed.

In reply to a question put by Mr. Gruttan, on the subject of parochial taxation in Ireland, Mr. C. Grant said, the subject would be considered in a Committee next Session. Mr. Bright presented a petition from certain inhabitants of Bristol, deprecating any infringement on the independence of Parliament, by allowing Members to retain their seats, who held offices

Mr. F. Buston brought before the House the practice adopted by the women in India of immolating themselves on the deaths of their husbands: Within the lust four years, in the Presidence of Fort William alone, no less than 2366 females had perished in this manner, but no account had been given of private immolations, fo these were public ones. The practice was gaining ground under the British Government, while the French, Dutch, and Banish setents had put it down. Females, even under age, prescribes the law, had sacrificed themselves; and in one instance, a girl of eight years old, had been numbered among those victims. There was no doubt, all these evils arose out of the ignorance of the people. To cure them, the diffusion of knowledge and education was necessary; and he was happy to say, some progress had al-ready been made in that respect. He concluded with moving for copies and extracts of all communications received from India respecting the burning of widows.

Mr. B. Bathurst observed, that since the regulations with respect to burning had taken place, the number of victims had doubled. He thought it would be better for the House to trust to the natural operation of civilization and knowledge, to correct the evil. He hoped the Hon. Member would not press the subject.

Mr. Wilberforce regretted the exertions of the India Governors to abolish the drendful practice had failed. He was convinced, how-ever, that no people were more willing to receive instruction in manners and religion than the Hindoos.

Mr. Hume was of opinion that these practices were adopted for private interest. If any of the relatives of the party to be sacrificed could prevail upon her not to shrink, then after her death, her property became their own. He thought one of the most effectual modes of stopping the practice would be by granting burning li-

Lord Binning agreed in the opinions expressed by his Right Hon. Friend, Mr. Bathurst, and was satisfied that the interferen Company had only made things worse.

Mr Canning said, that whatever shades of difference there might be in the opinions entertained on this subject, there seemed to be afford the highest degree of gratification to every feeling of human nature, if this abomizable custom were put down; and the second was, that the attempt should not be made by coercive measures on the nort of the Compuse. He had is a former Section when the the part of the Company. He had in a former Session, when the Hon. Gentleman did him the honour to consult him, he hoped civilly, but unequivocally, dissuaded him from bringing the subject before the House. The reason was that the information which could then be produced must be defective in one national point, viz. as to the effect of the measures then adopted by the Government of India to put a stop to these practices. It was not then the case as it was now, that the matter had attracted public attention and discussion in India. The Hon. Member, (Mr. F. Buxton) in whose benevolent mind all the evils of human nature met a ready attention, argued that any thing in the performance of this sacrifice, which bore appearance of coercion, vitiated the proceedings on the part of the Hindoos, and justified interference. This he (Mr. Canning) denied, and to illustrate his argument, would suppose they had to deal with some of the customs known to prevail in Europe. He referred to a custom prevalent in Catbolic countries, of immuring human beings in numeries, the act being said to be voluntary. It was well known, however, that many who were thus doomed to spend the remainder of their days in cloistered seclusion, were too young to judge for themselves, and in many cases were averse from such a destiny. He asked the Hon. Member whether, if called upon to legislate as conquerors over a Catholic country, and it was desired to put down this practice, he would advise sending an officer of justice to the grate of a Convent on the day of the ceremony, to catechise the youthful victim as to the state of her inclinations, and upon the least appearance of hesitation, to tear her from the sacrifice? It would be acting in the way least calculated to insure the object desired, by irritating the jealousy, calling up the hostile opposition, and finally strengthening the prejudices of the natives. And were they to suppose that the feelings of the Hindoos were less acute, or their natures different, from those he had supposed in this imeginary case? He did not mean to say, that these superstitions might not be put down by reason; but he insisted that they must beware of going counter to the religious prejudices of the natives. We had conquered this country, and our subsequent domination of it presented a signal and splendid instance of preserving all its internal regulations, and above all those which related to religious matters, at the same time that we found that stream of light and civilization upon it which would in the end bring about that emancipation from our yoke, which had always been foreseen, and which every day The diffusion of know emed to exhibit as more practicable. ledge would dispel this illusion, and discolve the charm by which we swayed their hearts, and we must be content to pay, as the price of truth, the loss of dominion. He hoped, whenever that period arrived, we should be found as good, as wise, and as forbearing, as they now pictured us; but, at all events, he (Mr. C.) counselled that we should not, by adopting rash and coercive measures, in a case like the present, tear the mask from our own face, and despoil: ourselves of the pleasing consolation that we had been the glorious instrument of divine illumination in bringing about the separation.

Colonel Money thought that it would strengthen the hands of Government by putting an end to these abominable practices in a summary manner, and it was a mistake to suppose they could not be put down by force, as there was an instance on record in which Lord Wellesley, by sending a military force to one part of our Indian dominions, succeeded in putting an effectual stop to the practice of destroying children.

Mr. W. Smith agreed with the Hon. Member who spoke last in thinking that these abominable practices might be put down by

Mr. Buaton replied; the motion was carried: and the Papers ordered to be laid on the table

Mr. Wilberforce postponed his motion on the Slave Trade till Tuesday next.

Mr. C. Hutchinson moved "an humble Address to His Majesty, requesting him to use his influence and authority to secure to the minor States of Europe their undoubted and, till now, never disputed right to choose their own form of Government, and also to remonstrate with his Allies on the assumption of powers neve before claimed, which introduce new principles into the laws of nations, in direct opposition to all former practice and precedent, and which if persevered in and acted upon, would not only prevent the establishment of all rational liberty, but tend to render tual despotisms of the worst kind." The Hon. Member The Hon. Member preinced the motion with a long speech, in which he said, that he conceived to be tremer melv sa with the reprehensible principles adopted by the different Courts of Europe. The Noble Lord might interpose his great influence to avert the threatened dangers which amounted, to all appearance, to a total disorganization of society. He was aware the Noble Lord would say, that this Government was no party to the Holy Alliance, and therefore not answerable for its acts. He charged Russia with views of aggrandizement for the last 100 years, and then went on to state, that the various refusals of Ministers to then went on to state, that the various refusals of Ministers to enquire into alledged grievances were proofs of their acting on a similar system with the Holy Alliance—noticed the attack on Naples, which be considered on a par with any thing Buonaparte had done. He further contrasted the conduct of the Allies with the principles for which they had formerly contended, and offered to supply any number of proofs that might be required to substantiate what he had advanced. He had no doubt that if the Emperor of Russin could pour his troops into Spain with the same facility that Austria could throw hers into Naples, he was confident that he would do so to overturn the Constitution recently established in that country. If the Noble Lord did not disayow all participation in such views, it would appear to the world that he was neither more or less than a party to them. He compared the political character of England now, with that which it had beented up to 1793, and complained that it retained no longer those claim respect of other countries which belonged to if then. Its military character he wished to keep distinct from its political character; but speaking of the latter, he maintained that if we were not par-ties to the acts of the Continental Powers, the unnatural war in which this country had been engaged, had reduced it to such a state of weakness, that it could not interfere as formerly, to prevent ensures to which it was opposed in principle, from being carried into execution.

The Marquis of Londonderry did not think it necessary to follow the Hon. Member through his various statements. In reviewing the system which had been acted upon, the Hon. Gentleman had been pleased to attach infinitely more importance to the share which he (the Marquis of Londonderry) had had in the events comprehended within the period of which he had spoken. For a considerable portion of that period, he (Lord Londonderry) had certainly en in a situation which precluded him from doing much mischief. He might, however, be allowed to say, that he had not that love of tyranny which the Hon. Member's speech would impute. The acts to which he had been a party, so far as his understanding enabled him to judge of them, were of a character opposite to that which had been given to them,—at least he could not but view them in a directly opposite light. He was as friendly to rational freedom as the Hon. Member or any other Gentleman could be, and as anxious to support the character and influence of this country; but he could not agree that we had a right to be the active regulators of the affairs of all the countries in Europe. He must deprecate the idea that no government was to stir but in accordance with our feelings—that no State Paper was to be issued which was not savetly such as that However that the street of the transfer to but they ware to be exactly such as that House could approve; but they were to be called upon to express disapprobation, and in fact to intermeddle with matters which they did not understand, and of which still less could they comprehend the policy. He (the Marquis of London-derry) was not prepared to follow the Hon. Gentleman in the general and vague course which he pursued. The particular questions to which the Hon. Gent. alluded were already most amply and elaborately discussed. The question of the Treaty of Vienna, for instance, received the amplest discussion. The question of Naples had been most elaborately discussed: and so also was the question regarding Buonaparte's confinement in the Island of St. Helena. If the Hon. Gent. wished to discuss those over again, or had taken any other regarding to the Market and the specific of the Market and Island. any other specific or particular question, he (the Marquis of Londonderry) was prepared to meet him; but it was unterly impossible for him to form any opinion on the Hon. Gentleman's proposition.

Major General Wilson supported the motion.

Mr. Hutchinson replied and the House divided.—For the mo-on, 28—Against it, 117—Majority, 88.

The Order of the day for the third reading of the Bill for the better Relief of the Poor, was then read.

Mr. Calerast said, the principles proposed in the Bill could not aniopted. The burthens said to be created by the present Poor Laws, he thought greatly exaggerated. He was irrendly to a com-pulsory levy for the poor, the first principle of which this Bill went pulsory tery for the poor, the first principle of which this bin went to cut up by the roots. In the case of manufactories, the measure would produce one of two alternatives—starvation, or intestine commotions. He thought funded property ought to bear its share for the support of the poor. He contended that, in most parts of the kingdom the rates had been reduced—that the poor themselves were in many respects auxious to make provision for old age. He stated, that in the town of Leicester, 17,000l. had been collected for the poor, of which 9,806l. was furnished by the mechanics of the town, who were in fact the poor themselves. This fact of itself would upset the principle of this Bill, which assumed that the poor of themselves had no exertion. He would, however, vote for work. He was confident the Bill would not pass this Session, and, speaking openly, he believed there were not fifty Members in the House who wished that it should pass.

Mr. Mansfield (Member for I. eicester) confirmed this statement.

Mr. Lockhart supported the Bill.
Mr. Bernal opposed it, conceiving it would, if passed, lead to endless litigation.

Mr. F. Lewis was friendly to the main principle of the measure, and the debate was adjourned.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

It is understood, that the King will take his departure for Ireland on the 1st of August. On his return, will land near Dumbarton Castle, in Scotland, and proceed for the Duke of Montrose's, and from thence go to Dunkeld Castle, and return by Stirling to Edin-

On Monday, at two o'clock, the King left his Palace, in Pall Mull, escorted by a party of Light Horse, for his lodge, at WindsorWhen His Majesty visits Wales, a new Order of Knighthood is expected to be created; the title to be, the Order of the Ancient Knights of Cambria, and the Ribbon of the Order to be of lock green, with white edges.

The Duke of Cambridge will reside at the King's Palace, in St. James's Park, during his stay in England. Apartments are pre-paring for the reception of his Royal Highness.

CORONATION CEREMONIES.—The preparations for the festival in the Hall are proceeding on the most extensive scale. Quantities of a sort of double chair, or settee, with backs, have been sent into the Hall, to be placed on each side of the long tables. They are stuffed, and have red coverings. For the furnishing of the tables one manufacturer has orders for 300 dozen of plates, 600 dozen of spoons, &c. and another tradesman has an order for as many knives and forks.

Coronation Chair.— This ancient sent, which is generally known by the name of St. Edward's Chair, is what is placed before the altar, and is that in which the King is seated on the solemnity of the Coronation being performed. It is now being fitted up for the purpose, according to orders received on Saturday; the style adopted during the last 400 years (all the documents, illustrative of this curious and interesting subject, having been very recently discovered) will be followed. This being the first Coronation since the Union, there will be additional ornaments in the back of the chair; the ornaments will now consist of an equal admixture of the rose. the thistle, and the shamrock Coronation Precedents .- The forms that are generally followed in the several Coronation arrangements now in progress, are those pursued on the Coronation of James II. Lord Harrowby, the President of the Court of Claims, stated this fact on Saturday, when adverting to the case of the City of London. The account of the Coronation of James II, is the most minute narrative on that subject that exists. The crowning of that Mountch was performed exso extended and magnificent a scale, that a writer on this subject, in 1761, observes, "it was questionless designed for the model of all future Coronations, and accordingly, by the King's express. command, was recorded in the most pompous manner, which has been followed with little variation in the several Coronations since." In the course of those valuable researches, however, that have recently taken place, as the contents of the State Papers, a minute and interesting manuscript account of the Coronation of James I. was discovered a few days since. It gives, what was much wanted, some setails on the subject of costume. It has been laid before Lord Sidmouth, who forwarded the curious munuscript to the Coropation Commissioners.

The following is part of a letter just received:—
ROME, MAY 25.—I have to lament the loss of Mr. Denis, the late British Consul at Civita Vecchia, who died on the 19th inst. ofter a short illness. His remains, attended by a few followers, were inread by an English gentleman. The regret I feel for my friend is greatly augmented by the humiliating circumstances which accompanied his obsequies; for, when I say there were a few follow-ers; I mean those who evinced a Christian-like deportment;—he was indeed followed by a great part of the inhabitants, but in a tunnituous manner, with hissing and shouting. The police officers being so remiss as to winess this disgraceful scene with indifference, and when the house of the deceased was nearly blockaded, said they could not interfere without express orders from their superiors.

These are the people, who, intolerant to those that profess not their own faith, on every occasion, demand for themselves unquali-Sed concessions, but towards those of a different persuasion steel their hearts against the common impulses of gratit ide and humanity, and with relentless berbarity assail the lifeless body of the Representative of that Government to which they have recently owed the preservation of their country, and, instead of honouring the poor relie, oppose an interment they would not disallow a brute animal.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.—The attention of the Public is respectfully invited towards the New Series of this Journal whish was commenced the list January, on a new and very improved piain; the Original Papears being printed on a large Type; similar to those in the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews, and the Miscellaneous Departments so arranged as to form a distinct Volume at the end of the year; thus combining in the same Work, the several characters of a Magasine, a Review, and an Anneak Register.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, June 24.

IT will be remembered by our readers, that we have invariably abstained from alluding (except very slightly) to the prosecutions which have been instituted against us,-quite sure of justice in the constituted Courts of our country, and equally certain of the indelicacy of attempting to prejudge our own case, or prejudice a Jury; but it must be permitted to us to make one observation upon the criminal information moved for by Mr. Scarlett in the case of Lord Jersey.

Sincerely and honestly we admire Lady Jersey,—admire her talents and qualities,—and never, as we are quite sure, have indirectly insinuated the slightest imputation upon her character. That she is not exempt from follies is most true. (and let us inquire who is), and we might-but we never did -have perhaps raised a laugh or two at her expence; but for vice, except the vice of meddling in politics; which, lady, is assuredly no virtue, we repeat we never hinted at it.

We were convinced that her respectability was put in enpardy by the course she was taking; and that her Lady. ship is of the same opinion appears by her having abandoned it. Whatever may be the result of the cause which is instituted against us, we have the satisfaction of knowing, that; let our principal motive for having written as we have done be what it might, a wish to save Lady Jersey from degrade. tion and disgrace was not the least. The Me in a

There has been but little fluctuation during the last week in the public securities, but in the former part of the week a slight depression took place. This is chiefly attributed to the rumour which was then circulated of the Sovereigns of Runia and Austria intending to interfere between the contending parties in Turkey; but there is not now that degree of credit attached to the report which appeared at first, consequently, a trifling improvement was visible in the Funds, and the highest prices during the week were 764 for Reduced, and 764 4 for the Account. Yesterday morning Consels epened at 764 for Reduced, and 774 for the Account, and after a trifling fluctuation left off at 76 for Reduced, and 764 for the Account. The Continental securities have also experienced a slight depression, which has also tended to depress those of this country, the French Funds being done on Wednesday at 86. 65, and the Neapolitan at 72.

THE QUEEN.

We make the following extract from the Montage CHRONICLE of last Wednesday!!!

In giving an account of the Masquerade at Drury Lane. the Morning Chronicle says-

"From eight till eleven the assembling visitors were entertained with a variety of dramatic Entertainments. An appropriate Ode was recited by Mr. Cooper. "God save the King" was then sug with great applause. It was succeeded by shouts on the stage, which were replied to in a similar way from the body of the house. The interlude of Blue Devils was then acted. Mr. Rliston, as Meagrim, was received with particular marks of approba-tion, which were frequently renewed in the course of the performance. It was, however, often interrupted by bursts of laughter, provoked by the ludicrous assemblage which the boxes opened to the view. A Periwinkle Woman, with a black eye and a basket on her head, attracted much notice in the dress circle, and the poculiar elegance of her deportment excited a suspicion that the had taken the Theatre in her way home from Hammersmith."

Whether the Chronicle implies that the Queen herself w the Periwinkle Woman, or that from her basket and black eye, the Periwinkle Woman resembled the generality of her Majesty's Monday visitors, we do not exactly know: we quote the paragraph as it stands.

On Tuesday the Queen gave a dinner at Cambridge House, at which were present Mr. Austin, Lord and Lady Milton, Marquess and Marchioness of Tavistock, Lord WILLIAM Fitzgerald, Sir Ronald Fergusson, Mrs. Michael Angelo Taylor, Major-Gen. Wilson, Messrs. Brougham, Hobbes Whitbread and Taylor.

The dinner was uncommonly good and the wines and liquors of the first quality; in the course of the evening her Majesty had intended, we believe, to have sung the following parody on a popular ballad; but having delayed it too long, she was prevented from doing so, by an attack of slight indisposition to which she is unfortunately very subject.

Your Queeny has never been false, I declare, Since the last time we parted at sad St. Omer's; 30000 40 When I swore that I still would continue the same, -And gave you the Villa, that goes by your name. ... When I passed three short fortnights between decks with yes, Did I e'er give a kiss to a man of the crew? When you fell from your horse (by good luck, on your many) Your bruises I dressed, and your broth too I made.

Though I've been to the Mansion House Concert and Mansion

With Hood, and with Wood, and with Walthman and all; In silence I sat all the music to hear, And mourned thy sad absence with many a tear; Can Hood, or can Wood, like my Bergy be prized? For thee, Mayor and Aldermen all are despised! Then be constant, and when your dear life is at state; Your wounds still I'll dress, and your broth too I'll make:

HUMBUG.

IT is allowed on all hands that this Paper has been the chief, perhaps sole cause of the exposure of that great humbug which was carrying on with the most uninterrupted success when it was established. Since we have succeeded in our first effort, we shall continue to expose all humbugs likely to militate against the interests of the country, and, in pursuance of that determination, we cannot but call the tention of our readers to a long-winded article which appeared in the Morning Post newspaper of Friday se nnight; in which it will be seen that a society called " The Betkel Union" is established, for the purpose of inflicting unnatural restraints upon human nature, of curtailing a numerous and deserving body of His Majesty's subjects of their legitimate rights and privileges; and, in short, of practising humbug, in its fullest extent, for the benefit of some half-dozen smoothfaced, lank-haired hypocrites, who, under the pretence of inproving the morals of seamen, are struggling hard to turn a penny as secretaries, or book-keepers, or committee-men, or directors, or any thing else, in this laudable institution!

We will now take a summary view of the rigmarole which I salt-beef and biscuit for six months as so inconvenience, the the capters have put forth; if rigmarole be word harsh enough to convey our horror of the spiritual quackery, bare-faced nonsense, and appalling blasphemy, which it con-

It begins thus:-

"The importance of seamen to Great Britain, as the chief commercial country of the world at present, must be indescribable. England is indebted to them principally on the following accounts: " 1. For the discovery of different parts of the world."

We are here informed of a claim of which we were certainly not previously aware, but we make a discovery by it which surprises us not a little; namely, that Christopher Columbus, Americus Vesputius, Jean Cabott, and Sebastian his son were all Englishmen; for to them, certainly, we are indebted for the discovery of most parts of the world: the fruits of our own researches in that way never having gone much beyond some unprofitable rock in the South Sea, or such a thing as Melville Island at the North Pole.

The second claim is :-

"2. For the trade, the wealth, the prosperity, and for many of the necessaries, the comforts, and the luxuries of life."

We admit the obligation-but our gratitude seems equally due to the blacksmith who makes our fire-place, or the miner who toils in the bowels of the earth to find us coals to fill it with.

The third, fourth, and fifth we also admit most cheerfully;-

" 3. For the protection of her trade and her coasts; so that while the whole Continent of Europe has experienced the herrors of a seat of war, England has only known them from report."

"4. For the rank this country holds among the maritime nations of the world, and the vast degree of influence that elevated

"5. Fer the means of communicating those sohemes and methods (abounding in this country) which have been so successful in ameliorating the natural and moral condition of mankind, and restoring social order and national fecility from confusion and

But the sixth we hesitate moon.

"6. For the conveyance of Missionaries and Bibles to every part of the world, and thus rendering efficient the benevolence and plety of this country, in supporting the Bible and Missionary Societies—" because we are inclined to think that Missionaries (who are for the most part, needy, under-bred, and ignorant people athirst for a livelihood) do an infinity of mischief wherever they come; and because, if any good arise from the carrying of such commodities, the master of a stage-coach on which any of them travel, or even the coach-master's horses themselves, are equally entitled to our gratitude. The seventh head contains a more than ordinarily large share of cant and blasphemy, and runs thus:--

" 7. For the communication of all that daily intelligence from distant lands, that encourages and stimulates the mighty exertions in this land, and produces national expectation that a day of glory is approaching, when the knowledge of IMMANUEL shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. JEHOVAH, the Lord of heaven and earth, is undoubtedly the great first cause and origin of all these invaluable blessings; but it must strike every thinking person, that mariness have been and still are employed by his Divine Providence, as the instruments in his hands, through whose exertions England is so highly distinguished, so eminently blessed. The ex-traordinary privations and calamities of the British marine to obtain for their country these advantages ought to be duly appreciated.

1. They have feurlessly braved all the dangers of the ocean, and led a life of extreme toil, hazard, and pain, and their reward has simply been in the necessaries of life. 2. Tens of thousands have perished in inhospitable climates, by extremes of heat and cold under the torrid and frozen zones; by foundering at sea; by shipwreck; by being washed or rolled overboard; by bad provisions; by storms at by general and particular actions; and by all the dangers to en are usually exposed. What am amazing sacrifice of human life is continually made to preserve and to supply us, and to give effect to our schemes of active benevalence! 3. What multi-tudes are cast on shore, debilitated, mutilated, and afflicted for life with incurable disorders, caught in the regular discharge of their uty on the mighty ocean! 4. What thousands of widows and drplans have been suddenly cast destitute on the world, who have been supplied to more forward in the most present electric and all the most forward. eeen compelled to press forward in the most painted and apparent bircumstances, equally deprived of comfort and support! Mariners cave also been exposed in a peculiar manner to temptations, which horm no small part of their calamities, to obtain the invaluable bebeen competled to press forward in the most painful and alars fnefits England enjoys.

Now, before we go on to the most absurd part of all this, pause here for a moment.—No men on earth more highly prize-more cordially esteem the character of the bold, open, liberal, free, and happy English Sailor than we dot but will these Methodists say what they mean by "the amazing sacrifice of human life continually made to supply us, and to give effect to our schemes of active benevolence?" Are these besotted fanatics, fools enough to believe that any sailor enters the Navy " to give effect to their schemes of benevolence?" or are they knaves enough to wish to impose such trash upon others?

When Lord Gambier entered the Navy, was it to serve himself or any body else?-true, it is a hazardous profession; so is the Army, and there is in both a high chivalrous feeling which prompts an officer to the greatest exertions for his country; but the common sailor, or common soldier, mowever well and ably he may do his duty afterwards, enters the service upon a calculation of pounds, shillings, and pence—as he would be a bricklayer or carpenter; and when we hear such twaddlers as Lord Calthorpe, who is at the bottom of all this, talking about seamen sacrificing their lives to promote their active benevolence, it really makes

But now comes the perfection of absurdity. Among the greatest calcumities which oppress the poor sailor is being able to obtain fruits and wine at a moderate rate, after a long voyage, is a columity, which-mark the object-is to be corrected by the Bethel Union and its myrmidons.

Another calamity is

"Their eagerness to rush to every semant gratification when they reach the shore, which is irresistibly increased unless they are under moral and religious restraint."

So that poor Jack, who proverbially finds a home and a sweet-heart in every port, is to be assailed by a Missionary the moment he sets his foot on shore, and provided with a clerical companion for the day, who, it should seem, is never to quit his charge till he sees him safe on board; his ship in the evening.

.In the mildness of their toleration, the Bethel Union denounce generally Jews, prostitutes, and publicans, who take every means to rob the sailor of his property; and broadly assert, that, to wean him from these enticing tempters, the counteracting influence of Methodists is absolutely neces-

" It has been said, there is a place of worship in the port where it has been said, tuere is a piace of worship in the part worship in the part with the may go. It is true, every herbour has such a place, and worthy ministers no doubt; but what does the soilor generally know or care about such a place? To visit this will require some strong moral or religious feelings—his labits are of a different nature. Besides, the place of worship is distant, the temptation is near; the former is probably hid in some street or square, the latter is visible on the quay, with every inviting appearance."

We do not see the truth of this observation, nor admit the general concealment of places of worship, which, if they be such places of worship as good men and good subjects should frequent, are universally marked by a tower or spire, and not uncommonly present themselves to view immediately on landing. We admit the "inviting appearance" of the quay, and Portsmouth is a case in point to which the remark applies, but it assuredly does not apply generally.

The article concludes by setting forth, that the Betkel Union, headed by Lord Gambier, wants cash; and there comes out the truth. Half a score needy dependants are to be provided for, and a manufactory of preventive parsons immediately established, who are to "meet the sailor wherever he is to be met," with the means of promoting "moral and religious improvement."

Now, only conceive the bare faced absurdity, not to say utter impossibility of such a wild scheme. Let any man stand upon the Point at Portsmouth, and see the multitude of sailors who, in the course of twelve hours, land there, either on duty or for pleasure, and then imagine a reverend antidote to be ready to attend each individual through the course of the day, to keep him from sin and drinking; or let any man who admits the possibility of carrying such a scheme into effect ask himself, or the Bethel Union, by what right they presume to inflict unnatural restraints upon men, whose services they so highly applaud? Is it to be suffered and endured, that our defenders and guardians are to be prevented from doing as they like, when every Methodist Parson is allowed with impunity to be the Bashaw of his congregation? Is not the open and venial profligacy of drinking grog, and dancing with a sweet-heart, ten thousand times less criminal than the hypocritical filth of a nocturnal love-feast, where not only licentiousness of the grossest nature is practised, but practised in the dark, and under the sanction of the very tenets Messrs. Calthorpe, Wilberforce, Gambier and Company would diffuse all over the world?

We call upon Mr. Grey Bennett, the champion of liberty, and advocate of discussion, and upon Mr. Joseph Hume, who has shewn a tender regard for the lives of his fellow creatures by quitting his profession, to interfere and call the attention of the legislature and the House of Commons to these projected innovations upon our national freedom. We are quite sure, that if government with a view to the improvement of morals were to restrict by an Act of Parliament, carpenters, shoemakers, tailors, &c. &c. to a certain modicum of liquor, or to obstruct them in their relaxation or pleasure, and appoint a multitude of preventers to attend them, we should have the whole host of Radicals making the "welkin ring" with declamations against a measure so oppressive and destructive of the natural liberty of the subject. Why then should these patriots be silent now? Why are sailors alone to be crippled. cribbed, confined?" and why should we suffer that race to whom, as the "Bethel Union says, we are so much indebted, to be exclusively doomed to the iniquitous impositions of Methodism, and the double faced tyranny of religious humbug ?"

We call the attention of Messrs. Hume and Bennett to the subject thus particularly, because the article in the Post finishes with these words:--" The appeal is unto wice men, and therefore seeing it was not directed to them, those honourable but superficial persons might not have taken the trouble to have looked further into it.

Wanderful instance of Liberality and Support of the Freedom of the Press, in the Conduct of that most magnanimous and staunch Whig, the Hon. Grey Bennett, M. P .- This little great man, had been for some time in the habit of dealing with a respectable tradesman in the town of Shrewsbury, but, finding that be was among the loyal many, who amuse themselves with during to read our galling columns, the irritable M. P. issued a minatory epistle to this said tradesman, to the following purport :-- " If you persist in taking in that infamous paper, ' John Bull,' you shall never serve me with another article !!!"- However, the threatened Plebeian, being one of the Old School, hearing the motto of "liberty, property, and a straight head of hoir, has had the sauciness not to Is not this admirable !-- So that, instead of looking upon be coved by the lunarious lewings of this chalky most calf.

The late General Assembly of the Church of Scotland has been occupied in a discursion of rather a singular nature : an attempt on the part of the Whig side of the house to cut off the Presbyterian Church in India from all connection with the Ecclesiastical establishment of the sister kingdom. This measure was introduced by the Gentleman who some time ago figured at the Edinburgh Radical Meeting, out of revenge against the Member from Calcutta, who, in the Assembly or 1820, had carried a motion, denouncing a religious publica-tion, conducted by one of the Whig Ministers of Edinburgh, to be libelious and calumnious of the character of the Church

The breach of good faith of which the Assembly was called upon to be guilty, was strongly pointed out by saveral-Members; but we understand that the proposal of a Reversed Gentleman, to address the following Pastoral Epistle to the Church in India had more effect than argument in procu the decision of the Assembly, which, by a majority of 52, sustained the commission of the Minister of Calcutta.

" Dearly beloved Brethren, out of our pure love and affection to you, we invited you to send delegates also to this, our General Assembly; and still farther to prove the extent of our regard (and the greater our love the greater the freedom with which we treat our friends) we have taken thu liberty to turn your delegates out of doors.

We also learn that the Whigs are in high hopes of acquiring the ascendancy in at least one public body of the kingdom ;. they have already started one of their number, a Dr. Cook, as a candidate for the Chair at the next General Assembly, and are busily canvassing their friends to secure his election. The Ministerial party are no less active in support of their candidate; and we wish them every success in keeping down men, who, to gain their party purposes, would equally invade the sanctity of the Church, and endanger the safety of the State.

TO JOHN BULL.

DEAR JOHN-In consequence of your having place d the name of Dr. William Bengo Collyer in the list of those Clergymen who prayed for the Queen, there appeared, a short time afterwards, in your paper, a sort of explanatory letter from a friend of the Doctor's, (which, by the bye, I have no. doubt was written by himself), in which it is stated, as Air: opinion, that the Queen is a " singer of the first magnitude." After this very decided expression of the writer's sentiments regarding her Majesty, you will no doubt feel a little surprised: to learn, that at the Anniversary Dinner, held yesterday, atthe Bull Inn, Peckham, to commemorate the opening of Hanover Chapel, in that viilage, the Doctor gave the health of the Queen, immediately after that of our good King.

I shall not attempt to describe the inconsistency of such conduct as this, and I trust it will not pass without being animadverted upon by you, in your usual forcible way.

I am, dear John, your sincere friend and admirer,

HOUSE OF LORDS, SATURDAY.

This day the Royal Assent was given, by Commission, to the following Bills, viz. The Irish Deeds Stamps Bill, the South Sca Trade Bill, the Poor Employment Bill, the East India Prize-Money Bill, the Irish Ricctions Expences Bill, the Irish Prisons Amend-ment Bill, the Irish Sessions of the Peace Bill, the Irish Insolvent Debtors Bill, the Woollen Cloths Stamping Bill, and the Metropolis

The Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Viscount Melville.

After the Commons had retired, the Thames Lastage and Ballastage Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Brak of Ireland Advances Bill, the Exchequer Bills Bill, the Sinking Fund Loan Bill, the Ordnance Lands Bill, and the Irich Treasury Bills Bill passed through Committees, and were reported without any Amendments.-Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, SATURDAY.

The House met at Two o'clock, and the several Bills on the table were forwarded a stage.

bringing up the Report of the Customs Duties Acts Committee. Mr. Hame objected to the regulation proposed by the Committee, as operating to give an advantage to the West India merchant over the East India trader in the importation of cotton.

Mr. Maberley and Mr. Grenfell supported the objections of the Member for Aberdae

The Chancellor of the Exchequer and, the present was only the resolution of a Committee. If a Bill was brought in, ample opportunity would occur for discussing the subject in a full House.—
The Report was then received.

HAYLEBURY COLLEGE .- Mr. Flume in moving for returns the expenditure of this establishment from its origin to 1821, and of the number of Cadets educated there and sent out to India, adverted to the necessity which there was for the Cadets being instateted in the Hindostan language previous to their loaving this country, such was the object in which this establishment originated, and the necessity of their receiving such instruction, was evident to every one who had any knowledge of the occurrences in India where British officers before they had been in the country two months, were subject to be called on to act as unpires between the natives, of whose language they were wholly ignorant. Of 516 Caders seat out in 1820, only 58 were educated at this College. The motion was put and agreed to.

Mr. Hume then moved for returns of the appropriation of Ann's bounty, from the last returns on the subject to the present

The Chanceller of the Exchaquer wished the motion should nbrace all grants to the Ciergy. The building of new Churches might require some additional provision for the Clergy, as those who were to officiate in them would have no support except what arose from pew.money, which in some districts would be sening indeed, and in some of them very profuse.

Mr. Hume declared he would oppose any addition to the already overgrown revenues of the Church. When the Right Hon, Gent obtained 1,000,0001. from Parliament for building new Churcher, he promised that no application should be made for additional previsi

Mr. Grenfell also considered the Clergy as already fully provided

Mr. Serjeant Onelow did not consider the property as more than sufficient to answer the demands made upon it.—The motion was then agreed to.

The House was summoned to the House of Peers to bear the Royal Assent given by Commission to several Public and Private Bills: and on their return the House adjourned to Monday.

The Beer Trade Regulation Bill was passed.
On moving for a Committee on the Consolidated Fund Bill,

Mr. Ricardo asked whether the Right Hon. Gent. did not feel much inconvenience in obtaining money preceding the payment of the dividends? and whether, after these dividends were paid, there was not a great influx?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, the scarcity of money at those times had often commanded his attention. Several expe-dients had been submitted, but none had been adopted.

The House then went into the Committee

Mr. Creevey wished to know if this country ever could be in a state of independence, while the Government were obliged to bor-row from the Bank at the end of every quarter, to meet the divi-

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, if the Bank refused to advance money, he could get it elsewhere. The Bill was ordered to be reported on Monday.

Sir J. Newport, alluding to an Orange Society established at Manchester, which was in connexion with other societies under a similar title, wished to know whether an illustrious individual was a Member of the society, because that society was contrary to law

The Marquis of Londonderry had enquired of the illustrious individual since the Right Hon. Bart, had formerly put the question, and his Royal Highness had given an answer which he hoped would be satisfactory to all parties. His Royal Highness acknowledged that he had consented to be the patron of this society in February last, upon an assurance that it was to be a loyal society, and not a patriotic one; his Royal Highness never contemplated that in so doing it was an infringement of the law. Upon the report reaching him that the society was illegal, his Royal Highness desired his name to be withdrawn; but at the same time avoided any implication that the society was illegally established.

Sir J. Newport was satisfied with the statement of the Noble Matquis.

On the minutes of the proceedings of the Committee of Enquiry into the claims of General Desfournesses,

Mr. Grenfell contended against the legality of these claims and then the papers were laid on the table.

Lord W. Bentinck moved that an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, representing to him that we feel greatly mortified, in learning that attempts had been made by the King of the Two Sicilies to reduce the privileges and rights of the Sicilians to such a state as would expose the British Government to the reproach of having contributed to a change which would impair the freedom and happiness of the Sicilians, and we therefore pray His Majesty's interference in such manner as the honour and good faith of this nation absolutely require. In submitting this motion, the Noble Lord prefaced it with a statement of his local knowledge of the countries, and observed upon the severe trentment which the Sicilians had experienced from the Newpolitan Government after the country was evacuated by the British troops; a more complete annihilation of freedom had never taken place than that which the Sicilians had experienced on the restoration of the Neapolitan Government, who had treated them with injustice, cruelty, and op-pression. The Noble Lord adverted to the occurrence of 1505, when the King was driven out of Naples and sought refuge in Sicily under the protection of an English force. In the year 1808, when the Neupolitans received a subsidy of 300,000l, they made no other return for it than distrust, and even perfect hostility. Sir J. Stewart, when Murat was about making a descent upon Sicily, could only get a single regiment of Neapolitans to join him, while the Sicilians voluntarily offered themselves to repel the invaders .-He descanted at some length on the state of Sicily up to 1810, when the barons surrendered their feudal rights, and established a Parliament with two Houses like those of Great Britain. Thus things went on down to 1813, 1814, and 1815, when the King of the Two Sicilies resumed the reins of Government, and renewed his onth to preserve the Constitution. About the 1st of May in the following year Murat left Naples, and the King went there. But previously to his leaving Sicily a memorandum was left there in 1915, to the same effect as the instructions which were sent out in that year by the Noble Lord to the British Minister. Of these instructions he in every respect approved, and if he had had the framing of them himself, they could not have been more conformable to his ideas .- The instructions were received in Sicily about the end of December, and it would show how far they were attended to by the King, that they were soon followed by a decree of His Majesty uniting the two countries—thus abolishing altogether the Constitution and all the rights and privileges of the Sicilians. Sicily was thus made a province of Naples, and this relation was the more degrading and painful, as it could not be concented that the greatest antipathy had always prevailed between the two countries.

The Marquis of Londonderry admitted the competency of the Noble Lord to submit a motion on the Affairs of Sicily, from his great personal acquaintance with that country; but he thought, after six years had elapsed since those transactions took place too much to interfere-it would not be wise in the British Parliament. As to our connexion with Sicily, it should be remembered, that in taking military occupation of it, we were governed by motives of expediency in order to form a barrier against the strides of French dominion, and to protect the Royal Family, and from a hope that an opportunity might occur of operating upon the Continent of Italy, so as to shake the extent of French influence We had given no express assurance or guarantee to Sicily of securing to it any particular form of government, though circumstances rendered a change in their mode of government neces-mary; and a Constitution was certainly formed, somewhat upon the plan of our own. As far as he could judge of a Constitution, he mover saw one less suited to a people than the Constitution which was established in Sicily under the Noble Lord's sanction. There was no one point of union more decidedly adopted throughout Sicity, from the Crown down to the lowest peasant, than that that Constitution could not stand. The instructions given to Sir Wm.

A Court had met the approbation of the Noble Lord; and when that Minister left Sicily in 1816, it was never thought of that it as incumbent upon us to make The making of a Constitution for any country was the last not which he hoped a British Government would ever do. It was a sesponsibility which, more than any other act whatever, would make our name odious abroad. As to the changes that had been made in 1816, the instructions sent to Sir W. A'Court, with respect were of such a mature as to obtain the approbation of the Noble Lord himself, for he had the goodness of one them.
There was no reason to suppose that Sir W. A'Court had made a wrong use of those instructions, for he was an individual of great knowledge—indeed of as great knowledge as any individual he had ever had occasion to communicate with. That Minister had seen mothing in the conduct of the Neapolitan Government to excite the jealousy of this Government. No design was seen on the part of the King to aim covertly at the liberties of the people. The of the King to aim covertly at the liberties of the people. Mobile Marquis contended that there was nothing in the proceedings the Sicilian Government to nake it necessary for this House to entertain the motion of the Noble Lord.

Sir J. Mackintonh, at some length, supported the motion; and at length the House divided—Ayes, 35 - Noes, 69 — Majority, 34.

Mr. S. Wortley moved for Copies of the Documents issued in the form of Despatches by the Allied Powers from Laybach. The Hon. Member observed that it was impossible an English House of Commons could view with indifference the spirit displayed by the Allied Powers in this Despatch, or could be at ease whilst they proclaimed that their wills alone were to be the law of Europe; -- a doctrine which took away all security from other States, and would, if acted upon, involve this country, with its best institutions, in the same spirit of condemnation, and expuse us to be treated as outlaws. He then proceeded to detail the substance of the Despatch, which stated the restless disposition evinced in certain States, and concluded by laying down the mode in which any changes were to be made in States for the future, insisting, without reserve, that in no case would it be permitted a State to make a change in its form of Government without their entire free will, and that they were responsible to God alone. Now, if such had been the law of Europe ome years ago, in what situation would England have been at this day? Should she have any liberty? for was not the liberty which we now enjoyed, wrung often from the Severeigns of this country, and against their wills? If, however, the Minister of the Crown If, however, the Minister of the Crown would stand up in his place, and declare that there was no danger to the liberties of Europe from the promulgation of these principles, then he (Mr. W.) would not press for them. What he wished was, that the uttention of the people should be roused, through the medium of his Heaville and the property of the content of the people should be roused, through the medium of his Heaville and the people should be roused, through the medium of his Heaville and the people should be roused, through the medium of his Heaville and the people should be roused, through the medium of his Heaville and the people should be roused, through the medium of his Heaville and the people should be roused. diam of this House, to the tendency of those principles, which seemed to be destructive of all civil liberty, and of the independence of every State in Europe.

Marquis of Londonderry agreed in the principles which the Hon. Gent. had laid down, but objected to laying the Papers on the table, as no ultimate proceedings were to be adopted. So long as Ministers did their duty, it was better for the country to leave the management of foreign affairs to the Executive Government. The principles laid down in the document alluded to did not apply to this country; there was in them an abstract generality of applica-tion, but there was nothing to call for the interference of Parliament. If this document was replied to, there was a replication on the part of the Allies, and this would lead to endless literary altercations, which in the end might produce a war, or at least disturb the relations which at present subsisted between States. The Noble Lord declared his total dissent from the principles contained in the Circular alluded to. He denied that this country had any right to take notice of the doctrines promulgated by any other State; this would be to infringe upon the independence of these States. He avowed that the Ministers of the Allied Powers were ill-advised to publish a declaration which was against all principles of sound policy; but still he was convinced they had not done it with any view to aggrandisement.

Sir J. Mackintosh conseived there was no security for the liberties of other States; for here were the three greatest Powers in Europe in conspiracy against the pence of Europe. The principles which they avowed made them the enemies of every nation, for they attacked all those fundamental principles upon which every depends. This then was a case for this House to interfere in and he assured them that the expression of the people of England would not be without its effect. There was no security for nations after the acts which the Allied Powers had been guilty of.

Mr. Hutchinson supported the motion.

The House divided-Ayes, 53-Noes, 113-Majority, 60.

The House divided on a motion of Alderman Wood for a Committee to inquire into certain leases granted by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, to Lord Penripyn, in 1784, of some Slate Quarries. For the motion, 19—Against it, 90.

On a motion for discharging the Order of this House for a Report of the Visiting Magistrates of Ilchester Gaol, the House divided— Ayes, 63-Noes, 20.

Gen. Sir Ronald Fergusson wished to know whether it was the intention of his Majesty's Government to close up the passages or approaches to the House by the preparations for the Coronation, which the Gallant and Honourable General could not help thinking an unnecessary, expensive, and ridiculous pageant, not calculated to add one feather to the cap of the King.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer was happy to say this was the only instance which had occurred, in which the solemn ceremony of the Coronation of the King had been treated with unbecoming He could assure the House no particular obstruction should levity. impede the passage of Members.

The House divided on the question of adjourning the debate made by Mr. C. Calvert, on the Tobacco Duties Bill.—Ayes, 11—

Mr. Hobhouse afterwards moved anew an adjournment, and then it was consented to without the motion being put.—Adjourned.

FRIDAY. The White Herring Fishery Bill was passed.

In a Committee of Ways and Means,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved a resolution for proiding for the payment of the interest of the Loan raised from the Sinking Fund.

Mr. Ellice could not understand the accounts, they were so com plicated.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said he would refer them to a Committee next session.

Mr. Maberley considered the Sinking Fund a complete delusion. After some further observations the resolution was agreed to.

The Clover Seed Bill was ordered to be committed this day six

In a Committee on the Ninth Report of the Commission on Irish Courts of Justice,

Mr. S. Rice moved a variety of resolutions, in effect, charging the Chief Baron of the Exchequer with allowing larger fees to taken in his Court than allowed by law. He admitted that this practice did not originate with the present Learned Lord, but with

Mr. O'Grady contended, that if any error was imputable to the Chief Baron, it was an error of forty years standing, as his predecessor had first committed it.

The Marquis of Londonderry observed, that the Report of the Commissioners did not come before the House in the light of accusation, but rather as matter for an enquiry. He moved, therefore, in order to consider the subject well before coming to a conclusion, that the Chairman should report progress.

This suggestion was acceded to, and the Committee was ordered on Tuesday next.

The Marquis of Londonderry brought in a Bill for granting to his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence an annuity of 60001. which was read a first time, and ordered for a second reading on

Mr. J. Smith moved for the production of all the Papers relative to the Austrian Loan, which amounted, principal and interest, to 21,529,0001.; but in consequence of the suggestion of the Marquis of Londonderry, the Hon. Member withdrew his motion.

On the question for a Committee on the Address respecting the claims of the American Loyalists, it was stated by The Chancellor of the Erchequer that the Crown was willing to make a remuneration to the Loyalists to the amount of 60.0001, which was one half of the sum asked for.

In a Committee on the Metropolis Police Bill, a division took place on the clause, probibiting the blowing of horns and crying newspapers on Sundays, Chris'mas days, and Good Fridays—Ayes, 43—Noes, 8.—The clause was agreed to, and the Report was ordered to be received on Monday. - Adjourned.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

The following intelligence has been received in the city:-"Lord Cochrane having detained several vessels of the United States, under the plea of their having Spanish property on board, the American Government, we understand, has determined to increase its naval force in the Pacific, and Commodore Stewart has been appointed to the command of the Franklin, seventy-four gun ship; so that besides the British ships of war in those seas, Lord Cochrane will have several French, Spanish, and United States' frigates and vessels of the line watching his movements. The arrival of the French ships of war on the western coast has excited a good deal of surprise, especially among those who are more immediately connected with South America; and it is supposed that their cruizing in that direction is more for the purpose of discovery than any other."

The sentence against General Elio had not, down to the 8th inst. bean put in execution, and there were some doubts as to its being

It is feared that the arrival of these foreign troops will be productive of bad effect.

Lisnon, MAY 30.— Yes, erday, arrived here the brig Princess Leopoldine, with dispatches for Government. The master states, that the King was to embark for Portugal on the 25th April, and that the squadron would consist of a ship of the line, three frigates, four corvettes, and four armed merchant ships. His Majesty had appointed a Provisional Government for the Brazils, consisting of eight Members, four Brasilians, and four Europeans; the Prince Royal, President. A conspiracy had been discovered, in which the Ex-Minister, Targini, and many of the Disemburgadores were concerned, and they would be sent to l'ortugal for trial.

CONSTANTINOPLE, MAY 14 .- The following circumstances have excited an extraordinary sensation here:—
"On the 29th of April, the Greek Merchant, Emanuel Dunesi, was arrested, because he refused to pay a hill of exchange for 300,000 piastres drawn upon him, to the order of Prince Callimachi, now Hospodar of Wallachia, because the drawer, the banker Sakellario, at Bucharest, had informed him that no funds had been assigned. The Austrian Internuncio took his part, because Sakellario is an Austrian; and Danesi, also, defended himself with an intre-pidity unusual with a Greek: he was released. He yielded, howrever, to the entreaties of his family, and concealed himself; but the Reis Effendi sending for him, the Russian Ambassador, whose banker he is, persuaded him to leave his retreat, and pledged his word for his life. On the 2d of May, Danesi, accompanied by a Russian Dragoman, appeared at the Porte, but was immediately seized and thrown into prison. On the 3d, Baron Strogonoff caused him to be claimed as the Banker of the Russian Embassy; but the Reis Effendi announced coolly, that Danesi was a subject of the Porte, and Baron Strogonoff had no right to interfere in his favour. Hereupon the Ambassador ordered Mr. Von Daschkow, who is attached to the Embassy, to go in ceremony, accompanied by two interpreters, four Janissaries, and two servants in state liveries, and renew the demand. He was made to wait five hours, and then dismissed with the same answer as the preceding day. Mr. V. Daschkow, who had been ordered not to return without Danesi, sent one of the Janissaries to inform Baron Stregonoff of the answer he had received. The latter immediately came biaself with a numerous suite, but received the same answer. At his desire, he was conducted, contrary to established custom, to the Grand Visier, but still received the same answer. He now desired to know of what Danesi was accused. The Grand Visier said, they had the most convincing proofs that he was guilty of high treason. Buron Strogonoff observed, that this accusation entirely changed the nature of the affair; that Danesi being his banker, and the medium of his official correspondence with the Morea, it threw a doubt on the uprightness of his own sentiments, and was therefore an insult to the Imperial Ambassador. This the Grand Visier would not allow; on which Baron Strogonoff loaded him with the harshest reproaches, and the most serious threats. The Ambassador then asked the release of Danesi, as a particular favour, on which he would set a particular value, but received the same refusal. Hereupon he presented a Memorial, addressed to the Sultan; but the Grand Vizier refused to take it. On the 4th, Mr. Von Fonton, the First Counsellor of the Legation, repaired to the Porte again to demand the release of Danesi; and this being refused, to desire that the Memorial should be presented to the Sultun. The Reis Effendi refused both. Mr. Fonton declared he had orders to go to the Mosque, to step before the Sultun on his way thither, and to sent the Memorral to the Sultan. All the endeavours of the Reis Effendi to divert him from his intention, which he said was con-trary to all custom, and derogatory from the dignity of an Ambas trary to all custom, and derogatory from the dignity of an Ambassador, were fruitless. Mr. Von Fonton proceeded, with his suite, to the neighbourhood of the Mosque where the Sultan was at prayers. When he came out, Mr. Von Fonton held up his Paper, and oried aloud, in the Turkish language, "Here is a Memorial from the Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of his Majesty the Emperor of Russia, to his Sublimity Sultan Mahomed the Second." He pronounced these words twice, without exciting the attention of any body; the third time the Sultan cast a contemptuous look at him, caused the Paper to be taken from him by an Officer, and went on. On the same day a refusal. him by an Officer, and went on. On the same day a refusal, couched in very harsh terms, was giren. It is, however, hoped that the mediation of the Russian Ambassador for Danesi, accompanied with such remarkable circumstances, will be attended with a happy result.

The answer of the Reis Effendi, respecting the entrunce of the Turkish troops into the Principalities, is not publicly known; but it is known that he has ordered that the rebel Ypsilanti must answer with his head for the blood shed at Jassy and Gulatz. was, in fact, considered as impossible that he should escape. In Constantineple itself there is great consternation among the foreigners and Greeks, and equally so among the Turks since the arrival of a Russian ship of war of 18 guns. Many persons attached to the Foreign Ambassadors are preparing for their departure.

This had the desired effect.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.—On Wednesday, a Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East India Stock was held at the Company's house, in Leadenhall-street.

On the motion of the Chairman (T. Reid, Esq.) the Resolution of the Court of Directors, recommending a Dividend of 54 per cent. on the Company's Stock, for the half-year commencing on the 5th of January last, and ending on the 5th of July next, was agreed to.

The Chairman announced, that Mr. Canning had addressed a letter of thanks to him and his honourable colleague, in consequence of the resolution of the last Court, expressive of the high sense which the Company entertained of the Right Hon. Gentleman's ex-ertions as President of the Board of Controul.

In answer to a question put by Mr. D. Kinnaird, the Chairman stated, that he hoped the long and intricate account between Government and the East India Company would in a short time be balanced, and that in future the accounts should be settled annually.

On Monday the dispatches for Bengal, by the ship Barrosa, were closed at the East India House, and delivered to the commander of that ship.

SURREY SESSIONS.

AGENCY OFFICES.—Douglas Gilchrist was indicted for unlawfully obtaining from Ann Metcalfe the sum of five shillings, under false pretences. It appeared, from the testimony of Anne Metcalf, that seeing an advertisement in April last for a Travelling Compunion to a lady, and being in want of such a situation, she went to No. 5, Waterloo-road, near the Colourg Theatre, where she was told by the prisoner that upon paying 5s. she would be furnished with the necessary particulars. Having paid the sum demanded, she was sent first to one place, then to another, but found, wherever she went, that no such person was wanted, or had been advertised for. On again returning to the office, and remonstrating with the prisoner, he told her that he expected a letter from the country in a day or two, and that he would write to her by the twopenny-post. Week after week passed, however, without her receiving the de sired information, and the prisoner was accordingly apprehended.

The Jury without besitation found the prisoner Guilty, and he was sentenced to seven years transportation.

THURSDAY.—Brutality of Parents.—John Gold, a milkman and Sarah, his wife, were indicted for assaulting their child at Camberwell, in May last. The little girl was in Court, and seemed not more than seven or eight years of age.—It appeared from the evidence of several witnesses (among whom were the daughters of the male prisoner) in whose testimony there was scarcely any variation, that the prisoner John Gold) had been frequently seen to beat the child in question with a rope doubled, each thong being the thickness of a man's finger. On being urged to desist, and shewn the state of the child's feet, arising from his cruelty, he replied, that she was his child, and he would treat her as he chose. On one occasion, he laid her upon a bench, and scrubbed her hands and arms with a brush, till the flesh was torn up from her units; that the child was frequently kept without food, and that, one day, having some towels to wash, and complaining the water was too hot, her hands were put into the pail of nearly boiling water, and forcibly beld there; that he had been seen to make her stretch out her arms and suspend two irons, with a threat that if she moved, he would make her hold them so for an hour. The witnesses also de-over that the other prisoner, who was mother-in-law to the children, had participated in the father's crueity.

Our readers will easily judge by their own feelings, what were those of the Court, aggravated by a sight of the wretched prisoners. The Jury found the prisoners guilty; and they were sentenced to be imprisoned for 3d supports and they were sentenced to be imprisoned for 3d supports. imprisoned for 36 calendar months, and afterwards to find sureties for their good behaviour for seven years.

OLD BAILEY.

On Tuesday the sessions ended, when twenty prisoners received the awful sentence of death, viz:—Mary Anne Bell, Henry Williams, Joseph Lenny, George Taylor, Sarab Gillam, Wm. Clapperton, and Cordelia Knight, for stealing in dwelling-houses; John Jackson, for rape; John Blakeney, for highway robbery; Wm. Wilson, for returning from transportation; Robert Holding, Chas. Wade, and Henry James, for burglary; Rich. Luck and John Quit-tenden, for horse-stealing; Henry Ryan, for housebreaking in the day time; and Robert Hitchinough, Thos. Clare, Charlotte Thorn, and Elizabeth Webster, for uttering forged Bank notes.

The Recorder, in his preliminary address to the unbappy crimi-ale, took occasion to advert to the establishment of the "Constitutional Association." He observed, that some of the prisoners, perhaps, were peculiarly, the objects of commiscration from their having been deprived of the protection of their parents at an early age, and turned loose into the streets of the metropolis, where, he lamented to say, they could not pass along without meeting, at almost every corner, some indecent print, or some blasphemous and seditious publication. To these, he had no hesitation in asserting, the great increase of crime, especially among the juvenile part of the community, was mainly attributable, and it was with the most unfeigned pleasure that he viewed the establishment of an Association which had for its object the destruction of this monstrous evil The association originated in the most sound and constitutional principles, and was founded upon just and legal grounds, and for the sake of the prisoners at the bar and others, who had lately been in a similar situation, he sincerely wished it had been established long before. He hoped, however, it would still be able to prevent their foul contagion from spreading further by the vigorous measures which they would adopt. After some further observations of a similar kind, the Learned Recorder proceeded to pass sentence of death in the usual form.

The sessions adjourned to Wednesday, the 18th of July.

POLICE.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET .- On Thursday, William Padmore, the person charged with attempting to assussinate Major-Gen. Edos, was again brought up in order that he might hear the evidence of the General, who was sufficiently recovered to attend at the office. He appeared to be in a very weak condition, in consequence of the wounds he received, and both his hands were in buildages.

Major-General William Edon said, that the prisoner had formerly

Major-General William Edon said, that the prisoner had formerly lived eight years in his service, the greatest part of which time he was in India; but he (the General) discharged him, from his continual habits of drunkenness. He, however, shortly afterwards, procured him a situation at Mr. Trotters, which situation he did not keep long. On the 31-t of May, witness returned to England with his niece; an i on Sunday, the 3d of June, the prisoner called at witness's sister's house, No. 33, Charles-street, Berkeley-square, at the time habits of the street of t the time being quite inebriated; and he was turned out in coase-quence of his rude behaviour. He afterwards continued for some time ringing the bell violently, which so enraged every L dy in the bouse, that witness came down stairs and sent for a constable. From that day until the 14th the prisoner was frequently seen in Charles-street; on the latter day he (the prisoner) called at No. 33, Charles-street, and inquired for witness, who was getting breakfast, at about ten o'clock in the morning. He left, saying that he would call again in about half an hour, which he did. Witness went into the hall to the prisoner, who accused him of having seduced his wife. Witness assured him it was false, and endeayoured to persuade him to the contrary; and when he was on the point of leaving him, about three paces distant from him, the prisoner rushed on him with great violence with a burcher's pigsticking knife in his hand.—(Here General Edon produced a large knife from his pocket; it was about nine or ten inches in length, with the state produced hands and the blade on inches a court. with a short wooden handle, and the blade one inch and a quarter in the broadest part; it was pointed and sharp.)—Witness saw the knife, and endeavoured to avoid the thrust of the prisoner, but the instrument entered his right breast three or four inches deep. He did not full ou receiving the wound, but opposed the prisoner, who made several thrusts at him, which he managed to parry off with his hand, which were cut and mangled, in consequence, in a dread-ful manner. In answer to a question, the General answered, with much sang froid, " that he faced him when he saw the knife in his hand; he thought it was no use to run away; in that case he would have been worse off."

Would have been worse on."

Hamilton, the servant, in a ldition to the last evidence, said that the prisoner, on accusing his master, demanded an answer. The General told him "he was a drunken kind of man, and requested him to keep away." The prisoner then made a rush, and witness tried to separate them; in the scuffle they all fell, and Gen. Edon-exclaimed "that he was stabbed." The prisoner then said "this has come to something at last."

The General thought the instrument appeared as if it had been sharpened for the purpose of committing the deed.

The prisoner is about five fect seven inches in height, of swarthy appearance, with black hair, and dark piercing eyes, about forty years of age. He was dressed in a suit of black. During the examination, he seemed to pay little attention to what was going forward, but was sullen, and kept looking through the parlour window, as if attracted by something in the street.

On the Mugistrate, J. E. Conant, Esq. asking him whether he chose to say any thing in his defence, he answered rather sharply, "I don't wish to say any thing here," and took his hat in order to quit the room. He was committed for trial.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

ARUNDRL.—A skeleton has been found in the fosse of Arundel Castle, which, it is imagined, is that of a soldier, killed in an attack made on that eastle by King Stephen. BY THE KING'S PATENT.

CHANGE of RESIDENCE induces the Patentee to acquaint the Nobility and Gentry, that in consequence of the counterfeits under the same name, he has confined the sale to such respectable houses (only) who deal in genuine articles. The PATENT VIOLET BOAP having a decided preference, both as a washing and shaving Soap, for its cleansing, beautifying, softening, and balsamic properties on the skin, that it was in consequence of these inestimable qualities His Majesty granted his Letters Patent. It should breartably be asked for as "Hail's Patent Violet Soap." It is sold in squares $25.6d, and it. 6d. and in boxes containing twelve squares, at 25s. or twelve small, at 15s.; the sharig cakes, at 2s. 6d. osch, or in boxes, 4s. 6d. which are re-filled, at 2s. 6d. and it is forwarded to all parts of town or country, warran'ed to strive asfe, by addressing a line by post to the Patentee. Observe his name and signature is on the outside of the wrapper.—J. B. HALL, Mo. 28, Haddow-street, Burton Crescent, London.

On the lat of July will be published. No. 1, of a New Periodical Work, entitled,
THE CABINET REPOSITORY of LITERATURE and the ARTS.

No pains nor expense will be spared to render it a Work acceptable to the fashionable and intelligent reader; some of the first literary and scientific men in the country are engaged to conduct and support it.

The Articles will chiefly consist of original mater, and, we trust, will not only be found to afford agreeable recreation, but to contain much valuable and useful information.

Whatever is fashionable, either in this country or on the Continent, in Dress, Manners, Education, or the Polite Arts, will be noticed and discussed with the greatest liberality, and without the slightest degree of partiality. It will, however, be our study to avoid every thing personal, and to render our publication worthy of the patronage of every class of the community, and every friend to morality. Many of the Articles will have a permanent interest, and such as are of a temporary nature will be found to relate to subjects which the fashionable world are always disposed to consider of importance.

relate to subjects which the fashionable world are asways disposed to consider of importance.

It has often (and justly) been remarked, that, although every Article of Trade in this Country has lately been reduced in piles, yet Books and other Literary Publications have suffered no diminution. This slugle circumstance cannot but preclude many from onjoying the pleasures and advantages arising from the study and cultivation of Letters. In order to remove, in some measure, this obstacle to Literary Amusement, The CABINET REPUSITORY of LITERATURE and the ARTS will be published at the low price of the control of the country of the c of it. 6d.

Rach Number will contain 72-pages of letter-press, elegantly printed on fine hot-gressed paper, and embellished with three beautiful coloured Plates; one representing the fashionable Diseases of the Ladies; another that of the Gentlemen; and the third, some new or uncommon subject connected with the Arts or Sciences.

After the explanation we have given of the Plan apon which this Work is to be conducted and executed, we shall just remain. That it will not only be found to be the cheapest periodical publication published for the last twenty-five years, but one of the most entertaining and ukeful. It is, therefore, to be hoped, that it will most the patronage and support of all true friends to Lite-hoped, that it will meet the patronage and suppression and the Arts.

illustrative Plan of a part of Westminster; the Regalia of England, &c. &c.
Edited by RICHARD THOMSON.

This Work is universally considered as, by far, the best manual extant, for the use, either of the absolute spectators, or of those who may otherwise wish to obtain correct ideas of so splendid a national Ceremony: for its accuracy of detail, and superiority of embellishment, as well as warthiness of preservation for fature reference, it has received the unqualified praise of the most respectable journals.

the most respectable journals.

"The work is beautifully printed, particularly the Forms of Procession; and it is published at a price which speaks much in praise of the liberality.

and it is published at a price which speaks much is praise of the liberality of the bookseller."

"It would much exceed our limits to give an account of these Processions and Geremonies, and no extract can do justice to the general merits of the work."—Literary Chronicle, Agril 15, 1920.

"It is, perhaps, one of the best praises of this interesting volume, that the laborious research and scrupulous accuracy of its indefatigable Editor are every where apparent. The whole of those magnificent Ceremonials are brought to the 'mind's eye in all the vividness of the most glowing description and faithful recital, The Notes and original clucidations are, however, perhaps the most valuable portion of the work, and possess an interest which must recommend it to every class of readers, as, though critics are generally supposed to know every thing, we candidly confess ourselves indebted to the Editor for much information and more amusement. The Plates also, being executed on a scale of excellence not usual to works of this limited price, are thus rendered as ornamental as they are useful; and in giving our most inequalified approval and recommendation of the entire work, we feel confidently assured that no reader will be disappointed."—Europ. #### HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

The Irish Treasury Bills Bill, the Exchequer Bills Bill, the Long Bill, the Ordnauce Lands Bill, and the Bank of Ireland Advance

Bill, were severally passed.

The Marquis of Lansdown moved an humble Address to the King on the subject of the Slave Trade, assuring His Majesty that their Lordships were gratified with the exertions of his Government to scoure the Abolition of the Slave Trade, but regretting that the same arised efforts of His Majesty had not been more successful, the trade being still carried on under the flags of Powers who agreed to the abolition; entreating that His Majesty would exert his influence with Foreign Powers to abolish the trade in slaves, and particularly to represent to the Court of France, how injurious the conduct of the subjects of his Most Christian Majosty had proved. The Noble Marquis pointed out the stipulations entered into at the Congress of Vienna, and the subsequent agreements made by Foreign Powers to abolish this abominable traffic, but which, with respect to Spain ad not been carried into effect, for vessels came laden with slaves into the Havannah, and were lunded with impunity from all parts of Africa. Portagel too had, in the course of one year, imported not less than 18,000. Into Surman, slaves were also imported under simulous papers. But she most important part of this subject was the abominable traffic carried on under the French flag. It had been certified by Sir George Collier, that not less than 60,000 slaves had been plundered from Africa, in the short-space of one year, by iFrench traders. All the remonstrances of an Ambassador at the Grench Court, were of no small. The Noble Marquis thought, with mayiew to check this trading, the right of neutral search sught to be some ceded by each nation. He would also suggest the establishment of &n universal colonial slave registry, so that no beings could be hereafter considered as alsaes, whose births were not recorded there.

Barl Bathurst thought the right of search could not be com-pletely carried into effect, unless the people on the Continent felt in the same manner as we did.

Land Culthorpe hoped that Ministers would continue their unreemitting exertions to abolish the traffic in slaves.—The Address was then agreed to .- Adjourned.

In the case of the Strathmore Peerage, the Lord Chancellor de-livered his opinion, that the Earl of Strathmore being a British Peer in both his Peerages, the alledged son was illegitimate to all purposes of succession.

Lord Redesdale was of the same opinion; and contended that the kingdoms of England and Scotland had become one kingdom et the Union, and therefore the law of England in this respect be-some the general law.

The Earl of Shaftesbury then moved, that the Right Hon.

Thomas Bowes had made out his claim to the title of Earl of Strethmore, but that the supposed son of the deceased Earl had failed to make out his claim, which motion was agreed to by the

HOUSE OF COMMONS. MONDAY.

The Salvage Frand Bill, the Cinque Ports Bill, the Wool Trade

Regulation Bill, and the Customs Duties Bill, were passed.

Mr. Ellice adverting to a report made by the Commissioners apmointed to enquire into the claims of certain inhabitants of Canada, wherever, that out of 400,000s, which had been awarded by the Commissioners, only 229,0001, had been paid. He wished to know why these claims were not occupily attended to.

wished to relax the navigation laws, so far as they applied to a par-ticular country. Holland was at present out of the statute pale of our commercial toleration. His object was to simplify the code of our existing commercial laws, so that the merchant might with safety pursue any enterprize without fear of penalty attaching on him from the operation of any obsolete Act: and thus to make this country a depot for the commerce of the world. He intended to introduce a new system on the warehousing of goods, so far as respected the payment of duties, and to do away with the prohibitory

Mr. Sykes could not see what advantage was to be derived from the repeal of the old statutes. He would admit, that the sooner the prohibitory system was got rid of, the better.

Mr. D. Browne thought the removal of the transit duties would ruin the linen trade of Ireland.

Mr. Baring was friendly to the proposed change.
Mr. Marryatt did not think the navigation laws unjust.

Mr. T. Wilson could not see that the abandonment of the naviga-tion laws would be agreeable to the country. While restrictions were continued on the commerce of the West Indies, all protection ought not to be taken away.—The resolutions were agreed to.
On the second reading of the Duke of Clarence's Annuity Bill,

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett thought it his duty to oppose the Bill, as there was but one opinion throughout the country on the subject. The vote was one of an unprincipled character, and he should divide the House upon it. He then moved, that the Bill be read a second time this day six months.

On a division, the numbers were--For the amendment, 14-For the original motion, 61—Majority, 47.

The Bill of course was read a second time.

On the moving to go into a Committee on the Audit of Accounts

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett made a long speech on the subject generally of accounts.

Mr. Bankes complained, that the long address of the Hon. Member had little connexion with the subject before the House.

The House went through the Committee, The House divided on the third reading of Mr. Martin's Bill for preventing cruelty to borses.—Ayes, 21.—Noes, 15.—Majority, 6.
The further discussion was postponed till Friday.—Adjourned.
TUESDAY.

Mr. W. Williams presented a petition from James Hatfield, confined as a Lunatic in Bethlem. The petitioner was tried in 1800, for attempting the life of the late King at Drury Lane Theatre, but was acquitted on the ground of insanity, and confined in Newgate for several years, where he was allowed 801. a-year for his maintenance. He now states, that he has been restored to his senses for several years, expresses deep contrition for his offence; but prays some alleviation for unnecessary restraint, as may be consistent with his safe custody. The petition was laid on the table.

On the third reading of the Irish Revenue Enquiry Bill,

Mr. Denman objected to the nomination of Mr. Thomas Frankland Lewis, one of the Members of this House, as a Member of the committee of Enquiry. That Hon. Gent. had said, he wished the earth might smallow him (Tellus prios ad ima depiscat,) if he were capable of at all being influenced by the appointment in his political opinion. He (Mr. D.) recollected these very words were spoken by a female, who, notwithstanding, pursued the course she so vehemently deprecated. He moved, therefore, that the name of Mr. Lewis be erased from the list of persons appointed to serve on that commission. The motion was, however, negatived. The House divided on the motion of Mr. Denman, for adjourning the Debate on the Bill till Thursday.—Ayes, 31—Noes, 75—Majority, 44.

Ayes, 35—Noes, 81—Majority, 46. The Bill was then passed.

Mr. Maxwell moved an Address to the King praying His Majesty to issue a commission for visiting the establishment of Mr.
Owen at New Lanark, to examine into the condition of the working classes, and to report the result to this House, and also to assure this Majesty that this House would make good the expences. His object in making the motion was to give legislative encouragement to Mr. Owen's arrangements for the benefit of the labouring The distress visible in the country arose in a great mea sure from the enclosure of commons and the introduction of machinery. Mr. Owen's plan went to unite moral and industrious habits, and he called upon the House to sanction his endeavours.

Mr. Dawson seconded the motion.

The Marquis of Londonderry had great doubt whether the Hon. Gent.'s proposition could be received—that proposition went to the extent of inducing the House to try the experiment of a particular scheme, or of bringing the country under one general sys-tem. He must protest against the House being the place to enquire into doctrines of political economy, or into the schemes of active sainds. He could not deny that Mr. Owen's plan might in certain cuses be a benefit; but he could not consent that the country should he thrown into a parallelogram to provide for the maintenance of the poor. He should oppose the motion.

Sir W. De Crespigny supported the motion, as did Mr. Joseph

Mr. F. Buxton did not hope much benefit from the quadrangular tradier of Mr. Owen, still be would vote for the motion, because he thought his system the best ever invented for large bodies of the

Mr. Scarlett could not support the motion, because he feared enquiry might lead to disappointment.

Mr. Wilberforce opposed it on the same grounds.

Dr. Lushington opposed it, as visionary and impracticable.

Mr. Canning had the highest opinion of the zeul and talents of Mr. Country had the highest opinion of the zeni and talents of Mr. Owen, but he must vote against the enquiry. The first vice of Mr. Owen's system was this—it was opposed to the genius of the country; and secondly, that its application from a smaller to a larger body was fallacious. The House too were bound to consider how far they could support a system which was based on no religion. Having strong objections to the system in a practicable point of view, he thought a Parliamentary enquiry would answer no good or useful object.

Mr. W. Smith and Mr. H. Gurney were friendly to enquiry Sir J. Coffin and, that filty years ago a Scotchman was a Rara aris in London, et nigroque similisma cygno. Now, however, every lane, alley, and corner were full of them, and if they want on encreasing he very much feared all the Saxon blood would be absorbed by Caledopia.

Lord A. Hamilton made a few observations, at did Mr. Brougham, and then Mr. Maxwell withdrew his motion seeing the sense of the House against him.

Mr. Wilberforce moved an Address to the King on the state of the Slave Trade, similar to the one moved by Lausdown in the other House on the preceding day. The Hou. Member noticed the course of proceeding which had taken place in order to put a stop to this trade, and for which he thanked the Noble Marquis (Londonderry.) France had since the war passed a doubtful deuce for its abolition. Spain had agreed to abolish the trade, and all the countries with the exception of Portugal concurred in the abolition. Spain and Portugal had abolished it in all parts north of the line; but they afterwards made claims for 3 or 400,000l. for ships not captured strictly according to law, and these as soon as the committee on the Navigation Acts, Mr. Wallace, with a claims were willingly paid. He then stated the claims were willingly paid. He then stated the view to benefit the Commerce of the country, moved to repeal all in carrying on the trade as described by the Noble Marquis in the the laws on this subject, passed prior to the 12th of Charles II. He other House, which he observed, was carried to a plich (under the flags of those nations who had given their pledge to abolish it) beyoud belief. He noticed particularly the conduct of Portugal, which considered dishonorable and disgraceful in the extreme, for that State had set itself in opposition to the benevolent wishes of the other Powers to alleviate the sufferings of the Africans. It must be remembered, that at that time the Noble Lord had stated, that in case Portugal should oppose herself to every thing which the other Powers might think desirable for Africa, some measures stronger than treaties and remonstrances would be desirable; and the Noble Lord proposed that all the Powers of Europe should shut their ports against the produce of the Portuguese colonies. Austria and the other Powers, who might be said to be by-standers—to be assessors pronouncing an opinion, saw the reasonableness of the proposal, and admitted that it might hereafter be found indispensable to resort to such a measure. He was sorry to say, that we were now come into that situation, and that it was the duty of the House and the country to bring Portugal to a clear understanding on this point, It was gratifying to him to see that America had denominated this trade piracy, and subjected it to the same kind of punishment.

With respect to France, the conduct of that Government had greatly disappointed him. He was surprized, that a nation enjoying Constitution, had not more respect for the rights and liberties of mankind. He then stated the traffic which was carrying on, as mentioned in the dispatches of Sir George Collier, and concluded with moving the Address.

The Marquis of Londonderry observed, that he agreed in the sentiments delivered by the Hon. Gentleman on this subject, but many passages in his speech were full or strong reproach on the conduct of Foreign Powers; politically speaking, therefore, as must object to it, standing in the responsible situation which be did. It, however, he yielded to it, he hoped it would be understood by Foreign Powers, as proceeding from a conviction that it was right that the strong feeling of resentment with which the continuance of the trade was beheld, should be made known. It would not, at the same time, be right to overlook the difficulties with which the subject was surrounded; yet, although the arrangements might not be productive of all the advantages we could wish, he did not despetr that it would ultimately approach nearer to its completion. He did not expect that the system could be perfected until the abolition was generally acknowledged as a criminal offence, and punished as such, and until all the flags of Europe were combined, as it were, against this common enemy. He admitted that America had been willing to put an end to the Slave Trade, as described by the Hon. Gent. but it must be recollected, they opposed the right of search. By the law of France, engaging in the Slave Trade was treated as a civil not us a criminal offence, the parties detected were subject to the confiscation of the property, but nothing further. He had made strong representations to that Government, and a dispo-sition was shewn to make it a criminal offence; but it was imposible at once to excite that general feeling in a State where the persons interested in the continuance of the trade were numerous. To Spain the same representations had been made; the subject had been there referred to a Committee, and a proposition to the Cortes to make this offence criminal was rejected. With respect to Portugal, that State, which formed a most inglorious exception to the abandonment of this trade, he must say, it was not for want of re-presentation on the part of the British Government. At the Con-gress at Vienna, the proposition was made, Portugal consented to it upon a limited scale; but that was accompanied by a demand for indemnity from this country, altogether unreasonable. would not underrate the difficulties which foreign States might have in reconciling their subjects to the measures. Portugal had received salutary intimations on this subject, but she had to contend against great difficulties both at home and abroad. He could assure the House, that Portugal could not be convinced that the exertions of the British Government were wholly disinterested, and that they had not some views of commercial advantage, with a view to promote the welfare of our West India Colonies; and so strongly were they impressed with this opinion, that it was impossible to persuade them that we were influenced solely by feelings of huma-With these explanations, and repeating that politically, be was opposed to the address, yet, as it was merely intended as of a meral and not of a diplomatic character, he should not oppose its adoption.

The motion was supported by Sir J. Mackimosh, Lord Milton, Dr. Lushington, Mr. Bernel, Mr. Marryatt, &c.—The motion for an Address was agreed to.

On the motion of the Marquis of Londonderry, a select Commit tee was appointed to inquire into the Ninth Report of the Commissioners of Inquiry into Courts of Justice in Ireland.—Adjourned.
WEDNESDAY.

The Coasting Trade Bill, the Sheerness Lands Bill, and the Naval Property Bill, were severally passed.

Mr. Hume complained of much irregularity having taken place in the Stamp Office of Edinburgh, particularly in the appointment of a Surveyor, contrary to the opinion of the Commissioners of the Board of Stamps, without a Contract, thereby incurring an expense injurious to the best interests of the country. He insisted the ercotion of the Stamp House was inconvenient for the purposes of business, and stated that Mr. Selwin was deputed by the Board of Stamps in London to go to Edinburgh, and make choice of some place, for a Stamp Office. He did so; and fixed upon a convenient house, at 8,4001. which the Board recommended to be purchased. Instead of attending to this recommendation, a piece of ground was purchased on the Regent's bridge, for 35,000l, with a view to erect a new office, which was a coordingly done. He then moved a resolution, embrucing the previous statements.

Sir J. Majoribanks contended that the Commissioners had recommended a different situation from that or zinally fixed upon.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Henry Grey Benuett moved for Papers co unected with the suspension of Mr. Theodore Hooke, late Treasure? of the Mauritus, and the Account of Sums due by him to the Treasure? o. The mauntus, and the Account of Sums due by him to the Treasury. On the 15th of January, 1518, the acting Governor of the Colony (Gea. Hall) had received a letter from Mr. Allen, a confidential clerk in the Treasury, stating that the Treasurer, Mr. Hooke, had appropriated unit of the salaries o part of the selaries of the Treasury to his own use, by putting down his coachman as office-keeper, at a salary of 40 dollars [47] month, and his cook at 1.5s. per month, and that Mr. Hooke had received a sum of 37,160 dollars, which he had never entered in his account. On the 25th January, Mr. Allen received a letter from the Governor, stating, that so serious a charge of so public a nature could not be kept private, and that he referred him to Mr. Hooke. On the same day that Mr. Allen received this letter Mr. Hooke dismissed him, saying at the same time, " You are ruined." Allen still persisted in his charge, and on the 9th of February following, a Commission, consisting of the Chief Secretary, the Auditor, and the Paymaster-General, which had been appointed by the Governor to examine the accounts, discovered, not only that the charge was well-founded, but that there also was a deficiency to the amount of 60,668 dollars. Immediately the Governor (whether legally or illegally he should not inquire) was advised by the Attorney General to suspend Mr. Hooke, and to send him a prisoner to England; Mr. Hooke did agrive in England, but was without any proceedings being instituted set at large.—The Hon. Gentlemen concluded by moving, that me humble Address be presented to His Majesty, praying him that he be pleased to direct extracts to be made relating to the suspension of Mr. T. Hooke from the dispatch of Acting Governor Hall, of the Mauritins, dated the 20th April, 1818; and also an account of the balance now due by Mr. Hooke to the local Treasury.

Mr. Goulburn said he should not, for his part, have any ob jection to the production of the dispatch, but the case of Mr. H. involved more than was stated in that dispatch. On the arrival of an account of the transaction, as stated by the Hon. Member, the Noble Lord at the head of the Foreign Oppartment consented to remove Mr. H. from his situation, and transfer the accounts to the Colonial Audit Board. Shortly after Mr. Hooke arrived in England as a prisoner, a case was submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown, requiring their opinion respecting the legality of detaining Mr. Hooke natil his criminality should be proved, or the propriety of instituting a criminal prosecution. The Law Officers of the Crown distinctly gare it as their opinion, that the Crown had not the power of detaining Mr. Hooke, and that the evidence at that time produced would not sustain a criminal prosecution. Mr. H. was accordingly discharged; but his case was still under the consideration of the Audit Board, and additional evidence had since been collected and interrogatories put to Mr. H.; to some of which he gave satisfactory and to others unsatisfactory answers, and his case was now under the consideration of the Law Officers of the Crown. Under these circumstances, he trusted the Hon. Member would not press his motion. He thought it due to the Governor of the Mauritius to state, that on the discovery of this deficiency every thing belonging to Mr. Hooke on the island had been seized, and would be detained until the close of the inquiry.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett said, the Hon. Member had satisfacto rily accounted for the conduct of Government. He wished to know whether there were any sureties for Mr. Hooke?

Mr. Goulburn said, there had been no sureties required until this defairation; but to prevent a recurrence of a similar one, Government now required sufficient sureties. The motion was then

Mr. Hume moved, that an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, humbly to request, that, with a view of affording relief to the country from a part of its burdens, he will be graciously pleased so direct, that a minute investigation be instituted into the mode and expense of the management and collection of the several branches of the revenue; that a careful revision be made of all salaries and allowances, especially of those which have been in-eccessed since 1797, in order that they may be adjusted to the inwreased value of the currency, and to the distressed circumstances of the country; that a vigilant superintendance be exercised over the expenditure of the country in all its departments, in order that every reduction may be made therein which can be effected without detriment to the public interest; and, in particular, in the number of the army and the expence of its establishments. The Hon, Member entered into a diffuse statement of the finances of the country, contrasting our present expenditure with that of 1792, (on which subject trasting our present expenditure with that of 1792, (on which subject he has been often reported), and, in effect, attempting to shew by comparison of the two periods, that considerable saving might be effected, if Ministers proceeded economically. In 1792, the revenue, he said, did not exceed 15 or 16 millions; and the interest of the debt, which now exceeded 32 millions, was then 9,534,0001. The Hon. Member, after complaining of the intricacy of the public accounts, and consequently the impossibility of forming any thing like an accurate opinion, denied the statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that he had effected a reduction of the National Debt to the amount of 92 millions since the near that National Debt to the amount of 29 millions since the peace. He had taken an average of the charges for the funded and unfunded debt, for the years 1814, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, and he found that the charge for the last year had exceeded that average, and that the reduction was merely nominal, and in fact, instead of the annual interest being reduced 11, during the last four years, it was increased 1,800,0001. The Hon. Member next proceeded to specify the difference between the army as in 1792, and as in 1821, and to maintain that a great reduction ought to be effected. Clerks, whose salaries were 901, a year, had been dismissed by way of saving, while the dragoons were increased, each of whom cost annually 561. and the Life Guardsmen also, who cost 761, each. Within five years there had been 1105 commissions granted; if 508 had here given away to the disadvantage of the country, which would have saved 29,0001, annually if those persons had been taken from the half pay list; in the same period there had been 1448 promotions, by means of which it might be said that there had been 2558 commissions given away. There were 9037 officers on the half pay list, who cost the kingdom $12,0001, annually, and yet but 317 had been taken from that list in consequence of those commissions.-There had, too, been 240 removed from active service to the veteran There had, too, been 240 removed from active service to the veteran list, without sufficient grounds, in order to this country being saddled with their half pay during their life. In the Army Department there could be a saving effected of 1,663,1271, if the different motions which had been proposed during the Session had been carried. Having descanted at some length on the various branches of the revenue, he contended, that the people might be relieved by economy to the extent of four millions sterling.

The Marguis of Tanistock seconded the motion. He would advise his Hom. Evenue to abandon further exertion and not specified his time.

his Hon. Friend to abandon further exertion, and not sacrifice his time and constitution by striving another year to make an impression upon the House; for it was evident, with the immense patronage at their command, there was no chance of a majority unfavourable to Ministers, unless forced upon the House by some drendful enlamity. So long as that patronage existed, there was no prospect of measures being adopted that would give satisfaction to the country; so strongly was be impressed with that idea, that he would nover again incur the expense of a shilling to obtain a seat in that House, bowever much he might be respected by, and attached to his constituents. He reprobated the practice of soldiers being employed on all public occasions, and regretted to hear, that not only new regiments of infantry ordered into the vicinity of the metropolis, but that several troops of Yeomanry were put in requisition in consequence of the coronation. This, he contended, was the re weree of ancient practice; for, formerly, the Kings of England swere crowned in the midst of the people. This course of proceeding was another proof how completely the Noble Lord had mistaken the character of the people of this country.

Mr. Banke had beard with considerable regret, the tone of despondency the Noble Marquis had assumed, and the reproach he had spondency the Noble Marquis and assumed, and the reproach he and crast upon the House, which he must say, he thought came very ungraciously from so young a Member, who was as yet, but in the dawn of his political life. The reduction to the amount of four millions was impracticable. He (Mr. B.) could not agree, that no endeavours had been made to lessen the expenditure; he knew reduction was necessary. The Hon. Member concluded by moving as an amendment, that an Address to the following effect be substituted :-- nssuring His Majesty that the House regarded with milisfaction the general revision which had taken place in the departone at of the Customs of Great Britain, and praying that he would direct a similar revision to take place in other departments of the public service, with a view to retrenchment; and further, that he would be pleased to direct a minute enquiry, with a view to satisfy the country, into other branches of the civil service, as well with a view to diminish the number of persons now employed therein, as to reduce those salaries which had, owing either to the increase of husiness, or the deficiency of the value of money, been increased since the year 1797; and further praying, that he would be pleased to direct, that every possible saving should be adopted in the more extensive establishments, which it was necessary the country should maintain, as well for the safety as defence of the country, more especially by reducing the number of the army, and exercising a constant vigilance over the very ample supplies usually granted by etrenchment of the Hon. Mover was visionary, although he gave im every credit for the patient industry which he had displayed during the Session. He (the Noble Marquis) felt, judging from the time of the Hon. Mover and his colleagues, that he pect of justice from them, or inducing them to grant that His Majesty's Government ought to derive any credit from the measures of seconomy and retrenchment acted on in different departments of the public service, so jaundiced a view had they taken of done by Ministers, and so completely had the spirit of party laid hold of them, even in the delivery of their sentiments in set speeches within those walls. Indeed, he would frankly confess, in reply to the observation made as to the extensive power he possessed in that House, that any little power he might bave, he derived from, and was indebted to, those Honourable Members who neglected to seize no opportunity to oppose him. As to the Noble Lord, he had so deeply imbibed the desponding principles of the School, of which he boasted himself to be a pupil, that whenever he found his sentiments not treated in that House with that respect he anticipated, he retired from his attendance there, to acquaint his consti-tuents that it was in vain for him to attempt to be of service, whilst that House continued to be composed of the elements of which it was constituted, and then all the country was told by him and his friends of the same stamp, that the country was raised and undone As soon, however, as an opportunity, in his mind more favourable, occurred for his wishes, he did not disdain to again enter that vilified and abused House, although its elements continued the same and look with indifference on all that he had professed shocked at disgusted him. There was another description of opponents with whom he had to contend, namely the projectors, who were a class of men who would not be satisfied with any, not even the Eutopian form of Government, recommended by the Hon. Member for Aberdeen. Doing every justice to that Hon. Member on the third bench for his research, yet if he had been a Divinity instead of a laborious individual, he never could expect to put his principles into practice; like a certain set of philosophers in latter days, who were anxious only to pull down a system, regardless of the substitution of any other, that Hon. Gentleman thought it was only necessary to make up a large bundle of papers, and take a great many notes, which he might detail in a long speech to the House, and he dubbed a patriot, whilst his labours only served to confuse or deceive the public. With respect to the despondency of the Noble Marquis, people partake of his gloom, although some of the evils which it laboured under, bad not, perhaps, yet been probed or become tangible; there was so much good sense in the country, that it was content with being told the plain truth, though that truth might not be palatable. He thought he might be justified in saving so much from the state of peace, repose, and good humour, which pervaded every portion of the country, not excepting those districts which had but a few months ago been disturbed; and here he felt proud in saying, that with respect to the approaching coronation, the Sovereign needed no soldiery to secure his favourable reception on that occasion, as might be inferred from his affectionate and flat tering reception wherever His Majesty had appeared amongst his people. He felt shocked that men should be found disposed to trent his august and sacred coremony with levity or disrespect; and he particularly felt it his duty to protest against the colouring which had been given by the Noble Lord to the large but unusual and constant attendance of a military force, on the occasion of such festivals, for the more purpose of parade and splendour.— The Noble Marquis then adverted to the Hon. Member's plans of economy, and he could not help saying, that the Hon. Member's speech partook of the policy of his part, who had an object at least as near their beart as the public welfare, which was to teach the country that they were the only people within those walls who could devise or carry into execution the measures which were necessary for their security. Their object was an attack on His Ma-jesty's Government. He would not enter into details at length: but he thought the House could not fail to recollect what had be effected in the way of retrenchment from the peace down to the present moment. Nothing was more easy in the Hon. Member's mind than to knock off like a wholesale reformer, two, three, or four millions from the expenditure; had he, however, assisted at any of the Committees, whose labours would, he had no doubt, prove more practically useful to the public interest than were his speeches, he would probably have become a sounder reformer, and less fond of amusing himself with visionary plans of reduction in gross. This branch of expenditure for the last year was 19,890,0001.; or the present it was only 18,220,000l. making a difference and reduction amounting to 1,670,0001. He, however, would not be so er a mountebank in Government as to attempt to say, that any Minister could take 4,000,000l. at once out of the expenditure. There was no reduction which they were not disposed to make, that might support the public credit, which after all would be their best praise.

The great object of their wishes was to relieve from pressure and on the kindest feelings and concern of that House. He felt the principle of the Addresses as strongly as the Movers, and he was determined, jointly with his colleagues, to attempt, during the recess, to do every thing in the way of retrenchment which could be done without entailed incomments. be done without practical inconvenience, so as to meet that House, when it should again be convened for the dispatch of business, with that satisfaction and pleasure which he had always received from meeting a Senate House which had carried this great country so successfully and triumphantly through its unparalleled struggles

Mr. Whitbread gave notice of a motion for Tuesday next re specting the Constitutional Society.

The Consolidated Fund Bill, the Warehousing of Goods Bill, the Mohair Bounties Bill, the Lagan Spirits Bill, and the Greenwich

Hospital Bill, were severally passed.

Mr. Martin withdrew his Bill relative to the mitigation of pu-

Mr. Wilberforce moved an Address to the King, praying that His Majesty would order an investigation into the names, ages, and condition of all Africans dismissed froms the black regiments of the coast of Africa, or from their apprenticeships, so that a provision might be made for their future disposal and comfort.

On the third reading of the Agricultural Horse Duty Repeal Bill.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, it was the intention of His Majesty's Government to put the most liberal construction on the Bill, and to look on this description of property as if no such

The Bill was then passed.

On the bringing up the report of the Committee of Supply, some conversation arose on the claims of General Desfourneaux, it being objected to by Mr. Caleraft, that there really were not vouchers for the General's claims, and he suggested the withdrawing that resolution, which would save the country IT,0001.

The following sums were then voted: — 22,500l. for the Lord Chamberlein's Department.

100,000l. for Bills for New South Wales.

75,0001. for Expences for Coinage 3,5001. for Printing Journals of this House.

7,0001. for Officers of Exchequer. 32,5671. for Police Establishment.

23,0001. for Milbank Penitentiary.

2,4521. for Henry Seventh's Chapet Repairs.
Mr. Henry Grey Bennett asked into whose pocket the tax Imag. on the visitors to the public monuments went. He was slameful and scandalous to the country or the House, to tolerate such as practice in any mean, mercenary, money-loving, grasping, lucre-thirsting, reverends or non-reverends either of Westminster Abbey... St. Paul's Cathedral, or any where else. How were the mo-numents of art entrusted to their care preserved? Filthy and covered with dust; they were a disgrace to any nation, instead of being an ornament to the Cathedrals...

Sir C. Long felt every thing said by the Hon. Member as to the state of St. Paul's Cathedral and of Westminster Abbey, for the monuments when formed had no care taken of them. That was greatly to be regretted; but he could assure the House that noblame could be cast on His Majesty's Government on account of the negligence of the preservers of those monuments of the illustrious The Dean and Chapter were responsible for the preof them, and to them the House and the country had to look. Her lamented extremely that such a crosse for complaint should exist...
There was certainly great profit made of the visitors to those Cathedrals, and it was supposed for the purpose of preserving those monuments. It was therefore strange that they should not feel it. incumbent on them to take care of those works of ort.

15.000l. African Forts.

22,4441. Sierra Leone Establishment.

Mr. W. Smith complained of the mixed commissions of the Offiers at Sierra Leone, and also of the salary of the Commissary Judgethere. Government, in selecting that Officer, had been imposed on by the statements of interested persons. That Judge had been a mere clerk in a merchant's house at Rio de Janeizo, and yet, without education, previous knowledge, or experience, at 25 years of the province of the provinc nge, he was now in the receipt of 30001, as a Judge at Sierra.

The Marquis of Londonderry said, that he had left the appointment of all the persons in that Colony to Sir W. Scott and Sir C. Robinson; that the climate of Sierra Leone was so very nuhealthy, that although the salary had been increased from 20001, to 30001.

per annum, no person came forward to full the vacancy. 87,0001. for Settlers at the Cupe of Good Hope.

After some further resolutions were passed, the House adjourned's FRIDAY.

Lord A. Hamilton moved for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal that clause of the 1st and 2d Geo. 4th, requiring certificates from brewers of the amount of sale, the quantity and quality of the beer sold by them, and to whom sold. He believed it was not possible. nithough the parties, the brewers, were bound to observe it under a penalty of 2001. The brawers were also unwilling to disclose always the quality of the beer which might be sold or ordered frame. The attempt alone would entail on the brower the nece of maintaining a number of clerks to regulate only these returns. and certificates at an enormous expence.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, he had it from tho-very best authority, the Inspectors of Excise, that this mode of accer-taining the amount of excise due by a brower was not impracticable: or very inconvenient, and should therefore oppose the motion of the Noble Lord. Had that Noble Lord waited only for ten days keaper there was, in his raind, little doubt that he would not have been charged to make the motion now before the House by the persons most interested (samely, the brewers) in the regulation. The regulation was eminently calculated to protect the revenue. Lord A. Hamilton finding the sense of the House against him.

On bringing up the Report of the Committee of Supply. The following sums were voted:-

1,0651. 4s. 7d. for Printing the 75th Vol. of Journals.

8,4001. for Commissioners of Insolvent Court.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett considered the salaries too large for the duties the Commissioners had to perform; but the House decided otherwise.

On proposing a grant of 5,1311. for the Alien Office.

Major-General Wilson proposed that it be left and altogether.

Some conversation arose on the Alien Bill, in which the Major General renewed his objections to the Bill. Mr. Bernal thought i would be better to get rid of the Bill altogether, as did Sir J.

The Marquis of Londonderry considered the present a very units opportunity to discuss the principle of the Alica Bill.

The House divided on the proposition.—For it, 27—For the resolution, 44.—It was accordingly passed, as were the other resolutions. On the question for going into a Committee on the Duke of Clay

Mr. Creevey stated his objections to the Bill. He would n tain, that the proper way of proceeding would have been by a message from the Crown. He objected to the House being made the instrument of favouritism to one particular branch of the Royal Family. Since this subject had been under discussion an Ham. Alderman had stated, in his place, that a promise of a certain sum of money had been given to the Queen, which premise had max been observed on the part of Government. It was then terous that the House should be made the instrument of corrying into effect the wishes of the Crown towards a particular house the Royal Family, whilst the interests of the Queen had been sacrificed. The Queen had at least as much right to be considered as ficed. the Duke. In the case of the Queen, the public had gained 90,000l. by her gone rously consenting to take o of the 59,0001, voted her by Parliament. The Duke of Clarence, its was true, had, in 1814, refused the grant of 60601, per annual, but from a very different motive. He thought himself justified in calling upon the House not to agree to the grant to the Duke, if it were only on account of his conduct on the trial of the Queen. He (Mn.C.) spoke from his own knowledge. He had been an eyes witness of the trial, and had heard, and would never forget, the ferccious manner in which—(Order, enden.) The Marquis of Londonderry rose to order. He appealed to the Chair whether such expressions could be allowed?

Mr. Creery said, that he considered himself justified is alluding to facts which were universally known.

The Speaker interapped Mr. Crosvey (who had recembed) and deticed, that is alluding to the other House is the manner to indicate, was cake an infringement on its privileges.

g Grey Bounett said he should oppose the grant; and added, with respect to the Coronation, that he grudged the expense to which it led in times of such unexampled misery and distress. He considered the Coronation a mere show, and not at all what it used to be in former times. If it added to the dignity of the King, he would be the last to oppose it; but where that was doubtful, and the people generally dissatisfied, be thought the pegennt alto-

The Marquis of Londondervy thought it strange that the Hon Gentlemen on the other side looked with so much alarm at the expences of the Coronation—those Hon. Gentlemen who, but a few evenings since, acted as if they set no limits to the resources of the country, when they called upon the British Government to interfere in the transactions of every State in Europe. The Coronation was called a mere show; he would tell the Hos. Gentlemen that that august ceremony was performed under the authority of law, that it was an institution ancient and venerable, sanctioned by the u ages, and by the spirit of the Constitution. He (Lord Londonderry) would consider that the Minister would have forfeited his duty to the Sovereign, if he did not advise the performance of that cere-mony with as little delay as possible. He lamented, as a part of the bitter fruits of the transactions of the last year, that Hon. Members in that House, far from allaying, laboured to aggravate and increase the evils of that period. He was convinced that Hon. Members opposite had done much to increase those evils; and the speeches of that night he looked upon as an endeavour to revire throughout the country those feelings of animosity and agitation which had for some time ceased to exist.

After some further observations the House went into a Commit tac. In which Mr. Hume moved to amend the clause granting the annuity, and that the date should be 1821, instead of 1818, a posed.—For the amendment, 24.—Against it, 54. The original grant was of course carried, and the Report ordered to be received

A division took place on the extra Post Bill, it being moved to commit it this day six months.—Ayes, 26—Noes, 32. The Bill was then committed.

Another division took place on the crueity to Horses' Bill.-Ayes, 46—Noes, 16. The Bill was then passed.—Adjourned.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, JULY 1.

THE Old Times has at length awakened from its apathetic slumbers to commence an attack upon us; and, according to its own account, at a favourable opportunity; for "it understands that our labours are now drawing to a conclusion."

Its information upon this point, as well as on most others, is wholly incorrect. But the great humour of the attack upon us, lies in the determination to subject us to a "short review," which he commences by avowing that he did " not see the commencement of our career," and has "rarely seen our paper since."

The manner in which we started was such, he says, as gave "him little doubt but that we should down ourselves more effectually than any immediate effort of his could damn us:" that is to say, our violence and personality were so gross, that our paper would of itself fall into disuse and disrepute. Now, if violence and personality are to damn a paper, the Old Times may be damned every day in the week.

As to the question of disappointment, in the expectation that we should sink into neglect, we can answer him with no little triumph; and we would venture to remark, that while our sale continues to exceed his, the less the Old Times talks of a falling off, the better for himself.

It is comical to remark, that the Old Times, after having expatiated on the infamy of personality, concludes its article by the most flagrant outrage on the private character of Colonel Browne, charging him, in plain terms, with falsehood and perjury, and renewing an attack which, when it was first made in the Old Times, was made in terms and language, appalling, diagusting, and diagraceful to human nature.

In a second attack upon us, the Old Times informs his readers, that he has not "perused our operations," but maintains that we have not "elicited a tittle" of evidence against the Queen, whom he describes as having "an un-tameable spirit." He then proceeds to talk some egragious respect for the sacred writings.—Rejected.

nonsense about Volumnia, and bayonets; implying, the untameable spirit of her gracious Majesty will induce her to bully the King into a compliance with her wishes to be crowned. Now, as to bayonets, of which the Old Times speaks, there can be little necessity for the use of those little weapons to keep out intruders, as the Editor of that paper may perceive by looking at the sundry large and strong barriers, which are erecting in the neighbourhood of Westminster Hall and Abbey. And as for getting in by stratagem, that seems impossible; for if the Queen were even to forge a ticket, Sir George Naylor's hand-writing is so much better known in the country than that of the late Duke of Brunswick, that the hoax would not succeed.

The truth is, the minions of Brandenburgh House tremble at JOHN BULL. They know and feel our power, and there. fore, the Old Times has been directed to insinuate, that we are about to discontinue our labours, in order to check, if possible, our circulation during the next three imperious weeks: But the insinuation is false and groundless; and far from relaxing in our duty to our countrymen and countrywomen at this juncture, no efforts shall be spared to expose the effrontery of the Queen, and the glaring ignorance, folly, and knavery of her scanty band of hangers-on, should she persist in her importunities to share in the sacred ceremony, to a participation in which she has no earthly claim, either of right, or by courtesy,

We have the pleasure to inform our readers, that he Number 30, or 31, of our paper, we shall lay before them. a copious review of the proceedings in the last Session of Parliament, to which we can confidently call their atten-

An unusual duliness has pervaded the Money linker throughout the whole of the week; notwithstanding which the prices which we quoted in our previous Number appear to maintain rather an advanced position. The fluctuation is the various securities has been very trifling, say in Reduced Annuities 1,-in the 31 per Cents. 1,-in the 4 per Cents. 1and in Consols for the Account . This steadiness in the prices of our own securities may in some degree be accounted for by the secure state of things on the Continent, and the falsehood (as it now appears) of the reports respecting the intentions of Russia and Austria towards Turkey. Consols opened yesterday morning at 76; for Reduced, and 77; for the Account. They were afterwards done at a per cent. higher, and finally closed at 76; for Reduced, and 77; for the Account, and sellers at those prices.

TO S. W. WHITBREAD, ESQ. M. P.

SIR-As you have given notice of a motion relative to the Constitutional Association, I beg leave to call your attention to a Society which has been formed in Cumberland, at a place called the Holmes, which has for its avowed object the shedding of blood.

It has its President, and its Secretary, and its Committee, its laws and its bye-laws,—its prosecutions and its penseutions. I mean, Sir, the Constituted Association for "the destruction of sparrows." This cruel body not only gives a reward of a penny for every hen sparrow, and a halfpenny for every cock, but pays at the rate of these pence a dosen for

If ever harbarity were systematized, or cruelty mails only, this association has done both; and I call upon you as a humane man and a respectable tradesman, to take notice of it, as I am quite convinced its proceedings are of a nature to shock you and excite the sensibilities of your amiable friends, Surgeon Hume, and Sir Philanthropy Froth, alies the Hon. Henry Grey Bennett.-Do not fail to notice this, as you value the esteem of yours, HUMANITAS.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

In consequence of the determination of several very re spectable persons, that her Majesty ought to be crowned, as a matter of right, a Commission is said to have issued under her Privy Scal, to several distinguished characters, to hold a Court of Claims, of service to be performed at the ceremony; and on Thursday they commenced their sittings at the house of Mr. Thompson, her Majesty's gin merchant, in ______street.

Amongst the few who attended, we are told, Major-General Wilson, Mr. Thompson (himself). Mr. Hobhouse, Alderman Wood, Mr. Barber Beaument, and Mr. Bradbury, late Clown at Astley's. The room was thronged with claimants and spectators, and the Commission, written in a very bad hand, and mis-spelt, having been read by one of the Clerks, and proclamation made for silence, Lord Erskine was requested to retire for a short time, and the following claims were offered: Lord Erskine claimed to be Herb-woman for the di

His Lordship was then called in, and heard in support of his claim, for upwards of five hours, in which time, he clearly proved, that he might pass for an old woman anywhere, that he actually had by him the gown and petticoats, in which he eloped a year or two since, to Gretna-green, with his present Lady. His Lordship, after this, began to spess of himself; and the Court adjourned at eleven o'clock at night, but his Lordship had not finished at that time.

SECOND DAY. Lord Erskine continued: but the President having formed him, that he must not talk any more upon his fa-vourite subject—his Lordship having twice appeared to faint set down.—Claim referred to the Editor of the More ing Chronicle.

Mr. Peter Moore claimed to wait at her Majesty's table. Referred to Lord Nolland, in order that his ability in that line might be properly ascertained.

The Earl of Grosvenor claimed to carry the Bible upon a cushion before the Queen, upon the ground of his known

Alderman Wood, as the lineal descendant of the Atwoods, of Devoushire, claimed to carry her Majesty's pocket-handkerchief through the day, and have it for his fee in the evening.—Referred to Ludy Anne Hamilton.

Mrs. Walthman claimed to hand her Majesty her shawl.

and to have it for her fee. - Granted; on an understanding that if it fetched more than its value in the shop in Fleet-street, the profits were to be divided.

Sir William Austin claimed to be crowned with a small crown, as a matter of right!-Referred to the Matron of Brownlow-street Hospital.

Mr. Joseph Hume claimed to be carver; because he has been a surgeon.—Rejected.

Mr. Joseph Hume claimed to say grace; because he has been a Chaplain.—Rejected.

Mr. Joseph Hume claimed to hire quadrupeds for the day, on the ground that he did so in India.—Rejected.

Mr. Joseph Hume claimed to supply beef for the Queen's table, because he has been a Commissary.—Rejected in favour of Mr. Slade, of Saint Giles's, her Majesty's friend and butcher.

Mr. Joseph Hume claimed the upright props of the platform, because he has been a Post-master.—Rejected.

Mr. Joseph Hume claimed to have a girl dressed up in e, to walk as his page in the procession, on the ground that he had one for some years.—Rejected, because it is essential not to diminish the apparent number of females in this ceremeny on any account whatever.

Mr. Joseph Hume prayed that a list of his claims be printed.—Rejected.

Mr. Joseph Hume prayed that he might be allowed to pay his coach-hire out of some fund hereafter to be raised, on the ground that he has been Paymaster.—Rejected.

Mr. Joseph Hume stated it to be his intention to appeal in another place, if any man or woman performed more than one office in the ceremony, and quitted the Court, evidently much moved.

Mrs. Damer prayed for leave to carry a bust of her Majesty, done by herself.—Negatived, on the ground that her Majesty has been sufficiently cut already.

Lord Hoed claimed to drive the Queen to Westminster in a gig, on the ground that he had often done so before Postponed till letters can be received from Baron Bergami who at present holds a patent for driving her Majesty.

Mrs. Wilde claimed to serve up a dish of calf's head to the Queen's table.-Refused, on the score that her Majesty's appetites are foreign, and that Mrs. W. can only be considered as a plain cook. Sir Ronald Ferguson claimed to be Champion, Ickey Pig and the Gas-man having declined the office. This claim was founded upon the gallant General's various services on the Continent. Opposed by Mrs. Michael Angelo Taylor.—Decision deferred till an answer can be received from Mr. Waddington, who has been written to on the sub-

Dr. Borland claimed to serve the Queen with Madeira during the morning of the ceremony, on an understanding that he was not to find wine, and to have two assistants.— Admitted, and four assistants granted in lieu of two.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett claimed to wear a yellow cap, with bells, and blow a penny trumpet before the Queen, on the ground that he had intellect sufficient to make a good fool.—Rejected as doubtful.—The Hon. Gentleman then claimed to play the lyre, which claim was immediately admitted, as well as that of Mr. Brougham, on the score of alleged long practice. Mr. Denman claimed to carry open in his hand the bond in her Majesty's favour, granted by the late Duke of Brunswick, that the people might see it was really his Serene Highness's writing.—This claim created astonish-ment in some, horror in others, and the claimant, it is said, was forced to leave the room precipitately,—he was followed by almost all the spectators; when the President, finding there was nobody left to listen, adjourned the sitting till Wednesday next at twelve o'clock.

We shall continue the list of claims in our next.

THEATRE.

DRURY LANE .- It was in this national Theatre that GAR-BACK, for years, delighted the people of England; it was in this national Theatre that the immortal SIDDONS rose triumphantly over all her competitors; it was in this great national Theatre that KEMBLE, by his taste and talents, brought the histrionic art to its highest perfection. Over the door of this great national Theatre is erected a statue of SHAKESPEARE, to mark the devotion, the respect, the admiration which are shewn him within its classic walls.

To prove that this great national Theatre has lost nothing of its character under the present management, we subjoin a paragraph copied from a Morning Paper, to which we call the attention of such of the public as profess themselves patrons and amateurs of the legitimate drama—the privilege of acting which, be it remembered, is confined by low to this great mational Theatre and two others :-

"SPARRING.—There was some excellent Sparring at Drury Lone Theatre on Monday night. Ben Burn and Shelton made a and There of monay night. Bell burn and shelton made a very scientific display, and there forth much applause. Randall and Turner gave some of the best specimens of the faoring system, as did Belasco and Harry Holt. Martin set to with an amateur from Norwich, who had none the worst of it. He is a powerful young man, and awake to science!!!"

Any remark apply quite unpresented.

At Covent Garden, the care and attention of the Managers have been directed to the appropriate illustration of the Second Part of Henry IV. with the ceremony of the Coronation. A more splendid pageant never graced a Theatre; it reflects the highest credit on the proprietors for their liberality, and on those to whose particular care the arrangement of the processions has been confided.

We must make one exception, which we do without any wish to be hypercritical. The introduction of the yeomen of the guard in the service of Henry IV. when it is remembered that the corps was not established till the reign of Henry VII. will startle not only the venerable antiquary, but the little school-buy, who will think it a pity that some of his playfellows had not been consulted, during their holidays, upon this point. A most glaring anachronism never slipped upon

"It really gives us pleasure to see the turn which is given to every thing at this Theatre. The Coronation, the cere-mony which binds the King to his people, is one so important, so intimately connected with our civil and religious rights, that it most naturally interests all men who have the love of their country and respect for their Sovereign at heart; and therefore, putting loyal principles out of the question, (which, be it understood, we do not, with respect to the management of Covent Garden,) a representation of that, at little trouble, and a moderate expence, which, in reality, can only be viewed as the sacrifice of inordinate labout, and a large sum, must be profitable in the extreme.

Supposing, then, for a moment, that the pageant is pro duced merely as a theatrical specusation, see the manner in which it is done. Instead of violating the decencies of society by a public Masquerade, (twice repeated) into which two or three horses are introduced, to make a line in the bill about the Coronation; instead of insinuating that the Sovereign is to be present, and carrying on the farce of putting up the awning across the street to the royal box! instead of bringing forward prize-fighters to reduce the theatre to a Bear-garden, and instead of degrading the whole profession of acting, see the mode adopted at Covent Garden

The passing opportunity is seized to add new lustre to one of the most delightful and characteristic plays of our immortal Shakespeare; and while the spectator views in perfect security the magnificent consummation of regal authority, he is led to it by as much brilliancy of language, force of wit, and excellence of acting, as can in the present day be brought together for an evening's entertainment in any one Theatre. We have all along declined any free admissions to places of public amusement; and, therefore, we are not quite aware of whom, what is called "The Free Liet," consists; but at Drury Lane, a system crept in last year of making this observation at the bottom of the Play-bill, "The Free List" will be (with the exception of the Public Press,) suspended this evening, because forsooth, something which Elliston flattered himself was worth seeing, was to be played.

Now, we never were favoured with a sight of this catalogue of privileged persons at either House; and, therefore, cannot exactly appreciate their feelings; but, it strikes us, that a man must possess a more than average share of meanness, who would after one such prohibition ever take advantage of the favour again. We doubt whether Mr. Harris, or Mr. C. Kemble, or Mr. Fawcett, would continue to visit a family, the heads of which told them that they should be very glad to see them on the days when they had cold mutton and tripe for dinner; but that on those occasions when turtle or turbot, or venison smoked on their board, they and the rest of their visitors were excluded, excepting always those who could toady them. The system has been exploded since the departure of Lord Holland for the continent, and surely should not be revived where the feast is of reason only. It was all very well for a Play-house, where Mr. Winston is the Manager, but certainly not worthy of the Theatre Royal Covent Garden.

The Haymarket opens next Wednesday; but as we are not in the Theatrical Cabinet we have not had a peep at it: we hear it is beautiful, and time will shew.

TO JOHN BULL.

MR. BULL-In your remarks upon the storm now raised by the radicals against the Constitutional Society, you very justly observed, that upon the dry question of that Society's legality "all had not been said which might have been said. and you have in some measure supplied this defect, by the allegation of several cases, which exhibit this redoubted fraternity pursuing the same course, and therefore render the lawfulness of its adoption unquestionable upon their own high authority. There is, however, one case which has escaped you, and which, as appears to me, is more precisely in point than those which you have cited—I allude to the PROTEST. ANT SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

One prominent object of this Society is to institute and support presecutions against all persons, who in any way withstand the encroachments which itinerant dissenters are now systematically making upon the peace and religious unanimity of our village population. It has, for the last ten years, devoted annually to this patriotic purpose many hundred pounds; which money, Mr. Editor, is all raised by congregational collections amongst the members of most of the conventicles in the kingdom, and accounted for under no other names than those of the meeting-houses within which it was contributed. The subscription list, therefore, of this Society is, not only in a comparatively few instances, but entirely, anonymous; and as there is scarcely a dissenter who does not give his penny subscription towards the formation of the fund, were Mr. Scarlett's objection a valid one, there can be little doubt that most of the verdicts obtained by this Society would be found, upon investigation, to be vitiated, from there having been amongst the jurors persons who were themselves parties to the prosecution.

Mr. Evans was greatly scandalized at information he had received, that " a Chief Justice was amongst those persons who supported the Constitutional Association." Now it is remarkable, that here also the Society to which I am calling your attention furnishes a justificatory precedent; for no less a person than Sir James Mackintosh, the Ex-Chief Justice of Madras, and late Treasurer to Gerald's Subscription, appears,—not, indeed, as a pecuniary, but as an oratorical, supporter of it, having filled the chair on the anniversary of 1819, and most undoubtedly he saw no illegality in the combination; for, besides the high sanction which he gave by presiding over it, he proclaimed it, from his seat of dignity, "the fosterer and preserver of the English Consti-

Another of its Presidents was Mr. Alderman Wood, who, not in his ordinary capacity, but as Lord Mayor, conferred upon it, in 1817, the whole weight of his civic supremacy, and justified his appearance there, whilst Chief Magistrate, by the statement of his conception, that he maintained "the authority of the Government whilst he protected the privileges of the people."

A third President, or rather President elect, (for he was prevented attendance by his nomination upon an Election Committee, and was personated by Mr. Whithread) was Lord John Russell. But his letter of apology bears all the testimony we could desire; for he there characterizes the Society's triumphs as the " pur est victories man can have over man," and describes his intended presidency as the "perform ing of an honourable duty," " which he feels the greatest reluctance at being compelled to decline."

From the House of Commons we ascend to the House of Lords, and produce, as a fourth President, Lord Holland, whose approbation of the Society is very full and particular, extending both to "the manner in which the Society is composed," "the object which it is established to effect," and to "the lively, interesting, and most expressive detail," as given by Mr. Wilks, of the proceedings.

The Duke of Sussex shall close my series of authorities. His Royal Highness presided at the anniversary of 1818, and his testimony is, that the "Society accorded with his opi-nions of religious liberty," and that "in his Parliamentary character they should always find him a sincere advocate."

You will at once perceive, Mr. Editor, that all that has been alleged, either in the Court of King's Bench, or in the House of Commons, against the Constitutional Society, is here refuted upon authority to which the parties who brought the allegations must do homage; but in order to appreciate fully the weight of this authority, you ought to have before you the Philanthropic Gazettes, from which my extracts are made.

The religious liberty of Mr. Wilks, the secretary, in speaking evil of dignities, and holding up to reprobation public characters of the highest respectability both in Church and State, really beggars all description, especially when it was animated, in 1819, by the presidency of Sir James Mackintosh, and in 1820 by the presidency of Lord Holland. Do Mr. Editor, procure, if you can, the two supplementary numbers of the above Gazette, for May 26 of the former year, and May 24th of the latter.

The Proceedings of the Constitutional Society will be tame and insipid after you have read these documents; and if you will further produce the Christian Remembrancer of November last, you will there see a detailed account of a prosecution by these protectors of liberty, and of Mr. Justice Garrow's remark upon it, which must for ever silence even the hardiest of our patriots from casting even an inuendo against any combination prosecuting its objects by appeals to law, however formed, supported, or conducted. Your obedient servant, June 28th, 1821.

TO JOHN BULL.

A RETIRED OBSERVER.

MR. EDITOR,-Looking hastily at the Times Newspaper this morning, my eye wandered over an article commencing with a violent philippick against the JOHN BULL Paper, until my attention was arrested by the following paragraph:-

"We cannot close these remarks without asking what is become of Browne of illustrious memory? Where was he buried? for he is dead no doubt; the deep aid numerous wounds he received from the assassins at Milan closed his mortal career. Trick upon trick-falsehood upon falsehood -perjury upon perjury; these are the arts by which it is sought to ruin the Queen of England."

Now, Mr. Editor, having known Colonel Browne from his infancy, I am anxious to attempt to do some justice to this much-injured Gentleman, particularly since those whose immediate duty it seems to be are unaccountably silent.

Let the character of this Gentleman speak for itself, and let the public judge between that character and the base insinuations of the Times Newspaper. Colonel Browne left his native country sixteen years ago, at the age of eighteen, to join his countrymen in arms, and oppose the enemies of his country. He carried with him a valuant heart and an honorable mind.

He entered the 23d Regiment of Foot, or Welch Fuzileers, and at the capture of Martinique, he received a wound, from the effect of which he has never perfectly recovered. He continued to serve in that gallant corps, and also on the Staff of the Duke of Weilington, and was present at almost all the Battles in the Peninsula. At Vittoria he was desperately wounded in the head, and also in Having no interest or previous connection with the army, his merit was his only recommendation, by the strength of it alone he was gradually promoted, and he was advanced to the rank of Lieut.-Colonel at the express desire of the Duke of Wellington, as a reward for his conduct in the field of battle. Never did he purchase a single step. And, Mr. Editor, if his companions in arms, to every one of whom I can confidently appeal, can bear such honorable testimony to his character as a soldier, those who are acquainted with his family (to whom I can also as confidently refer) can produce numerous instances of his conduct as a son, a brother, and a friend, which do no less honour to his heart, and which have ensured him the esteem and respect of all who know him; and yet, Mr. Editor, this is the man against whem the unprincipled insinuations of the Times (before quoted) are directed. Fortunately the four deep and dangerous wounds which he did receive from the assassius at Milan have not closed his mortal career; he is recovering, though slowly, and his friends are anxiously expecting his return to England. Time may yet discover who the visians were that did attempt to take away his life in the streets of Milan, and also the metives by which they were actuated But by what motives can the Times be actuated, when it endeavours to throw a doubt upon the reality of this mur-derous transaction, the truth of which it knows? Did he really suppose Col. Browne was so far disabled by his wounds, as to be incapable of detending himself against these cowardly attacks; or did he wish to follow the example set him by a learned traducer, in the case of Baron Ompteda, and hope to injure with impunity, the fuir fame of a dead man? Look at his own philippic against John Bull, for his attacks upon private character, and see him in the very same article, making as PALSE, MALIGNANT, AND ATROCK-OUS ATTACK upon this honourable individual as it is possible to conceive, and tell me if the Times does not deserve all the infamy he is so ready to attach to JOHN BULL? Let him consider who not only began, but who perseveres in, traducing. and holding up to the fury of the mob, any body, and every body, whose conduct, or testimony happens to be in opposition to the line he chooses to adopt.

Let the Old Times recollect the barefaced and often refuted falsehoods he has advanced, and the number of attacks he has most unjustifiably made; let him reform himself, and draw no more comparisons, until he can set a better example. W.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

The Paris Journals of Wednesday last arrived yesterday. In the Chamber of Deputies, on the preceding day, the proposition of the grant for the maintenance of the Naval Forces, led to a brief dis-General For inquired whether "the ships destined to prevent the felonious and detestable traffic in slaves had discharged the duty assigned them in an exemplary manner?" M. Portal, Minister of Marine, in reply, observed, "I will not enter into any detail respections what M. For he said. ing what M. Foy has said, relatively to the traffic in slaves. A pe tition has been presented to the Chamber, and it is now before the Commission, to whom Ministers have given every possible informa-tion. The Chamber will see by their report that the Government has sincerely executed the treaties and laws which prohibit that odious trade."

A private letter from Paris, dated June 27, says who was at Laybach, in intimacy with the assembled Sovereigns, heard the Emperor Alexander say, in an impatient and emphatic tone, which he rarely shows, in speaking of the Greek commotions:

- 'No! I positively will not meddle with them. What! Is it only to depend upon the foolish enterprise of a youth, to impose upon nie the necessity of putting my forces in motion?' When the disorders broke out in Contantinople, Baron Strogonoff, the only Ambas-sador of Europe, who, by the geographical position of States, has the most frequent intercourse with the Divan, invited all the Foreign Ministers to meet at his residence, and to address, in common, a kind of Protest to the Grand Seignior, saying, that was the especial duty of Christians which they were about to fulfil, -They all signed the Protest, with the exception of the English Ambassador.

MADRID, JUNE 11 .- Gen. Don Francisco Copous has been nominated, by the King, Political Chief of Madrid, in the room of M. Baranda, who has been superseded, because he was not found efficient in the execution of the functions of this office under the present critical circumstances.

MADRID, JUNE 15th .- The Duke de l'Infontado has, during several days past, disappeared from the capital. It is not posi-tively known whither he has gone, nor the object of his departure.

The negociations and importunities to obtain the convocation o the Extraordinary Cortes are pursued with redoubled activity; it is indeed thought that the King will be forced to condescend to this

The private accounts from Spain, dated the middle of the present month, convey rather more alarming intelligence than we had reason to expect from the contents of those previously received; and it seems certain, as the kingdom remains in a very agitated state that Ferdinand will either continue the sittings of the Cortes some time longer, or an Extraordinary Cortes will be convened in the middle of the summer. The Spanish army is taking an active part in politics, and has presented a petition to the King, in favour of the prolongation of the sitting of the Cortes.

VIENNA, JUNE 14.—A letter from Constantinople, dated Muy 25, states, "We have enjoyed tranquillity during several days past; the markers are open, and affairs begin to resume their usual continues in prison. The prohibition of the exportation of corn is generally injurious. No ships, under any flag whatever, bound from the Black Sea, with grain, dare proceed."

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Orange, with their three sons, are gone to Spa, where the King of Prussia, the Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia and his consort, and many other distinguished personages are expected. It is said that our Court will go to Spa for some weeks.

The Sardinian Government has at length succeeded in obtaining of the Swiss Government to prohibit Messrs. Santa Rosa, Saint Marsan Lisio, and the Prince of Cisterna, from residing in the Canton of Geneva or in the Pays de Vaud. This measure will probably be extended to all the Piedmontese in all the Cantons of Switzerland. The Prince of Cisterna, and other Chiefs of the revolution, have been condemned to death and hung in effigy.

The affairs of Norway become interesting. His Majesty has addressed another very remarkable message relative to the liberty of the press, or rather to the abuse of it, which His Majesty says it is absolutely necessary to correct, and to attach a legal penalty to it in order to prevent civil and foreign war, discord in families, and the ruin of commerce and manufactures.

An article dated Aranda & Duero, June 9, says—"General Emperimado has taken prisoner, at Nava de Roa, D. Lorenzo Quintana, clergyman of Roa. This capture is considered to be as important, or even more so, than that of Merino himself, as he was his intimate friend, confident, and director, and enjoyed, m this whole district, more reputation than Merino. He has been brought to this town, and proceedings are commenced against NAPLES, JUNE 5. - By a letter which reached us on Saturday last, by a private conveyance, from Palermo, we are informed that an attempt of a dreadful nature has been lately made in that city. The substance of the fact is, that a numerous body, composed o the low class of the condition and the Neapolitan troops, had been formed with the object of rendering themselves musters of place, which they were then to sack and bathe with the blood of their enemies. They began to carry their plans into execution on Saturday, the 20th of May; fortunately, however, information had been received by the Civil Authorities, and by their prudent measures, and the activity of the Civic Guard, the conspirators were effectually checked, and a short alarm was the only evil sustained.

NAPLES, JUNE 6.—Yesterday the King retired to his summer residence of Capodimenta. His Majesty needs repose, having conrescated the greatest portion of his time, since his return, to sittings of the Council of State and public audiences, at which he deigned to hear the solicitations of the meanest among his subjects.—

The traitor Pepe having calumniated all his officers, by saying, and even causing it to be printed in Spain, that of his whole army, he only dared to look the Austrians in the face. Several of his Aidesde-Camp, or officers of his staff, have recently published a collective reply to him. They state, as a striking proof of the bravery of this ero of the Abruszes, that on hearing the whistling of the Austrian buils, he began lamenting that he had not the whole of his artillery de reserve to answer the enemy's musketry; and immediately afterwards rode off at full speed from the field-of battle, saying, be was going personally to inform bimself what had become of the said artitlery. The bruggart never re-appeared. Letters from Madrid of the 11th instant state, that denunciations and persecutions of all kinds augmented more and more in that country against the higher Clergy, whom it seemed to be deter-mined to banish en manne from the Peninsula. The accounts we received from Old Castile say, that all the reinforcements which have been sent to the Empecimedo have hitherto been unavailable. This famous General cannot come in contact with his antagonist, the Curate, Merino .- Idem.

CONSTANTINOPLE, JUNE 3 .- We have little news: the capital is tranquil. The embargo, on foreign vessels laden with corn, continues. The Miri, (Transury) however, pays in specie for every thing. The armaments are pursuing with all possible activity, especially in the amenal department.

HANOVER, JUNE 16 .- His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge arrived here this morning, to the great joy of the inhabitants, on his way to Ems: his Royal Highness will stay here a few days, and rejoin his Consort at Gottingen; they will proceed to Enis together. The quarterly courier has brought many effects from London for the King, and above twenty packages for his Majesty's use are expected in a few days, and will be sent to Hir en-hausen. It is now positively affirmed that his Majesty will arrive here in the beginning of September.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, WESTMINSTER, WEDNESDAY. The King v. Glossop.—This was a conviction before the Magistrates of Surrey, for an illegal performance at the Cobourg

Mr. Scarlet, for the prosecution, moved that the conviction of the Magistrates should be affirmed.

Mr. Marryat, upon three grounds, submitted that the defendant had been illegally convicted:—1st, that there was not sufficient proof of the identity of Mr. Glossop; 2d, that the witnesses had not been duly sworn; and, 3d, that there had been an irregularity not been duly aworn; and, 3d, that there had been an irregularity in the adjudgment of the penalty. With respect to the first ground, the identity of the defendant, the case stood thus;—James Brutus Booth had sworn that he knew Mr. Glossop; but he had given no Christian name to the party whom he knew: he had not said that he knew Mr. Joseph Glossop; and there was no proof that the Mr. Glossop known to Junius Brutus Booth was the Joseph Glossop now before their lordships.

The Lord Chief Justice thought that no reasonable man could have any doubt upon the point.

Mr. Marryat, in that case, would go farther. It was not, he should contend, sufficiently made out that the performance complained of had been under the direction of Mr. Giossop. Junius Britis Booth had spoken to an engagement made by him with Mr. Glossop; and had sworn that he (Junius) had twice rehearsed the character of Richard III. in the Cobourg Theatre, Mr. Glossop being present. But if Mr. Booth, on the one hand, had sworn this, he had, on the other hand, sworn that, during the specified re-bearsals, a gentleman named T. P. Cooke, had officiated upon the stage; and, upon such testimony, Mr. Glossop's direction could not, (as Mr. Marrant conceived), be taken to be made out.

The Court had no doubt as to the direction of the defendant.

Mr. Marryat proceeded to the undue swearing of the witnesses The conviction was stated to be upon the evidence of such and such persons who "came before us, and, after being duly sworn, de-posed, 'drc." Those persons, for aught that appeared upon the conviction, might have been sworn any where, or at any time; they might have been sworn in the Court of King's Bench, or before a Master in Chancery.

The Lord Chief Justice.—The words of the conviction are—"came before us, and, after being duly sworn, deposed, &c.' That appears to be sufficient.

Mr. Marryat's last point was the irregular adjudgment of the malty. Taking the offence to be proved, the act of parliament penalty. Taking the offence to be proved, the not of parliament directed that the penalty should go, one half to the informer, and the other half to the poor of the parish. Now, the Cobourg Theatre stood in the purish of St. Mary, Lambeth; the half penalty was adjudged to the poor " of the parish of Lambeth."

The Court, finding that there was only one parish in Lumbeth, over-ruled the objection.

Mr. Casberd and Mr. Adolphus followed Mr. Marryat.

Mr. Scarlett, for the prosecution, was about to reply, when— The Court intimated that observation was not necessary; the conviction must be affirmed.

THURSDAY .- The Judges fixed their Circuits this morning for be ensuing Summer Assizes as follows :-

Oxpond.—Sir C. Abbott, Knt. C. J.; the Hon. Mr. B. Garrow. NORPOLK.—Sir R. Dalles, Knt.; the Hon. Mr. J. Richardson. MIDLAND.—Sir R. Richards, Knt.; the Hon. Mr. J. Park. WKSTERN.—The Hon. Mr. B. Graham; the Hon. Mr. J. Best. Home.—The Hon. Mr. B. Wood; the Hon. Mr. J. Burroughs.

NORTHERN.-The Hon. Mr. J. Bayley; the Hon. Mr. J.

Holroyd. The King v. W. H. E. Floyer, Esq.—The Solicitor-General prayed the judgment of the Court upon this defendant, a Magis-trate of the County of Stafford, who had suffered judgment to go by default to an information, charging him with being the author of by definite to an information, our region in the best published in The Litchfield Mercury, in 1819, upon the character and conduct of Sir Robert Peel, Bart. imputing to him, among other libellous matters, that he was the scavenger to the Treasury Bench, and that he was guilty of certain corrupt and improper practices during the Election for the Borough of Tamworth, in the year 181a.

It will be recollected that the defendant was some time since the prosecutor of Mr. Peel and Mr. Dawson, the son and son-in-law of Sir R. Peel, for endeavouring to incite him to fight a duel. That dispute, as well as the libels, which were the subject of the present proceeding, arose out of the contest at the last General Election for the Borough of Tamworth, in which the defendant espoused the interests of Lord C. Townsend, and Sir Robert Peel those of his son. Affidavits were now put in on both sides; those for the prosecution, for the purpose of shewing that the prosecutor took no part in the lampoons and other inflammatory publications, which issued from the press during the contest in question, and that the defendant's libels were wholly unjustifiable by any conduct on the part of the prosecutor; and those in defence, for the purpose of shewing that the defendent was entirely influenced in his conduct, by a belief that the Host. Baronet was cognizant of, and was the nuthor of those irritating publications which appeared, tending to injure his reputation.

The Solicitor-General addressed the Court in aggravation of punishment, and contended, that from a review of all the circumstances of the case, he was justified in attributing to the defendant base and dishonourable motives, for the conduct he had pursued towards the prosecutor.

Mr. Searietf, for the defendant, urged, that there was no ground for imputing to his client any motive that was discreditable to a Gentleman, under the carrie of provocation, which, he had believed marked the conduct of the prosecutor, and some members of his family, at the time the alleged libels were written.

Mr. J. Williams, on the same side, was stopped at one o'clock, by The Lord Chief Justice, who said the case must stand over till Monday, as the Jury was then waiting for him at Guildhall.

Monday, as the Jury was then waiting for him at Gundau.

FRIBAY.—The King v. Edward King.—Mr. Walford moved, that Edward King, of Chancery-lane, the caricature and news-vender, be brought up, charged with an indictment for the sale and publication of a false and scandalous libel upon His Majesty, for which a true Bill was found against him by the Grand Jury at Wastminster on Thursday at the instance of the Constitutional Westminster, on Thursday, at the instance of the Constitutional Association. He accordingly appeared on the floor of the Court, in Association. He accordingly appeared on the floor of the Court, in the custody of the tipstaff, when the indictment was read; he pleaded Not Guilty, and received notice of trial for the Sittings

Mr. Blackburn said the defendant was prepared with bail for his appearance; but that he could not find bail for his good behaviour, according to the 60th of Geo. III. c. 9, sec. 16, which requires, that when any person is brought up to give bail for a libel, it shall be "a part of the condition of the recognizance to be entered into by such person and his or her bail, that the person so charged shall be of good behaviour during the continuance of such recogpizance."

The Court instantly decided that the condition of " good behaviour" could not be dispensed with, and must form part of the recognizance.

After a short delay two persons came forward, and joined King in the recognizance; himself in 801, and the other two in 401, each; when King was discharged out of custody.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

On Tuesday the Duke of York held a Levee, as Commander-in-Chief, at his office in the Horse Guants.

On Thursday the Marquis of Londonderry had an audience of His Majesty at the Palace in Pall Mall; and in the course of the day the King received the Duchess of Gloucester, and the Princesses Augusta and Sophia.

THE CORONATION .- The Lords' Committee of Council appointed to consider of His Majesty's Coronation, assembled on Wednesday at Whitehull. Barl Harrowhy sat as President, and among the other distinguished individuals present, were their Royal Highnesses. other distinguissed harviculars present, were their Koyai Highnesses the Dukes of York, Clarence, and Gloucester, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Montrose, the Marquis Camden, Burl Donoughmore, Lord George Beresford, Lord C. Bentinck, Sir W. Scott, Sir Henry Russell, Sturges Bourne, Esq. &c. In order to prevent any interruption to the workmen in the Abbey, the Earl Marshal has resolved to exclude all strangers until the arrangements shall be complete; every possible facility will then be afforded to gratify the public. The entire band of Gentlemen Pensioners are to attend the Coronation of His Majesty. Summonses have been issued for the Knights Commanders of the Bath, whose appearance will greatly add to the splendour of the solemnity, their under dress being similar to that of the Knights Grand Crosses. The tickets of admission to the Abbey are in progress. The whole distribution of these tickets will rest with the Earl Marshal, but as yet no positive calculation has been made of the number which shall be issued

A splendid suit of armour has been selected from those in the Tower, and has been placed in a state of preparation, for the purpose of being presented, according to etiquette, by his Grace the Duke of Wellington, as Master of the Ordnance, to the Champion. The large saddle for the Champion's horse is of crimson velvet, richly ornamented; the reins, headstall, and the other trappings, are also richly trimmed with gold and silver lace; from which apare also richy trimmed with gold and silver ince; from which append, at different distances, bullion bassels. The caps for the pistol cases, as well as the two girths, are laced and fringed in a saperb style, corresponding with the saddle. The pistol cases themselves are lined with crimson velver, and bound with lace, both gold and silver. The stirrups are very large, after the Moorish fashion, and together with their straps, lined with crimson velvet and gold and silver lace. The helmet of the Champion is surmounted by a pleadid plume of feathers, composed of three colours—red, blue, and white; there is also a plume for the headstall of the horse. The articles detached from, but belonging to the Champion's armour, are a pair of richly ornamented pistols, a pair of gnuntlets, a sword, and an oval shield, upon which is painted the arms of the Dymocke family, which are repeated upon two trumpet hamers, to be borne by the Champion's Esquires, who will likewise carry his lance, which is gilt, and ornamented with gold fringe round about the

Mr. Dymocke, in the hope that he may have the honour of personating the character of His Majesty's Champion on the day of Coronation, has been for some time taking lessons at Astley's riding-school, and has become tolerably perfect in the management of a charger. On Friday he rode for the first time in a sult of armour, and went through many of the evolutions of an ancient Knight. The horse which is to be ridden by the Champion has been chosen from Astley's stud; it is a powerful entire horse, pie-balled black and white, and is extremely tractable. Two other horses, upon which the Lord High Constable and the Lord High Steward are to ride, have also been chosen from the same stud; one is perfectly black, the other white; they are about 14 and a half hands high.

The Champion's stable is nearly completed. There is a platform, with a gentle ascent, leading from the gates to the Royal platform, down which the cavalcade will proceed into the Hall and all its fitments will become the property of the Champion; it is substantially built, and covered with lead is called the homage, gold and silver Coronation. Coins or Medals are acattered about the Abbey.

The admission tickets to Westminster Abbey, designed by Sir William Congreve, are now ready for distribution; but will not be issued till the claims of all persons entitled to tickets are distinctly arranged. The execution is very good, and the design beautiful In the centre, there is a circular medallion, containing a representation of His Majesty seated in St. Edward's Chair, attired in his Coronation robes—an Angel descends, and places the Crown on his head, while Britannia presents him with the Scoptre of England. He is surrounded by allegorical figures representing Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and by other figures carrying the Scales and Sword of Justice. At the top of this medallion are the King's Arms, with the motto " Dieu et mon Droit," and the whole is eacircled by a wreath composed of the Ross, the Shamrock, and Thistle; within which is the inscription, "Geo. IV. Det Gratis Britanniarum Rez Fid. Def." On the left hand corner of the ticket is engraved "Geo. IV." and on the right, a small space for the number. At the bottom is the word "Abbey," and a line on which the Lord Great Chamberlain will sign his name and affix his seal. The colours are alternately blue and red, WESTMINSTER ABBRY .- Great interest is making for a peep at . the interior of Westminster Abbey, for the approach and we understand great orders have been given for the Original Macassar Oil, prepared by Rowland and Son. The Pearesses must have their superb diamonds, which ornament the hair rendered pre-eminently beautiful by the superlative gloss which the Macassar Oil gives to that fine ornament of the human frame.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We omitted, in our last publication, to notice the meeting of the court of Claims on Friday the 22d. The Court had purposely ad-Court of Claims on Friday the 22d. The Court had purposely adjourned to that day to allow time for the appointment of a deputy by the co-heiresses of the important office of Lord Great Chamberlain of England, Lady Willoughby, of Eresby, and the Marchioness of Chemondeley, to receive the Royal approbation, with the customary forms. On Friday Loal Gwyder presented to the Court His Majesty's most gracious approbation of their Ludyships' appointment of himself to be their deputy. His Lordship then presented a petition in the usual form, claiming, as Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, to exercise this high office at the ensuing Coronation, with the fees, as heretofore; which was allowed."

On Thursday a Court of Common Council was held at Guildhall for the purpose of discussing a motion of Mr. Oldham's, for rescinding the resolution of the Court, made on the 13th of July last, that the censure of the Court on Alderman Bridges should be inscribed under the statute of Alderman Beckford. HOUSE OF COMMONS, SATURDAY.

On the Order of the Day for receiving the Report of the Duke of Clarence's Annuity Bill, Sir R. Fergusson protested against giving the 18,000l. arrears. He wished also to ask, whether the Queen was to be crowned.

Lord Londonderry said his opinion on this subject was, that the right of calling her Majesty to the Coronation lay with the King, and he should not advise her Majesty being present.

Sir R. Fergusson asked if her Majesty had made any application on the subject; and when?

Lord Londonderry said, her Majesty had applied on Thursday last; her application was under the consideration of the proper Court—the Privy Council.

Mr. Denman complained of the delay which had taken place, in giving an unswer.

Lord Londonderry thought her Majesty's advisers were rather to be blamed for delay; they had known his sentiments on the subject more than two months, and had they thought there was any ground for this application they should have come long ago.

Mr. Searlett defended her Majesty's Counsel against the charge of delay, the uncertainty of the ceremony taking place, and the improbability of her Majesty being excluded, rendered earlier application improper. There was only one instance in our history of a Queen Consort being excluded, that was the Queen of Charles II.

and she was a Catholic.

Mr. Denman said the Queen's Memorial was delivered by Lord Hood to Lord Sidmouth on Wednesday; an answer was to have been given on Thursday. No answer being sent, two letters passed, this morning her Majesty forwarded a Memorial, praying to be heard by her Counsel, as to her claim, before the Privy Council.

Col. Davies wished to know what the expences of the Coronation would be?—100,0001, had been taken on account, but to look at the preparation, 500,000l. would not pay. He understood the charge for hiring robes would exceed 30,000l.

Sir M. Cholmondeley said, if a voluntary contribution had been opened, he was convinced more money than would have bean required would have been subscribed.

Mr. Scarlett said, it was calculated 150,000 seats to see the procession would be let at six guinens cach—let one guinea in each seat be given up by the proprietors, and a sufficient sum would be raised.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, be believed a very trifling additional sum, to be granted next session, would defray the ex-

The other Orders were disposed of, and the House adjourned.

POLICE.

Eow-Street.-On Wednesday William Shakesly, a boy aged 3, was charged with stealing 20 sovereigns, the property of Mr. Stenson, of Rupert-street, Haymarket, schoolmuster.

The prisoner was a scholar of Mr. Stenson, and in consequence of misconduct was locked up in the school-room by himself, during the period the other boys went to dinner. Previous to this Mr. Stenson had deposited a bag containing 20 sovereigns in his desk stenson had deposited a hig containing zo sovereigns in ms desk in the school-room, which remained unlocked. After keeping the boy about two hours, he liberated him, and soon afterwards discovered that the bag and sovereigns were gone. Mr. Stenson immediately had the prisoner apprehended, and be confessed that be stole the sovereigns, and had sold them to a boy he accidently met in the street for a penny. - He was fully committed to Newgate for MANSION HOUSE .- On Thursday the information filed at the iastance of Mr. ex-Sheriff Parkins against the secretaries of the Constitutional Society for illegally uniting and prosecuting the venders of libellous and seditious pamphlets, was heard before the Lord Mayor. The informer's name was Tyler, a pamphlet-vender. Mr. Murray and Mr. Sharp, the secretaries, were assisted by Mr. Adolphus as Counsel.

The Lord Mayor, conceiving the subject to be of a nature in which he might require legal assistance, had requested the attendance of the professional gentleman then on his left, Mr. Newman, the city solicitor.

The information was then read, and Mr. Sharp, being called upon, pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Thackeray opened the case upon the part of the informant by observing, that he thought little more was necessary for him to do, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, than to call evidence in support of the averments in the information. He dis-claimed for himself and his friend, Mr. Parkins, all personal motives of hostility to the defendant, or any of the members of the Association; he declared himself equally hostile with them to disloyalty and sedition, and considered no evils more destructive to the peace and happiness of the community. His only object and that of his friend, was to put a stop to the proceedings of an Association which they considered to be contrary to law. The preunble of the act on which he proceeded had reference only to the first section, and that the enactments were general, affecting all societies within the descriptive words of the act. The only exception he could discover was in favour of Freemasons lodges; but even in their case the lodge must be registered, and would it be said that a society, with the great name of Lord Wellington enrolled among its members, ought not also to be registered? Did it not imply that there was something suspicious in its nature, although it had assumed a plausible designation? By the 57th of the late King, religious and charitable societies were exempted from the operation of the former statute, which proved that they were before considered as clearly liable under it; ke therefore contended, that all societies not coming under these exceptions, whatever might be the views, "be their intents wicked or charitable," were within the meaning of the statute. He asked why this society had not prosecuted both sides of the question? why had they not procouted for libels against the Queen? and why had not such caricatures as these met their vengence? (Mr. way and not such caricatures as these met their vengenace? (Mr. Thackersy here produced two indecent pictures.) I do not, said he, exhibit them publicly, for I suppose slandering is not reckoned among the objects which the Association profess to suppress. One libeller of the Queen had indeed here proceeding a suppress. libeller of the Queen had indeed been proceeded against, the Rev. Mr. Blacow, but that was not the act of this Association. They sought out the poor starving bookseller, who might be ignorant of what he sold, and compelled to the sale to procure an existence while this libel, which was delivered from the pulpit, they allowed to pass unnoticed. He wished only for a decision upon the legality of the Association, and therefore called only for the mildest penalty; and concluded a speech of about half an hour by adjuring his Lord ship, as he valued his public character, and as he would be answerable at a higher tribunal, to give that decision which be believed

Mr. Parkins was then called and sworn.

Previously to his examination, Mr. Adolphus asked him if he was to have any share in the penalty, in case of conviction, as it was now avowed that a penalty was sought for?

Mr. Parkins replied, Certainly not. Mr. Parkins was then examined. Knew the Association. They met at No. 6, New Bridge-street; there was a brass plate, with the words "Constitutional Association," on the door. Saw a young man, when he slice knows to be Orten, at the door, who introduced him up stairs. Saw the defendant (Sharp) there; asked him to give him the latest list of subscribers, which he did very politely; and also a copy of a circular letter, signed by himself, and a

On his cross-examination by Mr. Adolphus, he said be had never attended any meeting of the Association; did not go for the purpose of getting evidence for this information, but for general information; did not recollect whether or not he had applied Lord Mayor before he saw Mr. Sharp, but rather thought he had; never told Mr. Sharp he thought the Association a good one.

On being asked if he had not said that Mr. Thuckerny wished of the discovery. He never mentioned Mr. Thackeray where to India, Mr. Thackeray objected to the question as irrelevant.

It was, however, persisted in; and Mr. Parkius denied having so said. What he said was, that he thought, us Mr. Tiackeray had found out that the Association was illegal, he ought to have the credit of the discovery. He never mentioned Mr. Thackeray's uncle, nor did be known as believe that Mr. Thackeray was, going to India. did he know or believe that Mr. Thackeray was going to India-He thought the credit of the case might be useful to Mr. Thackeray, as a young man, in his profession.

The printed address of the Association was then put in as evidence, and certain parts of it read, particularly the name of Mr. Sharp, Honourary Secretary, and again in the list of sub-cribers, and in the declaratory resolutions.

Mr. Sholton, the Clerk of the Peace for the City of London, proved that the Association was not registered at his office. Not one society, except the Freemasons, had been registered with him under the Act in question.

Mr. Adolphus read from his brief a list of about twenty public ocieties, of different descriptions, none of which, Mr. Shelton said,

This closed the case for the informant.

Mr. Adolphus was glad the time was at length come for him to Mr. Adolphus was gist the time was at rengin come for annia was asswer the attacks, which had for so long a time been made against his client, Mr. Sharp, but in reality against the Association, who were now called upon to answer upon a common information under a penal statute. The learned Gentleman proceeded to pass a high eulogium on the Association and its proceedings. He then took a view of the history of the Act, and quoted the prenmble to shew the nature and description of societies intended to be suppressed, which were clearly designated, while the objects of the present Association were entirely opposite. He denied that the address of the Association could be construed into a declaration under the Act, and remarked that the word "test" was omitted in the information, because it was known that there was no test subscribed or assented to. He instanced a case of a society which should be formed for the encouragement of home manufactures, the members of which should assent to a declaration to dine together and to have a ball, where every one must appear in the manufacture of the country. This would be a declaration not required by law: but would any one venture to say that this was an illegal combination? This construction would equally effect numberless valuable societies and institutions; and let it be remembered that this object is now avowed, as the Learned Gentleman had contended, that "be their intents wicked or charitable," they were all equally within the meaning of the Act. Thus he might claim an acquittal on the bigh ground of the principles of the Association, and depled that any test existed among them; but there was not even a tittle of evidence in support of the facts set forth in the information. The existence of the Association had not been proved; no evidence given that they ever met. Mr. Parkins had seen only Mr. Sharp, alone in a room,—and solitude and society he had always understood were direct opposites. No proof had been adduced but the list of subscribers, and persons might be subscribers and yet not members. Even in the list Mr. Sharp was set down as Secretary, and it seldom happened that the secretary was a member of a society. Nobody thought that the Clerk of the House of Commons was therefore a Member. The very printed address had not been proved to have been issued by the society; the manuscript should have been produced, and evidence brought forward tracing it to the defendant.—The Learned Gentleman concluded by repeating that he had a right to claim a decision in his favour upon the high ground that the Association was not within the meaning of the Act: but, even if that should fail him, upon the total absence of evidence to prove the facts stated in the information.

The Lord Mayor consulted for a few minutes with Mr. Newman, when the latter gave the decision that his Lordship thought there was not evidence before him to induce him to pronounce the Association an illegal combination, and therefore he dismissed the

The information against Mr. Murray was then withdrawn.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

BIRMINGHAM .- On Saturday se'nnight, between eleven and twelve o'clock in the day, a young lady was attacked by a ruffian in the lane leading from the house of Dr. John Johnstone, at Edgbaston, who violently pushed her into the ditch, and snatched from her hand a velvet bug, containing a watch and other articles. her giving the alarm, a pursuit was immediately made after the robber, and the culprit was secured. He has been committed to Warwick gaol.

A most daring attack was made on the evening of Saturday se'nnight, at Checkuel, on the forest. Mr. Hanserd, of Wilton, was returning home with Mr. Butler, a friend, in a single tionse chaise, when they were attacked by four ruffians armed with sticks, who, with dreadful imprecations, demanded money, and at the same time stunned Mr. Hanserd by a blow on the head with a bludgeon, and robbed him of 41. and some silver, together with his watch and hat. Mr. Butler was also robbed of 2l. and the villains, after being in possession of their booty, cut the harness, and left

GLASGOW .-- A Society for the Encouragement of the Arts, upon a plan nearly similar to that of the British Institution, in Pall-Mall, has been established here. LEEDS.—At a meeting held here on Monday week it was resolved that the Corporation should dine together on the day of his Majesty's Coronation; and that all the Clergy of the parish, the officers of the 15th Hussars, of the Recruiting Staff of the Yeomanry, and of the Volunteers, should be invited.

LYAN. - There is now living in this town, a widow named Miller, at the advanced age of 107 years, in perfect health; she retains her faculties in every respect, except her sight, but she is not blind: she walks about the town, and what makes it most remarkable, she has lived in the reigns of four King Georges, and can well re-member the Coronation of George the First; she was born on the very day that Queen Anne died.

MANCHESTER.—Preparations are already on the tapis in many parts of the Empire, for brilliant rejoicings upon the illustrious oc-casion of our beloved Sovereign's Coronation. The worthy municipal officers of this place have appointed Wednesday next, at ten o'clock, for a public meeting to determine upon the course which shall be pursued here, in giving full effect to the celebration of the august ceremony.

MONTROSE.—On the 9th inst. as some young men were amusing themselves with the exhibition of legerdemain tricks, in a publichouse in this town, one of them, while performing the deception of swallowing a knife, actually allowed it to slip down into his stomuch, to the great consternation of this awkward imitator of Katterfelto and Bonz. It was an entire week before it passed through the intestinal canal, without giving much uneasiness; and was found to be a penkn.fe, about three inches long, and weighed three quarters of an ounce.

NEWCASTLE.—Subscription has been started of 10s. 6d. each person, (more would have been raised at a penny,) to buy a service of plate, value 2 or 3,000l. for Mr. Alderman Wood, in consideration of his services a sudderman, sheriff, and protector of the Queen!
The Lord Mayor of London, Mr. Hume, and a Mr. Forster, are named as the trustees, and printed circulars have been sent, with ruled columns for names; the money to be paid down, directed to a journeyman flax-dresser of this town belonging to an ale-house club, which had obtained her Majesty's permission to take the title of "the Queen's friends." He was appointed receiver here.—We understand there are to be several oxen and other animals roasted whole in this town in commemoration of the Coronation, and that a great quantity of malt liquor will be given away. One thousand pounds have been voted by the Common Council to the Mayor for the occasion; but he is not to be limited in the rejoicing expences to that sum. The pants, or water-fountains, are to run something better than water on the occasion. At George III.'s Coronation, a temporary erection on the Sandhill, ran wine, which was nearly all wasted, owing to the pressure and ruleness of the populace.

Wemyss Colliery, in Scotland, in consequence of its having caught fee. Two young women were at the moment going down the shaft, and being met by a current of suffocating vapour, were instantly deprived of sense, and fell to the bottom. One of them was got out alive, but on Tuesday night sie was still speechless, and tittle hope entertained of her recovery; the other when got out was dead. The fire, by the assistance of an engine from Wernysscastle, was extinguished the same night.

Castle, was extinguished the same night.

Workerter.— The foundation stone of St. Clement's new church in this city, was laid last week, amidst an immense number of spectators, by Francis Hooper, the present Mayor.

York.—The musicians of the 2d West York Militia, were so impeded and insulted, in going their tatoo rounds, in this city, last week, that their colonel had to order them to be attended by a strong picquet gaard, and was finally compelled to abridge the round of the tatoo beat, from an apprehension that some fraces might occur, in a more extended perambulation.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

An Inquest was taken on Tuesday at the Hoop and Grapes avern, Westminster, on the body of William Cogle, who was raven, vrestminster, on the body of William Cogle, who was killed in the riot at Westminster a few days since; when the Jury after examining a variety of witnesses pronounced a Verdict of Wilful Murder against James Macarthy, Richard Roebotham, William Hansby, Thomas Lee, and James Jones,—Macarthy is a drammer—the prisoners were committed for trial. The Jury expressed their regret at the drunken and disorderly conduct of the soldiery on the day of the Rattle of Waterloo and attented that his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief would give direc-tions that in future a stop might be put to a recurrence of those dis-graceful scenes. CAUTION. On Monday, June 21, about five in the evening, a woman calling herself Mrs. Towers, came to the apartments of Mr. S. Walter, 101, Wardour-street, Soho, and sent the young girl, bis daughter, on an errand; during which time she took from a chest of drawers nine new linen sheets, marked W. J. W. three shirts, marked the same, two great coats, two dress coats, three pair of pantaloons, a pair of drab breeches and gaiters, and other property also, from a writing desk, 451. in notes and gold, four notes of 101. each, of which the numbers are known.

On Tuesday a fine boy, the son of Mr. Watson, of Park-lane, baving been improductly left at a window on the first floor, during the absence of the servant, got upon a chair, and in looking through the window lost his balance; he fell to the ground, his end struck against some stones, his skull was dreadfully fractured He died almost instantly.

I On Thussiay morning a lady of the name of Bond, who resided n Little Mary-le-bone-street, was found suspended from the tester of her bed. She was cut down immediately, and surgical assistance procured, but she was quite dead.

An atrocious robbery was committed a few days since in Epping Forest, on a poor old man who sells fish, and who was returning from London in his cart, accompanied by his two sons, one a boy eight years old, by a man having the appearance of a blacksmith. The fellow beat the old man and his eldest son, and after robbing him of near 21, in silver left him for dead. He was discovered in the evening by Mr. Wilson of the Horns Tavern on the Forest, who was accidentally passing, and who very humanely had him conveyed to his own house.

CORN EXCHANGE, FRIDAY, JUNE 29. Though we have had few fresh arrivals of Wheat since Monday, some quantify of that day's arrival remained over on account of its inferior quality, which met a heavy sale to-day on rather lower terms.—Barley being scarce commends a trifling advance in value; and in Beaus and Pease there is no alteration.—The supply of Oats this week has been limited, and fine fresh corn obtains rather better prices, but the trade on the whole is dull.—In other articles we have no variation to notice.

The importers of Plantation Sugar persevers in effecting sales immediately on the samples coming up from the Docks, the result of which is, that a reduction of ls. per cwt. has been submitted to, and somewhat more upon Soft Browns, which press heavily upon the Market. The wind having at length come round to the westward, the augmentation to our stock of West India and other produce will be very considerable, when, in all likelihood, the present low prices of Sugar will not be supported. Brown Jamaious 56s. to 59s.; Middling 69s. to 65s; Good Bright Scales 66s. to 72s. up to 78s. and 81s. for very fine.—Notwitheranding the automatical statement. and 81s. for very fine. - Notwithstanding the numerous public sales for Coffee which have taken place, prices may be quoted at an advance of 2s. per cwt. On Thursday 117s. 6d. was realized for a p arcel of good St. Domingo, and yesterday good to fine ordinary Jamaica 116s. to 122s.; Middling to good Middling 128s. to 137s. up to 144s.6d. for fine Middling, whilst the orders from the Continent continue so considerable that the present value may be maintained; at the same time, the determination of the importors immediately to realize may operate considerably in preventing much, if any further enhancement.—Such is the languid state of the Rum Mar-ket, that there is some difficulty in giving correct quotations. Leeward Island Proofs are stated to have brought only is. 3d. to is. 4d. per gallon, and Jamaicas proportionably depreciated.—
Owing to the advices from Liverpool being very favourable, there has been but a moderate business in Cotton. About 1000 bales have been disposed of at the currency of the preceding week. It would appear that the effects of a settled peace are not yet demonstrable, with reference to merchandize, for, with the exception of Coffee and Indigo, the records of each succeeding week have almost uniformly announced a deterioration of value; and what safe prices are, or will be, in the absence of all speculation, it would be absurd to hazard an opinion upon.

other Ancient Poems.

Printed at Bdinburgh by Walter Chepman and Androw Myllar, in the year M ecce viij.

There are few volumes, it is presumed, which exceed, either in interest or value, this Collectiou of Ancient Poetry. The original, of which the present is an accurate and faithful Reprint, is preserved in the Advocates' Library, and is unquestionably unique. From containing the very earliest productions of the Scottish Press, (and indeed, the only printed fragments in the vernacular tongue, previous to the year 1540, which have escaped destraction) it may be recknowed a curiosity of no ordinary kind. But it is possessed of still greater value, from the illustration which it gives of the language and literature of Scotland.

In reprinting this volume, every care has been taken to make it as nearly as possible an exact fac simile of the original, with the curious wood cut devices of the Printers. The Publishers fatter themselves, that, as a specimen of Black Letter printing, it will do honour to the Ballantyne Press, and that it will be found one of the most elegant Republications of Ancient Literature which has as yet appeared.

As the impression is, limited, Gentlemen who wish to secure Copies, after requested to forward their names with as little delay as possible.

To Subscribers the Price will not exceed Two Guineas and a Half.

"The great charm of this singular composition consists in perpetual sallies and outbreakings of a rich and poetical imagination. It is this frequent kindling of the diviner spirit—this tendency to rise above the trivial subjects among which he has chosen to disport himself, and this power of connecting grand or beautiful conceptions with the representation of vulgar objects or indicrous occurrences, that first recommended this Poem to our notice, and still aseem to us to entitle it to more general notoricty. —Edinburgh Review, No. XLVII.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

MONDAY.

The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the following Bills:—The Sinking Fund Loan, the Exchequer Bills, the Irish Treasury Bills, the Bank of Ireland, the Wool Importation, the Irish Stock Transfer, the Naval Stores, the Scottish Distilleries Drawbacks, and the Scottish Malt Duties, the Coal Mines Drawbacks, the Wool Registery, the Vagrant Laws Amendment, the CountyRates, the Justices of the Peace, the East India Trade, the Fur Trade Begulation, the Salvage Acts Amendment, the British White Herring Fishery, the Irish Coal Yards, the Irish Jail Fees, the Thames Lastage and Ballastage Bills, and a large number of Private Bills.

Lord Dacre withdraw the Bankrupt Laws Amendment Bill, upon the assurance from the Lord Chancellor, that his Lordship would, early next Session, propose a Bill to amend the Bankrupt Laws.

The Rarl of Darnley moved an Address to the King on the present distresses and difficulties of the country. The Noble Earl confended, that economy was necessary, and that too in a more extended sense than hitherto pursued by Government. He adverted to the distressed state of agriculture, and read various parts of the Comment Report of the Comment Report of the Authors of the Comment Report of the Authors.

to the distremed state of agriculture, and read various parts of the Commons' Report on that subject. Hitherto the rents had been paid out of the capital or credit of the tenants; the taxes had also been paid, and there had consequently been no defalcation in the revenue. But it was impossible that tenants should be able for another year to continue to pay their rents out of their capital or oredit. He admitted that the difficulties of the agriculturists had arisen entirely from the amount of taxation; and contended that the repeal of the agricultural horse tax would not produce relief to the amount of more than two per cent. on the rests of land throughout the kingdom. He then entered into a variety of statements and calculations to show that a material saving might be made in the different establishments. He recomwith eighty-two sail of the line and the same number of frigates fit for service, this country possessed a sufficient naval force to meet all accidents. With respect to the Civil List, he would say, that however in prosperous times it might be proper that Royalty should be surrounded with every degree of splendour which the country could afford, yet in times of difficulty and distress nothing would countribute more possessible to hear their price. countribute more powerfully to induce the people to bear their pri-zations patiently, than the example of economy in the highest quarter. In the other departments of the Civil List, considerable re-trenchments might be made, probably to the amount of 150,0001. All the savings which he had enumerated would amount together . 1000.000 To this might be added at least 500,000l, which might be saved to the public, if a better mode of collecting the revenue were adopted. A revenue of six, y millions was collected in this country at the expence of of 4,360,000l. whilst in Ireland the proportion was still higher. The Noble h arl concluded by mov-ing an Address, embodying the views contained in his speech, and requesting that His Majesty would take into his most serious con-sideration the distresses and difficulties of the country.

The Earl of Liverpool assured the Noble Earl, that in respect of the distresses of the country, no man could be more alive than he (Lord Liverpool) was. He agreed entirely with the Seport of the Committee on the state of Agriculture, narvely, that he legislative measure could afford material relief. Nay, he would say, that to legislate in such cases would not only do no and, but that by attempting to do something, harm might be done. In desired those who complained so loudly of the distresses of agriculture, to look over Europe and America, and see whether distress did not operate over Europe and America, and see whether distress did not in other countries to a still greater extent than in England. operate

Russia, in Poland, and in various parts of Germany, wherever corn was the chief price grown, the sufferings of the agriculturists exceeded our work. The artificial state in which not England alone, but the whole world had been placed by a war of twenty four years duration, not to be compared in its character to any war in the recollection of man. With respect to agriculture, its very situation operated its own cure; for the cheapness of provisions so much complained of, was a counteracting cause to the existing distress. Legislative measures would prevent, without superseding, that natural cure which certain things left to themselves would have a tendency to effect. At the same time be was ready to admit that the fire as it could be carried consistently with the security and dignity of the country, the safe remedy was economy. But the Noble Earl had not done justice to His Majesty's Government in taking no notice of the repeated efforts which it had made to retrench. It ought not to be forgotten, that through the efficacy of those efforts, the public expenditure was this year, 1,800,000 less than in the preceding year. This was a proof of the entract determination of Ministers to take the earliest opportunity of reducing expense whenever its necessity no longer existed. Neither was it correct to say, that no investigation had taken place on the subject. As early as the year 1817, a Commission had been established to make a complete investigation in the department which seemed most to require it—that of the customs. The result had been a saving of 80,0001. annually ever since, and another annual saving of 200,0001, in progress.

On the part of Government all that could be effected without gross injustice in the way of economy and retrenchment, had been do He objected to the Address proposed by the Noble Earl, but as one had been presented by the other House, and it might afford some satisfaction to Parliament and the country, that the same pledge should be recorded by a vote of their Lordships, he should agree to present an Address to His Majesty, but so modified as to meet his (Lord L.'s) own views of the subject. The Noble Earl then moved, as an amendment to the original Address, an almost literal copy of that moved and carried by Mr. Bankes, in the Commons.

Lord Grosvenor supported the original motion, and took occasion to observe that, one source of additional expence was the approaching Coronation. It had been estimated at 100,000l. but it was apparent, and it had indeed since been admitted, that it would exceed that sum. He thought the measure unnecessary and injudicious, and that it ought not to have been recommended by the advisers of the Crown under present circumstances. For, even supposing that the law was clear, and declared is positive terms, that the Queen had no right to be crowned, still, as a matter of grace, he thought it was injudicious to recommend a Coronation, from which she should be excluded. The ground on which her right was contested, was the single precedent of Henry VII. having been crowned alone, when it was supposed that his marriage with his Queen had been celebrated. But this ground must fail, for the marriage of that Monarch had only taken place after his Committon so that there Monarch had only taken place after his Coronation, so that there was at the time no Queen to be crowned. He had heard also, that the procession, at the approaching Ceremony, was to be bemmed in on all sides by soldiers. That would be the greatest insult which in on all sides by soldiers. That would be the greatest insult which could be put both upon the King and the people of this country.—
It would make him appear like an Oriental despot, moving in the midst of his satraps. He should wish to see the Monarch surrounded by hosts of hearts, and not by hosts of bayonets.

Lord Melville observed, that considerable diminution had been made in the expences of the current year, and, in his opinion, those reductions were carried as far as was compatible with the safety of the State. There was one head upon which the necessity of the state. Incre was one need upon which he would shortly advert. It related to the extest of naval force, which this country ought to maintain in time of peace. Eighty-four ships of the line were stated to be a sufficient force for the present circumstances in which we were stated. which we were situated. Now from that proposition he must alto-gether dissent. Of such a force as that little more than forty sail could be depended upon as durable ships. He was sorry to say, that from negligence, and other unavoidable circumstances in the late war, a great portion of our vessels were not so dutable as to war-rant a reduction of the extent proposed. He was not prepared to say, that farther reductions might not be made to a certain extent. The Barl of Caernarvon supported the motion of the Earl of

Lord Calthorpe had great satisfaction in supporting the amended

Lord Darnley briefly replied, and said, he would not press his motion.—The amended Address was then agreed to.—Adjourned.

TUESDAY. His Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence's Annuity Bill was rought up from the Commons, which was read a first time.

The Consolidated Fund Produce, the Coasting Trade, the Green-wich Hospital Estates, the British Spirits Duties, and the Rum Importation Bills, were severally passed.—Adjourned. WEDNESDAY.

On the second reading reading of the Husbandry Horses Duty Repeal Bill, The Earl of Lauderdale postponed his opposition to the Bill till the third reading.

The Mohair Duties Bill was passed The Duke of Clarence's Annuity Bill was read a second time.

Adjourned. THURSDAY. The House sat for some time in a Committee of Privileges on the Claims of the Earl of Lisburne and the Marquis of Donnegali to Vote for the Election of Irish Representative Peers, when those claims were declared to have been established.

The Irish Silk Bounties Bill, the Hop Exportation Drawbacks Bill, the Isle of Man Trade Bill, and the Irish Collectors of Customs Bill, were read a third time and passed.

A conversation arose on fixing the Order for the committing of the Duke of Clarence's Provision Bill, in the course of which, The Earl of Louderdale said, that he thought the other House of Parliament had done itself honour by granting not only 6000l, a year to the Duke of Clarence, but the arrears for the last three year'to the Duke of Clarence, but the arrears for the last three years. It showed that the Commons acted on a settled principle, and held to the opinion with which they had set out, that it was proper to add 6000l. a year to the younger branches of the Royal Family. But his principal object in rising was to remind the House of the situation of one member of the Royal Family, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, whom he considered to have been most unfairly treated. He disapproved of those decisions which were founded either on favour or prejudice. He contended, that when their Lordships, after the judgment passed, and the examination taken before that House last year, had granted 50,000l. a year to the Queen, they must have acted on the principle that it s year to the Queen, they must have acted on the principle that it was necessary to support the dignity of exalted rank. How much more disposed ought they not to be to do justice to an illustrious individual, against whom nothing prevailed but the meanest and most slanderous insinuations. He knew that nothing would give that Royal Personage more pleasure than to find those insinuations reduced into tangible charges on which he could obtain the justice of a trial. The manner in which that Royal Duke and his Duchess had lived whilst in this country, ought to have excited admiration. He trusted that His Majesty's Government would agree with him in principle, and would take an early opportunity of recommending a similar grant to the Duke of Cumberland as to his royal brothers. If they did not noommend such a grant, he should propose an Address to His Maje sty on the subject, and should at least feel conscious that he had done his district.

scious that he had done his duty.

The Earl of Limerick participated in the sentiments of the Noble Earl, and pledged himself to support his Address whenever he should think fit to move it .- The Bill was then ordered to be committed to-morrow.—Adjourned

FRIDAY. ssed Taxes Composition Bill was read a third time, and The Assessed Taxes Composition Dill was read a turns time, and passed. The Duke of Clarence Provision Bill, the Appropriation Bill, the Bankruptey Court Bill, the Customs Officers' Relief Bill, the Exchequer Bills for Public Works Bill, the Metropolis Police Bill, the Lotteries Bill, the Irish Stamp Duties and the Tobacco Duties Bills, went respectively through Committees, and were reported. Adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. MONDAY.

Dr. Phillimore, adverting to the debate of Thursday se'nnight, in. which mention had been made of the state of Westminster Abbey, which mention had been made of the state of Westminster Abbey, and neglect of public monuments in that Cathedral, said, he was requested by the Dean of Westminster to correct a misconception which had gone abroad on the subject. With respect to the profits expected to be made on the approaching Coronation, he was instructed to say, that they would not exceed 3,000l. and that they were not entirely applicable to the purposes of improvement; long established usage having directed their appropriation in various other ways. Referring to the other observations respecting the repairs, he was requested to say, that that part of the Abbey requiring repairs had, until lately, been for some time increasible.

quiring repairs had, until lately, been for some time increasible.

Sir C. Long presumed the explanation was directed principally to some observations made by him. He had merely thought that as the Abbey was the ancient burial place of the kings of England, it should be repaired at the public expence. He certainly thought it was a subject of mortification to observe, the little care that was taken of the public monuments. Of the Dean of Westminster personally, he was glad to hear testimony to his high and exemplary

On the Order of the Day being moved for the third reading of the Duke of Clarence's Annuity Bill,

Mr. Brougham entered into an explanation of the alleged delay imputed to her Majesty, in claiming to be crowned. On the 21st of May a question had been put by Mr. Monok on the subject, to which the Noble Marquis had replied, that there was no right so clear as that of the Crown; and that the Coronation of the Queen Connort depended upon the grace and favour of the King. He (Mr. Brougham) at that time protested against the doctrine of the Noble Marquis. In candour, however, he must say, that he added he had Marquis. In candour, however, he must say, that he added, he had not made up his own mind on the legal question. It was not the duly of her Majesty's Law Officers to put in her claim immediately apon this. It was their duty to wait her orders, as they were not her responsible advisers like the Ministers of the Crown. Besides, as the Coronation had been appointed in the preceding year, and had been postponed, it became proper to wait until there was almost a cerpostposed, it sectually traking place. The Proclamation appointing the ceremony this year was dated the 9th of June; and inserted in the Gazette on the 12th. The Memorial claiming her Majesty's right to be crowned, was settled at his (Mr. Brougham's) chambers eleven days afterwards, and upon a subject of such great importance he was not disposed to take any great blame himself for a delay of eleven days. The Memorial was sent in on the 25th of May, and as yet no answer had been returned to it. There were now seresteen days to intervene before the Coronation, but there was ample time to alter the arrangements, and yet keep strictly within precedents. There was an instance on record, of a Proclumation giving only sixteen days notice of the Coronation itself; and another, of an alteration in the arrangements being ordered only two days before the appointed day.

The Marguis of Londonderry said, he had not intended any re-The interpolar of Londonderry said, he had not inclined any reflection on her Majesty's legal advisers in their professional characters. He had merely contrasted the rapidity with which they had expected an answer, with the slowness of their own movements in making the legal claim. The 21st of May, which had been particularly alluded to by the Hon, and Learned Member, was not the only occasion on which the opinion of His Majesty's Ministers had been intimated to the Otean. Between that day and the 21st of June intimated to the Queen. Between that day and the 21st of June, her Majesty addressed a letter to the principal Minister, the Eart of Liverpool, desiring to be informed what arrangements had been made for her convenience, and who were oppointed as her attendants on the approaching solemnity. An official answer had been returned, stating, that it was a right of the Crown to give or withhold the order for her Majesty's Coronation, and that His Majesty would be advised not to make any order for her Majesty's participation in the arrangements. The Queen rejoined, insisting on her right, and declaring that she should attend the Coronation, unless right, and declaring that she should attend the Coronation, mless she were absolutely prevented. A respectful, but equally peremptory answer was returned to her Majesty, repeating the legal right of the Crown, and declaring, that the former answer must be understood as amounting to a prohibition of her attendance. These proceedings clearly shewed that her Majesty was fully aware of the course intended to be taken by the Government. Now, with these facts before the House, he would ask, whether it was not rather hard to call Ministers over the coals, and blame them for the delay. Respecting the hearing of her Majesty's Law Officers before the Priva specting the hearing of her Majesty's Law Officers before the Privy Council in support of the claim, he had to state to the House, that this had been asked that very morning for the first time. A Memorial dated on Saturday last, had that morning been received from her Majesty addressed to the King, and desiring to be heard by her Council in consense of the high. her Majesty addressed to the King, and desiring to be mentally accounted in support of the claim. This, however, was informally addressed, it being addressed to the King in his Sovereign capacity, and not to the King in Council. It would have she with a want of respect to her Majesty's claim, if, when it had been formally presented it was not referred to the legal officers of the Crown. Both sented, it was not referred to the legal officers of the Crown. Both applications were equally informal; but they had both been attended to. Upon the first, her Majesty had been informed that no directions would be given to include her in the arrangements; and with respect to that which had only been received this morning, he had to inform the House, that it was immediately laid before ing, he had to inform the House, that it was immediately laid before His Majesty, who had given directions that the Queen should be heard by her lawyers before the Privy Council, it being first clearly ascertained, that this was no right; but was a grace and favour. This he mentioned to shew that there really had been no delay on the part of Government, and to justify the course they had taken.

After a few observations from Mr. Denman, Mr. Bernal moved an amendment, altering the effect of the Bill, from 1818 to 1821.

De Crespigny moved for the Copy of a Warrant, granted to one Brooks, on the Isle of Portland station, for searching a married woman, named Gibbs, &c. but the Chancellar of the Exchequer observed, that if the Hon. A division took place on the question for bringing up the Report of the extra Post Bill—Ayes, 31—Noes, 39—Majority against the Bill, 8. The Bill was of course lost.

Mr. Scarlett withdrew his Poor Relief Bill for the present Session

The Report on the Packet Vessel Licence Bill was postponed for six month. - Adjourned,

TUESDAY.

Mr. Caleraft moved for a Copy of the Admiralty Regulations of 1818, respecting Lunatic Officers. He thought they ought to be treated the same as those officers who had lost a limb in the service.

Mr. Croker said, Lunatic Officers were now treated as wounded officers, when it appeared that their lunacy arose from any cause connected with the service.—The motion was then withdrawn.

Mr. Peel alluding to the case of Mr. Peel, a relation of his, who was ordered to quit Leghorn in 34 hours, asked the Noble Marquis whether any ground had been stated to the Tuscan Government as to lead to the issuing of the order for removal. The Right Hon. Gentleman said, he was an individual highly respected by the British factory, and had never been known to interfere with politics.

rquis of Londonderry had written to Lord Burghersh on the subject, desiring that he would apply to the Tusan Government, to have justice done to Mr. Peel. Before the communication reached him, the Noble Lord had taken such steps in the business as led to the recal of Mr. Peel to Leghorn. Throughout the whole of the transaction there was no allegation that could actually affect that gentleman's character. He rather apprehended, the Police acted upon the private information of some malignant person, but he could not give his Right Hon. Friend any satisfactory information as to the origin of the transaction.

Mr. Hobbouse presented a petition from William Benbow, stating, that two indictments were found against him for alleged libels, which he was imprisoned, being unable to find bail; that his wife being dead, and his children too young to attend to his business, he was obliged to shut up his shop. "And thus," said Mr. H. "has the Constitutional Society succeeded in rulning one man."— The petitioner also complained of delay of justice, in consequence of the Coronation, which prevented his being tried for some months.

The Attorney-General knew nothing of the case of this man, but supposed from his own statement, that his conduct was such as to preclude his friends from bailing him. With respect to his trial, he knew of nothing that could hinder his being tried soon; but he (the Attorney-General) would take care the prisoner should not suffer my inconvenience from the Coronation. If he could not be tried in due course, he would use his influence to have him set at liberty, on the usual security, for appearing to the indictment.

Mr. Hobbeuse expressed himself satisfied with this assurance

Mr. Scarlett, Mr. M. A. Taylor, and Mr. Denman said a few words, and then the petition was laid on the table.

Colonel Davies presented a petition from a Captuin Romeo, of the Calabrese Regiment, (similar to one presented from him some time since,) complaining of great losses v which he had sustained in Sidly, in consequence of adhering to the British Government in 1810, and 1811, by whom he was employed to detect a conspiracy set on foot to betray that island into the hands of the French.

The Marquis of Londonderry observed, that this was the second time Captain Romeo had brought his case before the House. From all the enquiry which he had made, the arrest of Captain Romed was owing to other circumstances, than the part which he had taken with the British Army in 1611,—the claims which he made were not entitled to much consideration. For instance, one of the items was 1,500l. advanced to the mistress of the French General for her services; besides the Colonial Department had given him 501. a-year for his services, the certificate of Lord Bentinck entitling him to no more.

Lord W. Bentinck agreed with the Noble Marquis, that this individual had no particular claim; but still be conceived, that having been the victim of the Neapolitan Government for rendering services to the British Government, he was entitled to the consideration of the British Government, being in the greatest distress.

Mr. Goulburn, Lord A. Hamilton, and Mr. Hutchinson made some observations, and the petition was laid on the table.

Mr. Wilberforce presented a petition from Robert Bouverie, Rsq. lately Lieutenant-Colonel of the 34th Regiment, complaining of certain grievances and praying relief.

Lord Palmerston said, this Gentleman's Commission was sold to pay his debts to the public, and that instead of having any claims, he was now actually considerably in arrears to the country. The petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Whitbread apologized for bringing the subject of the Constitutional Society before the House. It required no great depth of understanding to perceive that the Society had been originally instituted by Attornies, for the purpose of promoting their own private views. To say the least of a Society thus instituted would be to say that it was perfectly unnecessary. No one could dispute that the Law Office set for the Court progression of the purpose that the Law Officers of the Crown possessed the power of procoeding in every case against the publishers of seditious libels; and no one, he believed, would complain that they had been too deli-cate in exercising that branch of their authority. They were subject to the inspection of the public, they were open to the animadver-sions of the House, and liable to be interrogated upon every part of their conduct. He concluded with moving, "That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, praying him to be graciously pleased to direct the Attorney General to enter a Nolle Prosequé against all indictments laid against all individuals by the Society calling itself the Constitutional Association."

. B. Bathurst would meet the question on the general grounds Mr taken by the Hon. Gent. viz. whether the House of Commons was called upon to take any steps for the purpose of putting down this Society. Now if he were disposed to agree with His Hon. Friend in thinking that this Society required the correction of a superior authority; if he thought that its proceedings had been centrary to law, then he should have thought that the law would have been sufficient to have put it down. But distinguishing at present between the principles of the Society, and the mode which it had adopted in putting those principles into execution, he would call upon the Hon. Gentleman to state distinctly what be conceived its principles to be. He would give it as his opinion that the House was not called upon to interfere.

Dr. Lushington was surprised Ministers should justify the acts of this Society, and commit the morals of the country to the safe care of Sir John Sewell, Knt. and Mr. Murray. Bither the Society was necessary or not necessary: it was either useful or it was not.

If the Attorney-General did his duty, the Society was unnecessary, and if he did not do his duty he ought to be obliged to do it.— Believing as he did, that the Association was wholly unlawful, that it was the result of the efforts of some busy meddling speculators, who were joined by some weak-minded individuals, and that the best interests of society would be supported by the pursuit of other eans than that Society, he would cordially support the motion.

Ser M. Cholmeley contended, that the objects of the Association were to put down immoral and indecent prints and publications so ration. e to the rising ge

Mr. Wilberforce, in the course of his speech, proceeded to notice the licentiousness of the press. He said, calumny, detraction, and falsebood were scattered abroad, and levelled at the virtuous; either therefore it became necessary to control the efforts of the wicked, or to meet them with their own weapons. To refute one calumny would be useless while another was allowed to arise-to refute in part would be regarded as an admission of what had not been answered; and how was society to maintain itself? By encouraging a system of reciprocal calumnies? Good God; was s a thing as a retaliation of calumny to be sanctioned in a moral, a religious, or a civilized country? Calumny against calumny, and falsehood against falsehood? He for one wished that the laws of talegnood against talegnood? He for one winder that the land should be always the guide in all occasions of prosecutions; but individuals might call those laws into action where a necessity existed. He regarded it as the duty of those Societies first upon the Attorney and Solicitor General to do their duty, in protecting the valuable, institutions in Church and State from attack; and he could not but think that those Learned Gentlemen were bound to exert themselves. The happiness of the people depended upon the morality which was supported among them, and be hoped that a Society, which professed to be guided by a love of pended upon the morality which was supported among them, and be hoped that a Society, which professed to be guided by a love of justice and propriety, would be solely influenced by those motives, and unblussed by any views of party politics; whatever prosecu-tions they would institute should be for public, not on personal or tions they would institute should be let public, not on personns or private grounds; that the best interests of public and private welfare would be protected, when justice, supported by the laws and constitution of the realm, would, without bias, party prejudice, or feeling, dispense her decisions and award her punishments to every

Mr. Denman supported the motion, and contended, that if this Society was countenanced, it might be the means of causing a Counter-Association to be formed. Should this be the case, it would be rendered almost impossible that an unbiassed Jury would be found; for these two Associations would be exercising all their weight and influence, and pouring their streams into the Jury box, which would pollute the sources of justice

The Attorney-General expressed himself surprised, that without any direct motion being brought before the House, without any information of the nature of the Society, the House should be called upon to vote an Address, that His Majesty would be pleased to direct a nolle prosequi to be entered against all cases preferred by the Constitutional Association, and this without any knowledge of their merit, and without any information whether the prosecutions had been properly commenced or not. An Honourable and Learned Gent. had, on a former evening, contended that this was an illegal Society; if it was, the Courts of Law were open, and there the question might be tried. If then the feelings of Gentlemen were so acute. if they were so zealous in their opinions, it was very extraordinary that no case had been brought forward for argument in the Courts. He denied that the Society was not competent to prosecute in cases of a public nature; and libet was, as an offence, known to the law as well as any other; and he must again repeat that he, as Attorney-General, was not exclusively bound to prosecute. He thought, when the licentiousness of the press at this time was considered, it was too much for the House to agree to the Address for stopping all proceedings instituted by the Constitutional Association, without any knowledge of the circumstances under which they had been commenced.

Mr. Brewsham at some length supported the motion. The Learned Attorney-General had said he did not see that the members of this Association had incapacitated themselves from serving as Grand Jurors; the Court of King's Bench, however, had seen that which the Learned Gentleman was not disposed to acknowledge and discharged a Rule that had been obtained by the adverse party, and had allowed it to the defendants on a challenge, provided any of the Jurors acknowledged themselves to be members of the Soclety. He then argued at considerable length on the absurdity of any one who was an accuser being enabled to sit as a judge. this Society, he must say, never was there a more pernicious Association—never one that more deserved the severest reprobation than that known by the name of the Bridge-street Gang.

The Solicitor General was happy to find that the tone of Hon.

Members on the opposite side of the House had lately altered. They no longer allowed themselves to denominate the Society as an ille gal Society, but simply contented the inselves with calling it an un-constitutional Association. With the nature and objects of that Soclety the House had only become acquainted through the medium of the petitions presented to the House upon that subject. Those petitions were only three in number, and had been presented by persons of the name of Dolby, King, and Benbow, whose petition had only been presented that evening. It should be recollected, that whatever had been stated by these parties came from persons whose conduct had subjected them to a prosecution which, whether it were well or ill grounded, would remain to be examined hereafter. In these three cases, it should be repollected that a reference had been made to a Grand Jury on the subject; that upon a reference so made, the Grand Jury found the bills against every one of these parties, and that such were the facts exhibited on affidavit to the Court, that the Judges considered themselves authorized in holding all these parties to bail. The Learned Gent. then made some of servations on the cases of Doby, Beabow, and King, and justified the proceedings adopted on them. He had no doubt the motion was made expressly for the purpose of covering an attack on a body of men whose respectability, rank, and property, independently of the wholesome cause of their Association, ought to have shielded their characters from being lightly or rashly as sailed. What had been the success or failure of that attack, he would with the fullest confidence leave to the House to determine said that he considered it unconstitutional, and therefore considered it illegal; but it was only on the ground of its being unconstitutional that he had such determined it to be illegal. Whatever he tional that he had ever determined it to be illegal. Whatever he had said upon the subject, he had always reserved to himself the right to revise and correct that opinion, when the question was more fully argued in a more suitable place. Upon these grounds he professed, if his Hon. Friend should proceed to press the motion further, he should be obliged on a division to vote against it.

Mr. Scerlett denied he had ever pledged his opinion as to the legality or illegality of this Association. He certainly thought that it assumed the functions of the Attorney General. He had at first it assumed the functions of the August venerus.

Mr. Whithread replied, and would not press his motion, which was negatived.

The Marquis of Londonderry said, in rising to move the adjourn ment of the House to Tuesday next, it might, not be uninteresting to their constituents to state, that it appeared from a calculation, that the House had, upon an average, sat eight hours and forty minutes of every sitting day during the Session, independently of the bours occupied in the forenoon upon the Committees, so that if no good had been effected, it was not attributable to the want of la-

Paris Journals arrived yesterisy; they state that the Corps of Greeks, 2000 strong, which Ypsilanti had directed upon Galates, had been completely routed near Buseo, by the Pacha of Ibrail.

The Cortes of Spain, approaching the close of their session, have resumed their permanent deputation, which is to remain assembled after the prorogation of the Congress, and till the installation of the next Legislature. The King, it is said, was to set off for the baths of Sucedon on the 2d or 2d instant. The Cortes of Portugal in their sitting of the 8th ult. heard the report of the Commission charged to examine the conduct of the Portuguese diplomatic agents, at foreign Courts. The Committee has concluded that these agents, having lost the confidence of the nation, ought to be censured, and declared incapable of continuing in their functions. Several Deputies proposed to send the Diplomatic Agents to trial. The discussion had not terminated.

LONDON. JULY 8.

THE public has, during the last week, been surprised, and, we will add, disgusted, at seeing the Privy Council employed in listening to Lawyer Brougham's trashy harangues in support of the right of Queen Carolina-Columbina to share the honours of the Coronation. Surprised, hecause, audacious as both she and her Lawyers are known to be, no one thought that they were impudent enough to have made so monstrous a claim; -disgusted, because it is degrading to public morals and public honour that such a question should remain, even for an hour, undecided.

The right of the Queen forsooth! Why, if the right were as undoubted as any proposition in BLACKSTONE—if there were a course of precedents as uninterrupted as the daily rising of the sun, in favour of Queens in general, we say, at once, and without hesitation, that such a right, and such a course of precedents, could not apply to this individual case.

The case of Carolina-Columbina (whom it is convenient to designate in that manner, in order to distinguish her from the virtuous Caroline, Queen of George II.)—the case we say, of Carolina-Columbina sets all precedent at defance; and though Brougham should have been able to shew, which he was not, that every Queen had been crowned since the conquest, he would have proved nothing for his client, unless he could have shewn that any of these Queens had been crowned, after they had been charged before the great Council of the Nation, and voted guilty of an adulterous intercourse!

Mr. Brougham's speech fills a dozen columns of the newspaper, and occupied a dozen hours of the time of the Council, and is full of the HUMBUG of vesearch, and the affectation of erudition-scraps of Latin,-contracted titles,-ancient dates, and antiquated names; all of which might be had, and probably were, from the fecondite volumes called "RAPIN'S History of England." And all this mass of learning, ingenuity, and eloquence is exerted to preve what?-that which nobody ever denied, that Queens of England were generally crowned! We cannot exclaim, "Oh, lame and impotent conclusion;" for indeed the conclusion is quite a match for the idle and empty farrage which preceded it.

But our readers will ask, if the case were so clear and so hopeless, what could induce Harlequin Brougham and Columbina-Carolina to waste their time and labour in carning a new defeat, and a fresh mortification?-That leads us to a detection of a new course of their policy, to which we shall beg the most particular attention of our readers, as soon as we have, by a few plain observations, knocked over the swoln and ricketty arguments - assertions we mean-of Harlequin's haranque.

In his ostentation of learning, Brougham begins his historical deductions with the Dukes of Normandy; and stupendous was the force with which he urged the claims of Duchess Joan and Duchess Avisa. Our readers will, we hope, forgive us for passing over the cases of those two respectable ladies, as not being exactly in point. There is, indeed, a case in the history of Normandy which might have been of some importance, if Mr. Brougham had con-descended to mention it; and without paying any undue compliment to his learning, we suppose he must have heard of a person who makes a figure even in Goldsmith's abridgement—we meen, the mother of William the Conqueror—a lady of more beauty and no worse reputation than Mr. Brougham's client. Her name (as Mr. Brougham may have read in Rapin or Goldsmith) was HARLOTTA. and she has had the honour of bequeathing her name to a very numerous sisterhood. Now, if Mr. Brougham had proved that HARLOTTA had been crowned, it might have afforded a very strong precedent for extending the same honour to Carolina-Columbina.

We shall be pardoned for skipping over the three or four centuries of barbarity and obscurity, (not much enlightened by the extracts from Rymer, and the quotations from William of Malmesbury, which Mr. Brougham has borrowed from Rapin,) and we will come at once to the times of King Heary VII. when the revival of learning and the invention of printing enable us to form a just estimation of the characters of the several Princesses who have sat upon the throne of England, and to appreciate the motives which may have led to, or, in special cases, prevented their coronation.

Every body knows that Henry VII. after he came to the throne. married ELIZABETH, only surviving child of Edward IV. and who was, in fact, right heir to the crown. All the reports of Mr. Brougham's speech represent him election of Alderman Garratt, one of the original subscribers to as calling this Princess by the name of Anne, but as both that most excellent institution, the Constitutional Association, Rapin and Goldsmith have given her her right name, we is strongly indicative of the feelings of the real Livery, and is as

Now, it so happens that this case is, in enuclusive against Columbina's claim, because, although the greatest dissatisfaction was felt by King Henry's delay of the Queen's coronation; though there was an extensive disaffection, and frequent rebellions, still all the weight and influence of the partisans of the House of York, nor even the birth of his son, could force the King to indulge Elizabeth with a coronation.

It is true, indeed, that this wary and politic prince did afterwards reluctantly consent to that ceremony; but all the expressions of the historians, as well as the plain chronological facts of the case, testify that it was delayed at first, and granted subsequently as a matter which depended exclusively upon the King's own pleasure; and all along considered as involving a question not of right, but of expediency and favour.

We lay no great stress upon the cases of the wives of Henry VIII. but that we may not be accused of unfairness in neglecting to follow the course of precedents as far as history is intelligible and authentic, and as Mr. Brougham dwelt on these cases, we shall follow his example:

Queen Catherine of Arragon, and Queen Anne Boleyn, the two first wives of that King were indeed crowned; but these are precedents which Brougham, indiscreet as he is, would hardly like to insist upon, for these ladies were both uncrowned, and Queen Anne Boleyn especially, was uncrowned in the most effectual way, having lost both her diadem and her head—for ADULTERY. The next was Jane Seymour, who was not crowned;

though, if the ceremony had been supposed essential to the legitimate character of a Queen, there was every reason, personal and political, why both she and Henry should have insisted on a Coronation. Every one knows (Mr. Brougham might find it in Rapin,) Menry's desire to have a son, and the brutal anxiety by which he ensured the birth of Edward VI, at the expense of his mother's life. Every one knows that the legitimacy of both his daughters then living, was impeached; and therefore every one must agree, that if a Coronation could be viewed either as a matter of right in the Queen, or as necessary to the reginal character, Henry would not have failed to have honoured with that ceremony, the young, the beautiful, the beloved Jane, in whom he saw, with a prophetic eye, the mother of that heir of her kingdoms, which he so anxiously desired; but the young, the beautiful, the beloved, and the IMNOCENT Was NOT crowned.

Queen Anne of Cleves was not crowned; and yet if Coronation had been at all necessary to ensure the regimal character, there was every reason why she and her friends, well aware of Henry's inconstancy and brutality, should have insisted upon the ceremony.

Queen Katharine Howard was not crowned, and " Infandum, Regina, jubes renovare dolorem" was beheaded for—ADULTERY.

Queen Katharine Parr was not crowned, though of all Henry's wives, she is reported to have had the greatest influence over his mind.

But we now come to better and more civilized time The Queen Consort of James I. was crowned; but, although masques were much in fashion in those days, there is no record of Queen Anne having danced in any of them half naked, and half tipsey, nor is it stated in any history that we have read, that in her voyage to this country she slept with her footman in a tent upon the deck of the yacht.

Queen Henrietta Maria, wife of Charles I. was not crowned, though her father, Henry IV. and her brother Louis XIII. were the greatest, the most splendid, and the most punctitious sovereigns of Europe; and though we know from the history of that day, that Heuricita was peculiarly captious on the subject of ceremonial, and em nureasonably tenacious of all her rights; a disposition which she shewed, in every instance, in the early part of Charles's reign, which created much perplexity to that unfortunate monarch, and very naturally disinclined him from inshewed, in every instance, in the early part of Charles's creasing his embarrassments by a Coronation.

Mr. Brougham gives as a reason for this omission, that Henrietta was a Roman Catholic; but, unfortunately for him, he will not find a single instance of a Protestant Queen crowned, until he arrives at Queen Caroline, in the year 1727, unless we admit Anne Boleyn to have been what is now called a Protestant.

The next Queen Consort, Katharine of Portugal, wife of Charles II. was not crowned, though here again there was every reason why nothing, that was necessary to the reginal character, should be omitted; for the jealousies which ended in the revolution, were already alive; and the terrors of James's accession made the nation extremely anxious that Charles should have an heir, and that nothing should be wanting to give sanctity and effect to a mar-riage, which naturally it was supposed tended to exclude James Duke of York from the Throne.

In vain Mr. Brougham will repeat, that Katharine of Portugal was a Roman Catholic; for the very next instance, is that of Mary of Modena, a Papint, who was crowned, so that the argument is two to one against him; and, if any stress is to be laid on the case of Mary, a double weight is thrown into the other scale by the cases of Henrietta and Katharine!

We need not remind our readers that Mary, the wife of William 111. was not a Queen Consert, she sat on the Throne in her own right, as did her sister ANNB, and therefore the next Queen Consort at whom we arrive was the electress Dorothea, wife of George I.; Mr. Brougham says, and for once truly, that she never came to this country, and he insinuates (we know not upon what authority,) that she was divorced in Germany; an awkward preceden again—even if Mr. Brougham's insinuation were true,—for she was divorced (if at all) for ADULTERY.

But it is a well-known fact that her son, George 11. never forgave his father his treatment of Dorothea; it is notorious that the most violent feuds existed between the King and the Prince of Wales on this subject, which were carried to the most lamentable extent; and it is even recorded, that the Prince always declared, that if his mother survived George I. he would bring her over to England, and acknowledge her at Queen Dowager; and, in fact, after his accession, he actually hung up a full-length portrait of her, in royal costume, in the palace of St. James's. Yet, in all the violence of party-in all the anxiety for his own personal legitimacy; in all his love and reverence for his mother, George II. never advanced the proposition of the Queen's right to a coronation; though, if claim had been tenable, there never was an occasion on which it was so likely or so proper to be advanced.

Ir. Brougham may affect not to know the history of Dorothea, or he may be really ignerant of the true state of the case; for, unfortunately, RAPIN does not come so low, and Goldsmith hardly mentions her name; but we pledge earselves to the fact, that Dorothea was as much Queen of England as Carolina-Columbina. That, though suspected of indiscretion, she never was accused of such horrible turpitude as is to be read on the Journals of the House of Lords—that she was the mother of the heirseparent, and eventually of the Sovereign, -and that, in point of fact, neither in England nor in Germany was she divorced.—and that her portrait was hung up by her son in the state-rooms of his Court.

Her daughter-in-law, Caroline, wife of George II. was crowned, but we do not read in Smollett, nor even in that scandalous chronicler, Horace Walpole, that Her Majesty had ever been bottle-holder to an Italian courier, or had met a young singer in hired lodgings at Bayswater.

As to our late most gracious Queen Charlotte, chaste, temperate, pious, and dutiful, we hesitate to prophane so sacred a name by introducing it into this discussion; not even the impudence or the sophistry of Mr. Brougham will pretend to find a precedent here!

We have now gone through the list of Queen Consorts for four centuries, and what is the result?—Six have been croscoed, and SEVEN HAVE NOT; and one was eventually crowned after a long delay; a delay which proves that this ceremony is a matter of favour, quite as much as the omission in the other cases.

Of the six who have been crowned, one was uncrowned for ADULTERY; and of the seven who were not crowd two were, as Brougham asserts, lest uncrowned for ADULTERY. And this is the summary of the "able argument" which was intended to prove that a Queen, voted by the House of Lords guilty of adultery, had an absolute right, according to all law and precedent, to the honours of a co-

We appeal now to our readers, whother any thing so absurd was ever before attempted? and whether we have not redeemed our pledge, and beaten flat to the earth the sweln and ricketty assertions of Harlequin Brougham?

But we now come to a more important part of the ques tion—the Onject of the Queen, Brougham, Wood, and the rest in stirring up so hopoless a question.

Some persons may suspect that they mean more mischief; that they hope to create a new popular clamour; to render His Majesty's coronation odious, and to run the charming risks of exciting some disturbance.—It seems to us not improbable but that some such motives may be floating in the minds of the more silly part of the Association, but we are convinced that some of the gang are playing a different and more prudent game.

Their object is to reconcile and familiarise the public eye to the sight of the Queen.

Hitherto she is only known by the horrible and disgusting details of her conduct, given on oath before the House of Lords;—details so monstrous, that, we believe, the history of profligacy, in the highest or in the lowest, in the scum, or in the dregs of society, affords neither parallel nor precedent of such depravity.

Now, the Queen's councillors think, (and they think very truly) that by bringing the Queen forward, sometimes in one character, and sometimes in another-at the Mansion House, and in Parliament-before the Common Hall. and the Privy Council—that the people will get accus-tomed to her person, her name, and her character,—that Bergami will be forgotten for Brougham,—Ofdi and Vas-sali for Lord and Lady Hood, and the evidence before the Lords for the arguments in the Council chamber.

Then, they think, that the people will say, that "she cannot be so bad as she is represented," because, if she was, it would be impossible that the Lord Chancellor, and the Lord President, and the Lord Chief Justice, and all the other "potent, grave, and reverend signiors" of the Council should have sat three days in discussing her claim of right, founded on the cases of her minings and agreet predesers on. founded on the cases of her virtuous and august predee

We see that, here and there, some of their Lordships interposed a query, but we do not observe that any of them proposed the only query, which, in our humble judgment a man of common sense ought to have made. If John Bull had been in the Privy Council, he would have said at the very first sentence of Mr. Brougham's extracts from Rapin, "Sir, we will admit to you every thing you wish "to prove. We admit to you that every Queen of England "since the conquest has been crowned, without demur or "exception; you, therefore, need not waste your time and "ours more that rount but shew we are interacted in which "ours upon that point, but shew us any instance in which " a Queen, voted by the highest tribunal of the land guilty of having conducted herself with indecent and offensive " familiarity and freedom, and of having carried on a licen-"tious, disgraceful and adulterous intercourse, has been " crowned. "crowned. This is what you must prove, and, without proving this, every thing else that you may say is idle Brougham's answer would probably have been something of the same kind as the extraordinary sentence with which he concluded his speech:—"If a man BE GUILTY of ever "so great un offence, and the proceedings against him fail Napoleon has left a will, in which he desires to be buried in a particular valley in Saint Helena. He was in the fifty-LAW as innocent as if no such offence had been charged against him."

In this sentence Mr. Brougham does not contend for the innecence, or the purity, or the virtue of the Queen, but says, that however GUILTY she may be, if guilt be not proved upon her satisfactorily, her guilt must not stand in her way. We have no doubt that this is the law, because we are told so; but we do not think such LEGAL grounds for the entertainment of the Queen's claims can be very satisfactory to those who have fondly imagined her innocent. has to the doctrine, we are quite ready to admit, that if it be conceded to Brougham to abstain from any reflection upon, or recollection of, the Queen's conduct and character, he will decidedly have the best of the argument.

We have not time or space, however, to pursue this part of the subject, but we most earnestly invoke the public attention to these attempts at reconciling the public mind I the whole of the day.

to the contemplation of the Queen. A few months ago no woman would utter the Queen's name, or could hea without blushing; —it seemed, from the association of ideas, an indecent expression; but by a few more solemn sittings of the Privy Council—by a few more grave comparisons with Queen Philippa, Queen Katharine, and Queen Caroline—by a punctilious silence as to her personal character, and by an officious repetition of her legal title:—in short, by supersympa all alluming to the same and synchristics. by suppressing all allusion to the woman, and expatiating in vain declamation about the Queen, it is hoped that the public mind may be so blunted as to become accustomed to what it now abhors. And if this point be once gained, we have no doubt that we shall see

"Vice in state, majestically drunk," rearing her audacious front, and overbearing all the scruples of morals, and all the delicacies of society.

Yesterday, it will be seen, the proceedings before the Privy Council continued, and the Attorney and Solicitor-General spoke on the subject. We confess ourselves sorry that they did—it is playing Brougham's game to notice him: so contemptible and groundless a claim as that which he advocates should be suffered to fall to the ground upon dus own shewing—it is really not worthy of an answer.

There has been much bustle in the Money Market during the last week, occasioned, towards the latter part, by the receipt of most important news from St. Helena of the death of Buonaparte. On Thursday a slight advance was visible in the public securities, but on Friday and Saturday those rose still higher. The statement of the revenue, although it shews an actual deficiency, yet the Money Market was little affected by it, thereby proving that the fundholders place sufficient confidence in their stability. A number of bargains have been, during the latter part of the week, done in the 5 per Cent. Consols, and 5 per Cent. Navy Annuities, both those securities being now open for business. Upon the whole there has been a considerable improvement in the Funds during the latter part of the week. Consols opened yesterday morning at 764 for Money, and 784 for the Account. There was a fluctuation during the day, and an evident desire by some to depress the Funds; this was partly effected, but they closed at 76f f for Money, and 78f for the Account.—The French Funds are not in such an improving state as our own, but on Monday, when a courier may be expected from Paris, it is thought that a considerable rise will take place. The 5 per Cents. were on Thursday at 35:81.

BUONAPARTE.

BUONAPARTE died at St. Helena on the evening of the 5th of May.—We shall not disgust our readers with the humbug of fine writing upon this subject—it is ludicrous to observe all the various forms in which the daily papers have laboured to announce this intelligence.

The Courier says, with that concise energy which it affects, —Buonaparte is no more! As the Courier assumes to be a critic, we wish it would tell us, "no more," what?

Another worthy, with more diffuse elegance, informs us, that "Buonaparte has finished his mortal career:" and a third, still more sublime, acquaints us, that "this extraordinary man has terminated his most extraordinary life.

In the same good taste and style the public has been fa-voured with divers fine characters of this personage—some pathetic, some objurgatory, but all full of that ridiculous inflation which distinguishes that admirable class of writers now called Gentlemen of the Press.

The only exception to this remark is the prudent Editor of the Morning Post, who, we are glad to see, has copied as his own, a character of Napoleon which we recollect to have read in one of the Reviews; and we so much approve of borrow ing what is good rather than writing original nousense, that we think our readers will be obliged to us for bringing to their recollection a splendid passage in which Juvenal moralizes on the life and death of Hannibal—a passage in which, besides the great moral truths which it expresses, there are such extraordinary points of similitude with the History of Buonaparte, that it cannot but appear extremely interesting.
Even the very "Annulus" mentioned as the cause of Hannibal's death is not inapplicable to Napoleon's case; for we have seen an account in which his death is stated, and we believe truly, to have been caused by an ulceration which had eaten a ring in the coats of the stomach, into which a finger might have been passed.

QUEEN'S COURT OF CLAIMS.

On Wednesday, pursuant to adjournment, the Court met. There were three Commissioners present, besides Mr. Waddington and Ex-Sheriff Parkins—but to the great disappointment of the numerous strangers present, the whole day was occupied in reading over claims to be excused from attendance at the ceremony. At six o'clock, after a short conversation between the Commissioners, the Court adjourned till next Wednesday, in order to ascertain whether the Queen was really going to play them a hoax, and set off for Wales on Monday, as generally reported.

Mr. Elliston, of Drury Lane Theatre, was present during

HUMBUG.

RIGHT OF PETITIONING.

No men in England can be more sensible of the blessings accruing to the people from the admitted right of petitioning, the House of Commons than we are, but we are afraid that even with the exercise of this invaluable privilege, a good deal of that popular commodity, HUMBUG, is to be found mixed up.

Bennett, and Hume, and Whitbread, and two or three more amiable men of weak intellect and strong feelings, lay themselves open to the applications of every complainant who will honour them with their commands-from the Counsellor of State, who languishes in a gloomy dungeon in Italy, to the little boy who has been whipped at a charity school in Berkshire; and, knowing their love of the thing, one is not surprised to see the frequent blunders and mis-statements they are led to make.

But there is a man, in whom we did expect a little more discretion, than are to be found in the composition of the Hon. Gentlemen we have just named, and to whom we confess, we should not, without proof positive of its existence, have attributed any very rash and inconsiderate measurewe mean Mr. Lockhart.

No one, we believe, would accuse Mr. Lockhart of credulity—no one charge him with stupidity—no one would presume to think he would trifle with the House of Commons, or waste their precious time in playing a koar upon them. To what then, are we to attribute the fact of his having gravely presented a petition to Parliament from a "Mr. John Pinsent," praying, that the Restriction on Foreign Trade might be removed, and that it should be left " free as air," which petition, having been read, was ordered to lie on the table.

Of Mr. Lockhart's motives we say nothing, because we really cannot guess them; but to shew our readers that the trick of presenting petitions might be played by any persons, for the sake of appearing to have, or endeavourn attain, a great share of popularity, and not for any solid reason, as well as to put simple, good-natured Members on their guard against imposition and folly, we subjoin a letter or two, which we received, some time since, from the same Mr. John Pinsent, but we were not quite so credulous as Mr. Lockhart; for though he presented Mr. Pinsent's petition to that grave assembly, the House of Commons, we had not intrepidity enough to venture to produce his letters; but now, under the shield of Mr. Lockhart's example, we shall venture to entertain our readers with the following valuable covrespondence :-

THEATRES.

HAYMARKET.—This Theatre opened on Wednesday evening, with Sheridan's Comedy of the Rivals, and a new Vau-deville Opera, called Peter and Paul; or, Love in the Vine-

When so much novelty is brought before one, we are really at a loss where to begin—with the new theatre, the new address, the new actors, or the new piece; however, as the house is certainly the most important object, and one upon which all the others depend, it is but fair to give that precedence.

To begin then with the Theatre:-It is, certainly, one of the praziest theatres we ever saw: its shape resembles that of the old one, than which it is, we are glad to say, very little larger. It differs, however, from the late Haymarket, inasmuch as the first tier of boxes is continued sound the house; while, in the former building, there were no upper boxes in the front, which, it will be remembered, was occupied by the gallery.

The seats in every part of the house are admirably calculated for seeing; the passages are roomy and wide, and a spacious saloon on the first floor provides a retreat and refreshments for such visitors of theatres as happen not to be theatrical.

One novel feature strikes the spectator in this building in the shape of a semi-circular sounding board, which projects from the centre of the proscenium some ten or twelve feet into the house; the principal defects of this newly-introduced article arises from its intrinsic ungracefulness, and from the shade into which it casts the painted ceiling, which is very prettily executed by Marinari, and represents Apollo in his chariot with his flery steeds chacing away Cynthia, and another person who is charged with the duty of sprinkling the earth with dew from a large jar, which he or she carries in the conception is chaste, but decidedly unappropriete; for as it is the custom to act plays by night, the appearance of the God of day would give the audience a warning to depart, rather than a summons to assemble.

The drop curtain does not equally meet our approbation, it is very Italian, and frittered away with little altars, and little bridges, and little flowers, and little crooks, and little castles, and very large statues, and very small tambourines, better suited to the great house over the way, (where they might be met by an agreeable fife accompaniment,) than for the little Old English Haymarket.

The performances commenced with the national song of "God Save the King," which was rapturously encored, not-withstanding the yellings for "Queen," which burst from a party of Radicals, who, from the beginning of the evening, had been placed in the upper gallery. After the song, an occasional address was spoken by Mr. Terry; the mateer of which seemed to imply, that the proprietor had built a very pretty theatre, and was very well pleased with it, and that he hoped every body else would be equally satisfied: at then alluded to the lengthened winter seasons, which comperied the Haymarket to provide resources of its own, and recommended some new performers, who, it hinted, were to be about as good as Elliston, Mathews, Liston, and Young, with which recommendation, and a few more hits at the Louse, it concluded, amidst thunders of applause.

The play of the RIVALS then began, and we must own we never have seen some of the parts better, or others worse played, than on this occasion. Terry, in Sir Anthony Absolute, was unequivocally excellent; De Camp played Captain Absolute with infinite spirit, good taste, and ability; Mr. Tayleure, a new recruit from Liverpool, was the Acres, and was really respectable; indeed, we hardly recollect any actor making more quiet effect in the duelling scene; for, added to a great deal of good face-making, his figure, which is on a wery large scale, added a new point to the cowardice of "fighting Bob," which made it forcibly ludicrous.

ing Bob," which made it forcibly ludicrous.

Air. Williams, in David, proved that the sounding-board, even if it answers its purpose, is perfectly useless;—he really should moderate his voice, which is beyond endurance powerful. Mrs. H. Johnston, in Lydia Languish, teminded us of her best days; her archness is exquisite, and there is a sweet playfulness in her manner which recals us to see as she was; but no matter—take her as she is, and she is a very delightful actress, and a great acquisition to this

To describe the new Farce would be, if not impossible, at least unnecessary. The story turns upon the striking resemblance of Peter and Paul, twin brothers, which were acted by Terry and Williams, who resemble each other in no one point or feature; the dialogue is full of very ancient puns; the words, of the sengs downright nonsense, and the music a spattry collection of French dances, from the last sixpenny books of Musard and Co.

In the acting, Terry was, as usual, zealous and spirited; De amp part.cularly lively in a feeble attempt at character; and there ends our praise. A lad of the name of Hammond played an old man so as to have disgraced Astley's in its worst days, and Mr. Tayleure, by attempting to sing, knocked down all The little applause he had gained by his acting in the play. Lir. Williams was more than usually vociferous in one of the brothers, and a Mrs. Baker, who played the girl, as anclancholy and lady-like as need be.

This piece will be a warning to the Proprietors of the Saymarket. It will show that in all the things they have produced, for the last ten years, the acting carried them through; and that if they choose, or are compelled, to bring strangers before the town, they should establish them in sold characters before they trust them with new ones. One ediscryation we cannot avoid making upon the acting of Mr. Williams and Mr. Hammond, in a scene where they are supposed to have quarrelled: or rather upon the blasphemous entlis and imprecations they used. Oaths are not good explatives in common conversation, and we trust, for the honour of literature, even in so degraded a shape as that of a trumvery farce, that no man who can write and spell, would have and to paper such disgusting expressions. We think they same not written, for there is a licenser who surely would not inve suifered them to stand if they had been ;-if they were not, shame be upon actors who fail in their duty, by making succidess interpolations, and disgust an audience with language unknown in civilized society.

The decorations of the theatre are beautiful. The boxes, cock of which forms a separate balcony, are fronted with a gilt rose trellinge, over a pink fluted drapery. The Chapter, and Mr. Brougham might go on in the mean time, subject corners of the building are supported by immense golden to a future reference of his extract, with the original, if he deem palm-trees, four of which form the proscenium. With respect to the utility of the sounding-board we are somewhat sceptical; at least the cries of "Speak up!"—" Speak louder!"

After a vort conversation as to the form of proceeding between the Lord Chancellor, the Peri of Harrowicz, and Mr. Benedick. from the galleries, which were never heard in the old theatre, incline us to believe, that whatever good effect it may have on the lower parts of the house, it in some measure obstructs the sound in its progress to the upper parts. This remains, however, to be proved-when any thing shall chance to be played to which it may be thought worth while to listen.

In support of our lamentations after theatrical taste-defunct—we have only to observe, that there was by no means a good house. We confess, with all our knowledge of the general estimation of plays and playhouses, we were not pre-pared for so much indefference to the opening of the new Hay-morket as was exemplified by the beerel and judicious public on Wednesday.,

On Thursday, Mr. Conway, after five years absence from London, appeared in Lord Townley. He is certainly of the largest size for a small theatre, but particularly good-looking—of which fact no person in England is more fully satisfied than himself. Mrs. Chattasley was very respectable in Lady Townley. Mr. Faulkner creaked and whined out the senti-ments of Manly, in the same tone as he had the night before doled out the sorrows of Paukland. Mr. Tayleure played John Moody, and his wife, a very smart and clever actress, produced much effect in Mrs. Jenny. Mrs. Pearce was very successful in Lady Wronghead; and Mr. Wilkams's lungs were in as good order as ever in Sir Francis.

The new farce followed, and having been judiciously curtailed, was well received.

At COVENT GARBEN the play of Henry IV. continues to attract overflowing audiences, at which we sincerely rejoice: the unbounded liberality shewn by the Proprietors in the production of that pageant of unequalled magnificence, the Coronation, deserves all the patronage it receives.

PRIVY COUNCIL

His Majesty having been most graciously pleased to allow the prayer of the Queen in the heard by Counsel, in support of her alleged claim to be erowned with the Sovereign, the Privy Council assembled in their Chamber at Whitehall on Thursday morning at ten o'clock. Upwards of forty members of the Council were pre-sent, and at a few minutes after ten, the clerk rend the following Memerial from her Majesty:-

"The Queen respectfully prays, that your Majesty will be graciously pleased forthwith to issue your reyal proclamation, thereby to appoint the same 19th day of July next, at Westminster aforesaid, to celebrate the ceremony of her coronation as Queen Consort, and to direct that all such as by the said customs and usages and tenures are bound to do and perform the services aforesaid, do duly give their attendances accordingly at the said day and time of the coronation aforesaid, in all respects furnished as to so great a solemnity appertaineth, and answerable to the dignities and places which every one of them holdeth and enjoyeth; and farther, that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to issue your royal commission under your great seal, appointing commissioners to receive, hear, and determine, the petitions and claims which shall be made to them in this behalf. " And the Queen as in duty bound shall ever pray." The clerk then read the order of council, that her Majesty should be heard by counsel in compliance with the prayer of one of her memorials, at 10 o'clock on that morning.

Mr. Brougham rose. He observed, that he had a communication to make, to which he claimed their Lordships' attention. He had a very short time since heard that there was a book deposited with the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, called the "Liber Regalis," which was a written formula of the ceremonies to be obbut their application was not attended with that courteous facility of but their application was not attended with that courteous facility of access, which they had to acknowledge the kindness of receiving in other quarters of reference that it became necessary for them to make in behalf of her Majesty during their research. The Dean and Chapter replied to the application of her Majesty's Counsel to see the Liber Regalis, that they would not grant the request without legal sanction. In answer to a second application, for the purpose of knowing what they would consider as sufficient authority, they remained, that the authority they required was "the highest authority." replied, that the authority they required was "the highest authority." Application was again made to them to know what they considered to be the highest authority, and the reply was "either the crown or a court of law." Application was then made to some of the Prive Council but the constitution of the Prive Council but the Council but the constitution of the Prive Council but the constitution of the Prive Council but the constitution of the Prive Council but the council but the constitution of the Council but the council but the council but the council but the council b bers of the Privy Council, but no conclusive answer being returned, and the process by mandamus in a court of law being necessarily a chard over until the last day of term, he ha now to apply to the Council, either that their Lordships would use the influence of their authority to obtain the book, or that they would allow her Majesty's claim to stand over until the process of would allow her majesty's claim to stand over until the process of law should obtain the desired object. His opinion was, that the Privy Council, if they were pleased to exercise it, had the authority to order the production of this book; for, on the 25th Feb. 1684, they ordered the Lord Keeper and other Commissioners of Records to produce them before the Council, relating to the Coronation of Lange II.

The Lord Chancellor said, that the book might be sent for, but it was for the Learned Counsel to endeavour to make out his right so far as he could do so from such other sources as he had examined, and to show that the Liber Regalis contained matter essen tial to his purpose.

Mr. Brougham said, that he had in the Cotton manuscripts seen collections stated to have been extracted from the book, and from it necessary to refer to them in his argument before the arrival of the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Harrowby, and Mr. Broughan, the latter said he would, as it seemed to be the opinion of their Lordship. proceed with his argument without at present delaying the Council until the arrival of the book.

Mr. Brougham then commenced by observing, that the duty which devolved upon him, was to argue the question whether the Queen Consort as a matter of right, ought to be crowned. That the King had the right of being crowned was a proposition which he thought he should have no difficulty of supporting; and that the Queen en-joyed the same right, he thought he could establish upon the same legal ground.

The Learned Gentleman then proceeded to shew, that King had ever been crowned without his Queen-consort, if he were married. This he supported by references to the History of England, with which he continued edifying the Council. down to the reign of Edward III.; at which period Lord President Harrowby told him that the "Liber Regular" was in the

Mr. Brougham thanked his Lordship, but preferred going on with the History of England, which he did for three good hours, and concluded with the round assertion, that every Queen.

Concort had participated in the solemnity of Coronation.

"What say you," asked a Member of the Council, "to the Queen of George I?"

"Oh," replied Mr. Brougham, "the Queen of George I....

why, she was never in Eugland, so I have nothing to do with her."—The Learned Gentleman proceeded, at this favourable opportunity, to enlarge upon the Queen's logal innocence, and to state it so be law, that proceedings instituted against her elsewhere could be no bar to her claims before Council, because the Law supposes that the Members of the Council ould not know of such proceedings; and cited these words from the sentence of the case King and Wolfe as authority, Ir A " MAN BE GUILTY OF EVER SO ORBAT AN OFFENCH, AND THE PRO-CREDINGS AGAINST HIM FAIL IN SUBSTANTIATING THAT

"IF NO SUCH OFFENCE FAD EVER BEEN CHARGED AGAINSTHIM."

H2 then closed his legal argument, and withdrew to look over the Liber Regalis: for this purpose he and Mr. Denman required eventually two hours

The Lord Chancellor, Lord Sidmouth, and Lord Liverpool wished to knew if other Counsel were to be heard, as they would in that case adjourn till four o'clock...

Mr. Brougham mentioned, that the Queen's Solicitor-Ge desired to be heard in support of Her Majesty's grayer, and after a conveniation between the Chancellor and Mr. Brougham, the Council adjourned till ten o'clock on Friday.

On Friday Mr. Brougham resumed his arguments. He adverted to the historical facts adduced the preceding day, and observed that the first proposition which they went to establish was, that the Queen Consort had been crowned in all ages; or at least that there was no instance where a Monurch had been crowned when married, and his wife living it this country, and she not partaking in the ceremony. Of course he laid out of consideration the Consort of Charles the First; and the reasons which he had yesterday given, appeared to him to hence sufficiently explained that omission. He contended very strongly for the undoubted right of the Queen to be crowned. In the case of the wife of Henry II. which he had quoted yesterday, and where occurred the first interruption was there an acquireand where occurred the first interruption—was there an acquescence in that case? No; but on the contrary, Louis of France, the father of the Queen, had claimed for his daughter the observance of the uniform ceremony, which, according to Margaret of Burgundy, every Queen in England had enjoyed since the Conquest, and Henry was compelled to acquiesce, and the Queen was then crowned with great pomp at Winchester. He had to remind their Lordships of the cases which he had yearerlay adduced, of the Coronation of Queens by themselves singly —There were nine crowned with the King, or by themselves singly .-- There were nine crowned with the King, or where the King had been crowned a second time with his Queen when he married after his own original Coronation. In addition to these were the cases of six Queens, those of Edward III. Richard II. Henry III. V. and VI., who were crowned alone, and unattended by their Kings in the solemnisation of the ceremonies. In all cases the Coronation of the Queen Consort had been held so necessary a ceremony as touching the Crown and the Royal rights as well as those of the country, that whenever it had been per-formed in respect to the King alone, it was afterwards performed again in respect to the Queen, he bearing no part therein. Now, if he were called upon to shew that the Coronation of a Queen Consort was not merely accessary to the same solemnity in respect to the King, he should answer upon these two grounds. First, that there was, besides this separate enjoyment, an appointed ceremonial for that solemnity independent of my other, which proved a real and substantial right. In the second place, there had arisen in the course of time vasecond place, there had arrived in the course of time various rights inseparable from it, and that was proved by the necessity of having the solemnity performed for the Queen alone. These together, shewed clear and uninterrupted usage, and upon no other grounds had they a right to say, that the King's coronation was founded. The Queen's right rested upon the same basis. There was a ceremonial for her and necessary rights connected with it. He then for her, and necessary rights connected with it. He then referred to the Liber Regalis, and cited several documents from that book to shew the right, and noticed the claims of various persons to perform suit and service at the coronation of Henry the Third's Queen, and also at that of Richard the Second, and the Proclamations made in consequence. The Proclamation of the Coronation of Elizabeth, the Queen of Heary VII. commanded the attendance of those who had to perform services to the Queen.

The Lord Chancellor.—Where do you find that? We have not a copy of it before us, I think.

Mr. Brougham observed, that it was in Rymer. It was not the Proclamation for the Coronation, but for the attendance of all persons who had services to perform, or otherwise bore parts in the solemnity. The Earl of Liverpool—4. Mr. Brougham, what is the date of the earliest document you have regarding the Coronation of a Queen Consort, and does it refer to a separate one, or where the King and Queen were crowned together?", Mr. Brougham haid he could inform their Lordships in a sw moments, but he was not prepared to give an answer on the instant.

At any rate it was as far back as the Coronation of Philippa, Queen of Edward V.II. Thus it would be seen, that there were the rights of others interwoven with the rights of the Queen—rights which they could o'nly enjoy when the Queen exercised her right. There were the services, there were the claims, and the separate and distinct protein in the process of the services. clamations; mere were use claims, and the separate and distant purchastions; and could the whole mean nothing, absolutely nothing! flaving argued on these points at some length, he contended that those who said that the Queen's Coronation depended upon the King's pleasure, must be prepared to go another step, and by of the King's Coronation, that it also depended upon his will, and that it was a mere vain and amount accessors.— in insignificant that it was a mere vain and empty ceremony,—an insignificant, an unmeaning pageant; for it must be so, if it depended upon his will whether it should be or not. It was enough for him to say, that the Crown was bound—that it could not refuse to issue its

Writ or its Proclamation; and that with respect to the Coronation of P.er Majesty, the right was equally clear, and the necessity squally obvious and imperative. Put the Queen's Claims upon the same grounds as the rights of the people, and he was satisfied.

Mr. Denman followed, and in conclusion, said, that Her Majesty looked forward to their decision with equal confidence, and without suspicion; and she would, in any event, meet their judgment with perfect resignation.

The Court was then Adjourned.

Yesterday the Court met at ten o'clock, when the Attorney-General was heard in reply to Mr. Brougham. should best discharge his duty by declaring, that in his opinion the argument and claim of the Learned Gentlemen were wholly unfounded—the claim was never even mentioned by any writer on the Laws and Constitution. The Learned Gent, contended, that the coronation of Queens proceeded from the will and favour of Kings—it was a mere ceremony; that of a King was something more; it was accompanied by important political ad the the recognition by the people, and, on the other hand, the solemu compact entered into by the Sovereign to preserve and maintain the Laws of the Realm. With respect to Queen Consort, there was no recognition of her by the people-With respect to a no compact entered into towards the people. To prove that the coronation of the Queen Consort emanated from the Monarch's will, he referred to the Law books. Lord Coke in Calvin's case supported that doctrine—by Queen Elizabeth's death, the Crown descended to James, and he became absolutely King, without performing the ceremony of a coronation. He then alluded to the preamble of the Act of William and Mary which settled the coronation oath, which provided for the administering the oath to the Sovereign himself. He then referred to Selden, Bracton, and various other learned authorities, to shew, that though numerous persons were required to assist at the coronation of the Queen, it was nothing more than as adjunct to the coronation of the King.

The Solicitor-General rose at twenty minutes past 12 o'clock, and observed, that it now became his duty to state as concisely as possible, the reasons which induced him to come to the same opinion as his Learned Friend who had preceded him. As he understood his Learned Friends who argued for the Queen, her Majesty's claim rested in a great measure on the circumstances of uninterrupted use and enjoyment of the right so claimed; but, if this was to be considered in no other way, his Learned Friend (Mr. Brougham) had most certainly not established his claim. If the Queen had any right of the kind, it could not depend on the indulgence of the Crown, for it was given as a matter of favour and permission. He might refer in proof of this assertion to the summonses issued to persons to attend the Coronation, which proceeded not on any right of tenure as to themselves, but solely in consequence of the King's pleasure; and so it sometimes it had been found that the Queen was crowned with the King, and sometimes not, these very circumstances proved that the Queen enjoyed no right in a general sense. All the Proclamations from the time of Charles I. to the sense. All the Proclamations from the time of Charles I. to the present went decidedly to prove that even the service to be performed was directed by the King, and the language so used—"we have resolved, we have decreed, we have determined?—were so many proofs of this. By what authority was the Queen's supposed right held? So strongly was this argument felt by the Attorney-General for the Queen, that he wished to establish the right a priori if he possibly could, and to consider the proclamations in such cases as emanating from right. It was sufficient to refer to the kinguage of those proclamations, and to the opinion of Lord Bacon, both a lawyer and a statesman, who had discussed the question of a poot-poned coronation; but even that noble writer had never talked of the Queen's right. Leland's Collectanea threw additional light on this very subject. The whole history of England shower, that the Coronation of the Queen rested with the King. During the interval from the Conquest to the reign of John, four married Kings, were crowned withquest to the reign of Join, four married kings were crewned with-out their Queens being crowned at the same time; and what became in this case, of the argument of usage? The same thing happened in the case of Katharine of Portugal, the consort of Charles II; but a uniformity of enjoyment must be established in order to substantiate the Queen's claim. Scottish History had been cited in support of that claim; but their Lordships would not take assertions where proofs were wanting. Not one writer on prerogutive, not one legal authority of any kind, had noticed this boasted right of the Queen, a circumstance which he thought must be conclusive in their Lordship's minds. Never had the right been enjoyed as an adverse claim, but distinctly and solely at the pleasure of the Sovereign. The services to be performed at the Coronation of the Queen were dome in her person in honour of the King; and if their Lordships were satisfied with these arguments, they must come to the same conclusion with his Learned Friend, that the Queen's claim was unfounded.

When the Solicitor-General had finished, Mr. Brougham requested to retire for a little time.

Mr. Brougham, at twenty minutes past one o'clock, began his reply by adverting to the Attorney-General's having represented his own as a clear case, and fearing to injure it by the arguments he advanced in support of it. He observed, that his Learned Friend had adopted the common course of the subordinate Courts; and on the other side. There might, he conceived, be individual rights, not to be exercised in the event of the non-exertion of another person, but the right remained the same in reality. He must still maintain the position, that her Majesty had a personal right, derived from the public, which she could not constitutionally waive. It was necessary that her Majesty should be crowned, in order to recognise and perpetuate her marriage with the King, and to render the royal numicals free from future doubt; and if the ceremony was inconvenient at the present time, it ought to be solemnized as soon as possible after the coronation of the King.

Mr. Brougham esucluded his reply at half-past tirree.

The Council-room was ordered to be cleared of all strangers; and in about ten misutes the messenger aunounced that further proceedings were postponed till Tuesday morning at ten o'clock.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, THURSDAY. Claim of privilege from a person claiming to be the Princess of Mr. Scarle part of a lady well known to the world by the name of Olivia Wilmot Serres, had to move the Court in a matter of much delicacy and importance. Mrs. Serres

(their Lordships would learn) had been arrested in a civil action; and she now claimed, upon the ground of privilege, to have all proceedings stayed, and an exoneretur entered on the bail bond.

A. Justice Bayley.—Is the party moving now in custody, Mr.

Mr. Scarlett.—She is not, my lord; she is out upon bail. The learned counsell proceeded to state, that Mrs. Serres claimed to be the legitimate daughter of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, the bother of the late King; and that documents had been submitted to him (Mr. Scarlett) in proof of the accuracy of her statement. On the plea of her near relationship to the late Sovereign, and to the pr sent reigning family, the applicant claimed ex-

Mr. Justice Bayley. - Inquiry had better be made as to the point Mr. Scarlett was bound to state, in explanation, that his brief, and the documents of proof to which he had alluded, had been put into his hands some days back he had considered them so important as to require verification by affidavit; but such process necessarily took time; and if, in the interim, his client had been called upon to file special bail, it was in him personally that the delay had ori-

An unpleasant fraces took place in the Court of Exchequer on Tuesday last, between Messrs: MARTIN and JERVIS, originating in some difference of opinion. The Learned Gentlemen were impethous in the highest degree, and seemed to forget that they were only acting enemies. The Barons Graham and Garrow held them to keep the peace, and had the parties before them for three-quarters of an hour; and when they retired, far from being reconciled, they were, to use the language of one of their friends, "Hotter than ever."

A meeting of the Proprietors of the Drury Lane establishment was held on Monday, in the Saloon of the Theatre to audit the accounts. The Report was very satisfactory, and stated in substance, that the Theatre is encumbered less by 48,000l. than it was two years ago.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.—On Wednesday a Special General Court was held at the Company's House in Leadenball-street, when the CHAIRMAN announced that he had received a letter from Sir Hudson Lowe, announcing the death of Buonaparte. The letter was rend as follows :-

LIEUT.-COL STANHOPE pointed out the justness and propriety of allowing the most perfect freedom of the press in India, and moved "That all late proceedings by the Honourable Court of Directors, concerning the liberty of the press in British India, be laid before the Court of Proprietors."—MR.D. KINNAIRD seconded the motion. After some observations from the CHAIRMAN, who stated that he knew of no intention on the part of the Court of Stated that he knew or no intention on the part of the Court of Directors to undo what the Marquis of Hastings had done with respect to the liberty of the Asiatic press, Mr. Chalmers moved the previous question; when, after a few observations from Mr. Lowndes, Mr. Grant, Mr. R. Jackson, and Mr. Elphinstone, the motion was withdrawn.

On Wednesday the Dispatches were closed at the East India House, and delivered to the Pursers of the following ships:—Rose Capt. T. M'Taggart; Princess Charlotte of Wales, Capt. C. Biden for Bengal direct.—The East India Company's own ship Waterloo, outward bound, arrived at St. Helena the 3d of May, all well.

CORONER'S INQUEST.—Yesterday an Inquest was held at the house of Charles Thompson, Esq. Muster in Chancery, No. 14, Portland Place, who put a period to his existence. On Thursday morning, the deceased rang his chamber bell for the butler, whom he told to bring some water, and said he should not want him for an hour. At the expiration of an hour he found the door of the dressing-room locked, and upon looking through the key-hole he observed a quantity of blood on the floor. Several of the servants then forced open the doer, and found the deceased sitting in a chair in his morning gown, with his throat cut from ear to ear. Two rasors were lying near him, one on the table and the other on the floor. The de ceased was quite dead. The only cause assigned for the dreadful act was owing to an apoplexy, which seemed to have preyed on his mind, and latterly he was observed to be much dejected 52 years of age, and has left a wife and family. Mr. Thomson was much respected. It appears that the deceased first made an incision with one rasor on the throat, and completed the deadly act with the second; his head was hanging to the body by a particle of the spine, and the walls were covered with blood. On opening the head, it was found in a very unbeal thy state, such as likely to cause derangement of intellect. The verdict of the Jury was, that the deceased committed the act himself, being at the time in a state of MELANCHOLY SUICIDE .- On Saturday se'nnight Mr. Andrews ! committed suicide by cutting himself on the upper part of the thigh, near the groin, with a razor, while on a visit at Albion House, He was well known in London, having, a very few years ago, relinquished an extensive practice to become medical attendant on Mr. Coutts, the well-known banker; but being absent lately, on a visit to General Meade, at Weymouth, Mr. Coutts called in another Medical Gentleman, which is supposed to have caused the melancholy catastrophe.—Verdict—Insanity, owing to distress of mind. He was a tall handsome man, about four years. of age, and of a most amiable disposition.

have hardly ever had occasion to record a more metanchely event than the above. Mr. Andrews was one of the most aminaleand good-hearted men, living in the midst of a circle of affectionate riends, and in a most excellent line of practice, when, unfortunately, he was prevailed upon, some years since, to relinquish his acquaintance, and abandon his general profession, to devote himself entirely to the service of Mr. and Mrs. Contra. We say unfortunately, because, although the terms stated to have been agreed upon for this sacrifice were extremely liberal, and Mr. Coutts's actual conduct to him more liberal than even those statements shew, still it was a sacrifice for which we cannot find ato adequate compensation.

Mr. Audrews had been formerly on terms of intimacy with Mrs_ Coutts when Miss Mellon, and had learned, doubtless, from her, to respect and esteem the excellent man who afterwards because her husband; but he must also have known, that where there is violence of temper, mixed with fickleness of disposition in a female, there can be little chance of continued tranquillity or comfort in domestic life, unless that violence is restrained, and that or policy. Whether he did or did not weigh these matters before he accepted the appointment of physician and surgeon in ordinary to Mr. and Mrs. Coutts, we know not; be took possession of the office four or five years since, upon the resignation of another medical gentleman, whose wife was so unconscionable as to wish occasionatly to be permitted to see him while he was on duty.

After several years of assiduous attention and unwearied patience. After several years of assiduous attention and unwearied passance, Mr Andrews, in April last, requested a week's leave of absence, to recruit his health by a visit to Norfolk. Mrs. Coutts insisted upon his taking a fertnight, which he did; at the end of which term his friends solicited him to remain with them three days longer. Whether he wrote to ask permission for this extension or not, we cannot say—he took it, and returned to town on the Thursday, method of the Monday. On his arrival at Mrs. Coutte's he was instead of the Monday. On his arrival at Mrs. Coutts's he was informed by the servant that his further attendance there was not required, and that another medical man had taken his place.

This was Mr. Andrews's own account of the affair:—bow much or in what way his death is connected with it, far be it from us to surmise. That there never was a better creature drew the breath of life we are quite certain. His manners were mild and unaffected - his society every where courted and desired; and the shock orcasioned by his sudden and violent death is doubly felt by his friends, from the circumstance of his having been so recently and hoppfly restored to them, by his dismissal from exclusive professional servi-

We have made the above statement, because it is the true on and does not in the slightest degree correspond with those which have already appeared. We should however add, that the pecuniary have already appeared. We should however add, that the pecuniary arrangements, mentioned in several of the papers, subsequently to Mr. Andrews's dismissal, we know nothing: and that all which is said on that subject may be quite correct. We know that to vulgar minds it seems possible to cure the wounds of the heart, as if they were but skin-deep, with gold-beater's skin:—gold, if well applied, may stop the mouths of some, and open those of others—but it has also the power of adding insult to injury, and indignity to injustice.

ADVERTISEMENT.]—New Series of Scottish Historical Novels.—"A Legend of Argyle, or 'tis a Hundred Years Since," a popular Novel just published, will be found to form a new, instructive, and entertaining illustration of the Rehellich in Scott, detection, and entertaining illustration of the Rebellion in Scotland in 1715; thus embracing one of the most important epochs of our domestic history. In the Legend of Argyle fiction is so ingeniously blended with facts of historical record, that the illusion is complete; and while pensing its pages we fancy ourselves carried back to the olden time of Scatits pages we foncy ourselves carried back to the olden time of Scat-land, with its turbulent horrors, its obsequious vassals, and all the peculiarities of clan governments. We strongly recommend this. Novel, together with "Lochiel, or the Field of Cullodan," also lately published, to all who would obtain an intimate knowledge of the history of their country, without wading through the arid details of the historian; the latter work being founded on the events of 1742 at the former is on that of 1715 thus forming a parise in of 1745, as the former is on that of 1715, thus forming a series in which the one is supplementary to the other.

The superiors merit of the Pictures and Grand Works which are exhibited as Specimens of the Prizes for Tomkins's Picture Lottery, New Bond street, which is to be drawn 24th July, is universally acknowledged. The official opinion of the late venerable President and principal Members of the Royal Academy, was in the very highest terms of profess. Sir Benjamin West says, "they are correct and beautiful, and with be honoured and admired by subsequent ages." Sir Thomes Lawrence "has no difficulty in saying, that they are beautiful speci-mens." Sir William Beechy says, "there cannot be two opinions on their merits, they are certainly most exquisitely finished and unique." Mr. Ward says, "there can be but one opinion as respects their excellence." Mr. Shee "has great pleasure in adding his testimony to that of the President of the Royal Anademy, in whose high commendation he entirely concurs." Mr. Smirke says, "the mode in which they are completed as Daintings is necessary." "the mode in which they are completed, as Paintings, is new and ingenious, and the result far exoceds uny coloured imitations that were ever produced in Europe."

Of all diseases incidental to the human frame, none are more afficting than Convulsion Fits, Epilepic Fits, Spasms, &c. The late Dr. Hadley, of Derby, (the diseoverer of this invaluable medicine) used it in private practice for upwards of fifty years with the most fattering success in the various complaints, as under, which is proved by incontrovertible facts.
The powerful virtues of this Powder in a short time relieves the sufferer; and by due perseverance in its application, completely extirpates Convulsion Fits in infants and adults; also Epileptic or Falling Fits; strengthens the most weakly stomach; allays inflammation, and removes the most violent Spasmode Affections. It likewise has the happy effect of eradicating Fits which females are subject to during pragmaney or subsequent accouchement. This Powder is a grand restorative in all cases of relaxation, debility, and weakness, in children and adults; it gradually strengthens the stomach, increases the appetite, promotes digestion, and in a short time restores the patient to perfect health, without conflavement or alteration of diet.

Extracts from letter-addressed to Dr. Hadley:—

From the Honz/Mrs. Egerton.

Dr. Dadley,

Sir.—Fthis morning received your letter, mentioning your intention of bringing your Couvulsion Powder into more general notice. I have so very high an opinion of it, from the cases I have seen performed, that it hink you will be doing a public service. I remain, Sir, yours, &c. B. EGGRITTON.

From the Rt. Hon. Lady Lismore. September 2, 1820.

This is to certify, that I have used Hadley's Convulsion Powder in my family and many others, and approve of its efficacy.

From Lady Walpele—Hillingdon, Uxbridge, Jan. 86, 1819.

Dr. Hadley,—Sir, I shall have great pleasure is deciring you to make use of my name when you publish the Convulsion Powder. Its great efficacy b

PATENT ECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMP. This Invention embraces every requisite to reader it a desirate confort in the more general use of Lamps instead of Candles, giving to the Public the choice of an improved light, in which there is perfect safety, at half the expense of Candles. The Chamber or Night Light being universally interesting to all families, and particularly to many professions, may be best appreciated by a fair comparison with others, which are most resorted to, viz, the Rush Light, an old servant, but it must be allowed, a drowsy one, and totally unfit for motion. The wax-wick, stuck upon cork, finating in oil upon water, of more underadate, but must be stationary, subject to the cork catching five, breaking the glass it foats in, essaing a suffecting smel, consuming much oil, and at constant expense for the wicks. The Patent Economical Chamber Lamp: glass it Soats in, easning a sufferenting smell, consuming much oil, and a constant expense for the wicks. The Patent Economical Chamber Lamp: moexpense but for oil, and that only at the rate of a halfpenny for eight er nine hearing any motion, and can be regulated to born the longest or shortest night, disappearing in the morning without smoke or smell. The price 10s. in japan standa, and 20s. In fancy brouze and Imperial metal. The same principle applies, with peculiar advantage, to the larger Lamps, for the dining table and sidebeard, upon a handsome scale, suited to the affluent, with elegant pedestals, 55s. to 65s.; and for the study, to write er read by (sinambra) they are every thing that can be wished, at 35s. to 45s. and upon a smaller scale, 25s. to 30s. these are universally approved and patronised by Clerical and other Professional Gentlemen in every part of the kingdom, and for all minor uses they are equally desirable. The Grecian Glass Hanging Lamps for the Staircase, Passage, Conservatory, Hall, &c. are perfectly sew in taste, and elegantly simple, from 30s. to 75s. the latter upon a lager scale. In all these Lamps the same perfection exists.—Durning the whole evening without trimming, requiring to be replenished with cotton only one in two or three menths, and se simple as to meet the meanest capacity.—Sold for the Patentee by T. COMMERCIAL REPORT, FROM JULY 2 TO JULY 7, INCLUSIVE.

That disposition which we noticed in our last, on the part of the West India merchants to effect sales of their produce, has still been more apparent throughout the transactions of the present week, and the demand having been more circumscribed, we have consequently to announce a further depreciation—Sugars may be stated at 2s. per wt. Brown Jamuicas having been forced off at 54s. to 55s. and other qualities in proportion. The present stock is 23,000 casks against 19,000 at this period last year.—Coffee 2s. to 4s. per cwt. The result of the several public sales, especially those of yesterday, establish St. Domingos at 116s.; Good to Fine Ordinary Jamaicas 112s. to 119s.; Midding to Good Midding 124s. to 133s.; from which it appears that Foreign has been less operated upon than Plantation .- Spirits of all 'descriptions are, if possible, in a more neglected state; indeed, whilst the stock continues to accumulate, we cannot expect any ameriment, even upon the unprecedented low value. The Dock returns are 19,239 puncheons, being an increase upon our stock since last July of 9,096 purcheons.—Of Cotton we have merely to remark that much beaviness has governed the transactions which have taken place, and previous prices searcely maintained. The sales are about 1100 bales, principally Bengals, from 54d. to 64d.; of this description there are now in the warehouses 109,492 bales, of which 41,800 are unsold, and of Surats 32,415 bales, and 20,638 bales unsold.—In the early part of the week Tailows were forced off at 45s and for a private part of the week Tallows were forced off at 45s, and for arrivals 46s, for yellow candle; but yesterday and to-day there is evidently more firmness, and sellers are demanding rather more money, which, in all probability, they will obtain.

THE NEW EDINBURGH REVIEW.

THE NEW BDINBURGH REVIEW.

137 The Conductors of The Edinburgh Blouthly Review have changed their Journal from a Monthly to a Quarterly publication, in consequence of an opision very generally prevalent in the best informed literary circles, and repeatedly and earnestly pressed on their consideration, that the peculiar advantages of the Quarterly form, being more suitable to the character which their work is admitted to have acquired, are likely to impart to their labours a still higher power of influencing the public mind.

Bach Number will contain the same quantity of matter, as the other Quarterly Reviews; and the Work will be published regularly on the 31st of July, 31st of October, 31st of January, and 30th of April.—Complete Sets of the Edinburgh Monthly Review, in five volumes, price 15s. each, may be had of the Publishers of THE NEW EDINBURGH REVIEW, Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh; G. and W. #### FROM THE LONDON GAZETTE OF JULY 7.

COLONIAL OFFICE, DOWNING STREET, JULY 4.
Captain Crokat, of the 20th regiment, arrived this day from St.
Helena, with a dispatch addressed to the Earl Bathurst, by Lieut.
General Sir Hudson Lowe, K.C.B. of which the following is a copy:

My Lord, St. Helena, May 6, 1821. It falls to my duty to inform your Lordship, that Napoleon Buomaparte expired at about ten minutes before six o'clock in the evening of the 5th instant, after an illness which had confined him to his apartments since the 17th of March last.

He was attended during the early part of his indisposition, from the 17th to the 31st of March, by his own Medical Attendunt, Professor Antonomarchi, alone. During the latter period, from the 1st of April to the 5th of May, he received the daily visits of Dr. Ar-, of his Majesty's 20th regiment, generally in conjunction with Professor Autommurchi.

Dr. Shortt, Physician to the Forces, and Dr. Mitchell, Principal Medical Officer of the Royal Navy on the station, whose services as well as those of any other medical person on the island, had been offered, were called upon in consultation by Professor Antommarchi, on the 3d of May; but they had not any opportunity afforded to them of seeing the patient.

Dr. Arnott was with him at the moment of his decease, and saw him expire. Captain Crokat, Orderly Officer in attendance, and him expire. Captain Crokat, Orderly Officer in attendance, and Doctors Shortt and Mitchell, saw the body immediately afterwards. Dr. Arnott remained with the body during the night.

Early this morning, about seven o'clock, I proceeded to the apartment where the body lay, accompanied by Rear-Admiral Lambert, Naval Commander-in-Chief on this station; the Marquess de Monchenu Commissioner of his Majesty the King of France, charged with the same duty also on the part of his Majesty the Emperor of Austria; Brigadier-General Coffin, second in command of the troops; Thomas H. Brooke, and Thomas Greentree, Esqrs. Members of Council in the Government of this Island; and Captains bers of Council in the Government of this Island; and Captains

Brown, Hendry, and Marryat, of the Royal Navy.

After viewing the person of Napoleon Buonaparte, which lay with the face uncovered, we retired.

An opportunity was afterwards afforded, with the concurrence of the persons who had composed the family of Napoleon Buonaparte, to as many Officers as were desirous, naval and military, to the Honourable the East India Company's Officers and Civil Servants, and to various other individuals resident here, to enter the room in which the body lay, and to view it.

At two o'clock this day, the body was opened, in the presence of the following medical gentlemen: —Dr. Shortt, M.D. Dr. Mitchell, M.D. Dr. Arnott, M.D. Dr. Burton, M.D. of his Majesty's 66th regiment, and Matthew Livingstone, Esq. Surgeon in the East India Company's service.

trand and Count Montholon were present. After a careful examination of the several internal parts of the body, the whole of the Medical Gentlemen present concurred in a Report on their appearance. This Report is inclosed. I shall cause the body to be interred with the honours due to a General Officer of the highest ran.".

I have intrusted this disputch to Curotain Crokat, of His Majesty's 20th regiment, who was the orderly on over in attendance upon the person of Napoleon Buonaparte at the time of his decease. He Sembarks on board His Majesty's sloop Heron, which Rear-Admiral Lambert has detached from the squadron under his command, with the intelligence.—I have, &c. &c. &c. H. LO, VE, Lieut.-Gen.

Strong adhesions connected the whole superior surface, particularly about the pyloric extremity to the concave surface of the left lobe of the liver; and on separating these, an ulcer, which penetrated the coats of the stomach, was discovered one inch from the pyrolus, sufficient to allow the passage of the little finger. The internal surface of the stomach, to nearly its whole extent, was a mass of cancerous disease or schirrous portions advancing to cancer; this was parti-cularly noticed near the pylorus. The cardiac extremity, for a small space near the termination of the esophagus, was the only part appearing in a healthy state. The stomach was found nearly filled with a large quantity of fluid, resembling coffee-grounds. The convex surface of the left lobe of the liver adhered to the diaphragm. With the exception of the alhesions occasioned by the disease in the stomach, no one healthy appearance presented itself in the liver. The remainder of the abdominal viscera were in a healthy state. The Judgment of the Court below, in the case of the King v. Woolf, (the case of Kinnear and others, for a conspiracy) was con-

On the Order of the Day for the third reading of the Husbandry Horse Tax Repeal Bill,

vernment had agreed to give up 500,0001, of the Revenue, by repealing this tax. He was of opinion that if it were desirable to give up any of the revenue, a Committee was the proper mode for deciding on what part of it should be given up. The present repeal would not benefit the agriculturists, particularly the smaller ones; and before proceeding farther with the Bill, enquiry ought to take place, as to the state of taxation; for the agriculturists having this year sweepeled. year succeeded, the manufacturers may come forward next year, and ask for some of the duties had on their articles to be taken off.

The Earl of Liverpool observed, that the Bill did not originate with the Executive Government. It was well known that it had been introduced by a Member of the Agricultural Committee, and was in the first stage, opposed by the Members of the Executive Government, but a majority of the other House having approved of it, it was not thought prudent to oppose it. For himself, he could say, that he wished it had not been proposed. He had opposed the Committee for inquiring into agricultural discress, because he saw no good could result from it. With respect to appointing a Committee to inquire into what taxes could be repealed, the result of the Committee appointed would be similar to that relating to agricultural distress; for when seven or eight persons got together, each had a particular tax of his own, which he thought ought to be repealed, and indeed, which he insisted ought to take precedence of all others.

The Earl of Caernarvon was convinced, that indirect taxation had reached its maximum, and it was now of very little importance with a view to revenue, whether a certain amount of duties were increased or reduced.—The Bill was then passed.—Adjourned.

TUESDAY. The Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Montrose, and the Earl of Shaftesbury appeared as His Majesty's Commissioners and brought down the Royal Assent to the following Bills:—

The Consolidated Fund Bill, the Husbandry Horses Duty Repeal

Bill, the British Spirits Bill, the Assessed Taxes Composition Bill, the Corn Averages Bill, the Captured Slaves Bill, the Exchequer Bills for Public Works Bill, the Naval Property Bill, the Mohair Bounties Bill, the Irish Silk Bounties Bill, the East India Trade Bill, the Warehousing of Goods Bill, the Irish Custom Collectors Bill, the Irish Revenue Commissioners' Bill, the Rum Importation Bill, the Lunatic Trustees Bill, the Bankruptcy Courts Bill, the Metropolis Police Bill, the London Wharfs Bill, the Dublin Foundling Hospital Bill, and a great number of Private Bills.

The Duke of Clarence Provision, the Appropriation, and the Lotteries Bills, were read a third time, passed, and sent to the

WEDNESDAY.

At three o'clock, the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Harrowby, and the Earl of Westmoreland appeared as His Majesty's Commissioners. The Usher of the Black Rod was then sent to command the attendance of the Commons. In a few minutes, the Speaker, accompanied by about sixty Members, appeared at the Bar, when the Royal Assent was given to the Duke of Clarence Provision Bill, the Appropriation Bill, the Lotteries Bill, and the Irish Court of Exchequer Regulation Bill.

PROROGATION.

The following Speech from the Throne, was then read by the Lord Chancellor:

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" We have it in command from His Majesty to inform you, that the state of public business having enabled him to dispense with our attendance in Parliament, be es deter this Session.

"His Majesty, however, cannot close it without expressing his satisfaction at the zeal and assiduity with which you have prosecuted the laborious and important inquiries in which you have been

"He has observed, with particular pleasure, the facility with which the restoration of a metallic currency has been effected, by the authority given to the Bank of England to commence its payments in cash, at an earlier period than had been determined by the last Parliament.

." His Majesty has commanded us to acquaint you, that he continues to receive from Foreign Powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"We are commanded by His Majesty to return to you his thanks

" Although the public expenditure has alm derable reduction within the present year, His Majesty trusts be shall be enabled, by the continuance of peace, and of internal tranquillity, to make such further reductions as may satisfy the just expectations expressed by Parliament.

"His Majesty has commanded us to assure you of the gratification which he has derived from the provision which you have make for his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,
"It is with the greatest satisfaction that His Majesty has observed the quiet and good order which continue to prevail in those parts of the country which were not long since in a state of agitation. " His Majesty deeply laments the distress to which the Agricultural Interests in many parts of the kingdom are still subject.

"It will be His Majesty's most anxious desire, by a strict attention to public economy to do all that depends upon him for the relici of the country from its present difficulties; but you cannot far to be sensible that the success of all efforts for this purpose will mainly depend upon the continuance of domestic tranquillity; and His Majesty confidently relies on your utmost exertions in your several counties in enforcing obedience to the laws, and in promoting harmony and concord amongst all descriptions of His Majesty's subjects."

At the conclusion of this speech, the Lord Chancellor said— "My Lords and Gentlemen—B; virtue of His Majesty's Com-mission under the Great Seal, to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in His Majesty's name, and in obedience to is commands, prorogue this Parliament to Thursday, the 20th day of September next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday, the 20th day of September next.

The Commons then retired, and their Lordships separated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. TUESDAY.

The Speaker was summoned to the House of Peers. On his return ke announced that the Royal Assent had been given by Commission to the Bill for providing for the additional charge on the Consolidated Fund, and other Bills.

New Writs were ordered for the King's County, in the room of John Parsons, Esq. who had accepted the situation of Commissioner in the Irish Insolvent Debtors' Court; and for the Borough of Cockermouth, in the room of the Right Hon. John Beckett, who had accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett took occasion to advert to a statement respecting Mr. Greerson, an officer, under the Government of Ireland, in which he had been made to say, that individual returned a larger sum as paid for Proclamations than he actually had credit for. Now, what he did say at the time was, that in the return of sums paid to different Newspapers, amounting to 0 or 700,0001, there appeared a deficiency of 4,0001. Stating this, he had made an excuse for the officer, supposing him to have understood the return called for to relate merely to sums paid for the insertion of Proclamations, &c. and not extending to other matters which were meant to be included. He was told that the officer in question was a very respectable character, and that he felt much hurt at the reflection supposed to be cast on him, and he had therefore been anxious to state that he had never said what had been reported.

Mr. Bathurst presented a petition from the Prisoners in the King's Bench Prison, setting forth that the different prisons were filled with prisoners who could not immediately obtain relief unie the Insolvent Debtors' Bill, and praying that measures might be taken to enable them to partake in the general rejoicings on the occasion of the Coronation of His Majesty. They bumbly hoped that the House would address the Crown on this subject, or pass a Bill for their Relief, to open their Prison Door and set the Cap-

Mr. Hobhouse suggested, that as there were a great number of persons in confinement for political offences, Ministers would do well on the approaching Coronation to advise the Crown to mitigate their punishment, and he particularly noticed the case of Mr. Henry Hunt, as deserving of mitigation.

Lord A. Hamilton asked whether it was the intention of Government to persevere in protecting the Revenue in regard to the Scotch Breweries, which had been the subject of complaint from the brewers of that part of the United Empire.

The Chancellar of the Exchequer said, the attention of the Treasury would be directed to the subject with a view of supplying the best remedy in their power to any real grievance that might exist.

Mr. Hume presented a petition from a person named Lester, of Burton-on-Trent, complaining that Mr. M'Adam had received 4,0001. from the Treasury, which he (Mr. L.) was entitled to, from having originated the plan which Mr. M'Adam had followed.

e Chancellor of the Exchequer observed, that the grant to Mr. M'Adam had been recommended by a Committee of that House, in consequence of which Government had enquired at the Postoffice whether that Department had received any material benefit from Mr. M'Adam's plan, and the answer was in favour of it, consequently Government felt justified in giving the sum adverted to.

Mr. Henry Grey Bennett alluding to the grant of 4,000l. to Sir Wm. Adam, for his services in the Ophthalmic Institution by a Committee, hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would not network to that individual four thousand pence, before the next Session of Parliament, as he thought the subject ought to be brought under the consideration of the House, and wholly dissented from the Report.

Mr. Hume presented a petition from Mr. Jamieson, one of the Clerks of His Mujesty's Signet, in Scotland, praying for an enquiry into the Acts of Sederunt of 1810, and took occasion to advert to the confluct of Sir John Sylvester, while officiating as Judge at the O14 Builey Session in praising the Bridge-street Association. He complained now in like manner of Lord President Hope in the Scotch Courts, who in a case which came before him in which two Magistrates of Montrose had quarrelled, had gone out of his way and indulged in remarks censuring Ministers, and of such a nature, as would, he thought, subject that Judge to be called to the Bar of the House. He had called the New Charter of that Town quite an unconstitutional one, and advised the Magistrates to be cautious how they acted under it, lest they should white themselves to mixing the processing the subject themselves to mixing the subject that subject to be called the New Charter of that Town quite an unconstitutional one, and advised the Magistrates to be cautious how they acted under it, lest they should be subject to b subject themselves to criminal warrants.

Lord Binning protested strongly against what the Hon. Member had advanced against the Lord President, and thought on bringing the petition forward at this late period of the Session, he had no doubt, that it was one of that class of petitions of which the House knew too much.

On the question for printing the petition,

Mr. Hume said, he did not expect the Noble Lord would favor any attempt to redress grievances. With respect to the Lord President, he said that the Learned Lord had ordered an individual from the Bar, who complained that the Acts of Sederunt were against the Law of the Land.

Lord Binning Observed (in answer to the remark, that he (Lord B.) would not favour the reform of abuses in Scotland,) that whatever opinion the Hon. Gent. might entertain of him was a matter. of perfect indifference. He felt equally indifferent as to what be might think of his relation, the Lord President Hope, and he writy believed, that he knew little of the statement which he had just made to the House respecting that Judge. He thought be could pledge himself, that in the next Session the charge, if brought forward, would not go refuted. For the Lord President Hope, he believed it was well known that his character had ever stood high in general estimation as a Judge and a man. It might have happened that the during conduct of some individual of little respectability had called down the indignation of the Court, and caused his removal from the Bar, but he was confident that the Lord President did not merit the character which had been given of him. He (Lord Binning) would not oppose the motion before the House, but for his own part he doubted whether the Petit on ought to be printed.

j On the question being put the "Noes" were loud, and the Gallery was cleared for a division. The House did not divide, and we understand the motion for printing was not carried.

Dr. Lushington presented a petition from Wm. Clarke, of the Strand, complaining of the prosecutions instituted against him by the Society for the Suppassion of Vice, and praying the House to interfere. The petitioner stated, that he sold a book called "Killing no Munler," which was written by Colonel Titus, and which contained an exhortation to munder Oliver Cronwell, to an old man whom he believed was sent by the Society- this he considered

1 instigation to commit offence.

Mr. Wilberforce thought that an individual who sold pamphlets such as the one described in his petition, was not entitled to so much notice as the Society. He did not think the Society employed spies or informers. The petition after some further conversation was ordered to be printed.

On the motion of Mr. Wilberforce, an Address to the King praying that His Majesty would order a copy of the Report made to the House of Representatives in America, in favour of the mutual right of searching Slave Ships, was agreed to.

In answer to a question put by Mr. Bernal, respecting the Russian Tariff, the Murquis of Londonderry said the Emperor of Russia having only just arrived in his capital, the decision on the subject could not be had at present, but the last communication was of a favorable description.

The Marquis of Tacistock having understood that His Majesty had been advised to assemble a very large number of troops at the approaching Coroantion, thought that after the great indications of toyalty, with which the Noble Marquis represented ills Majesty to have been received by the people since his accession to the throne, there could be no necessity for these arrangements. He wished to be informed whether the troops to be assembled would exceed in number those which had attended previous Coronations.

The Marquis of London erry was not aware of the numbers used on former occasions. There would be as many soldiers present as would be considered to add a fitting splendour to the occasion. He could assure the Noble Marquis, that not one would be there under any idea that the general tranquillity would be dis-

The Marquis of Tavistock asked to what extent His Majesty's Ministers intended to reduce the present Military Establishment. He thought after the intelligence recently received from St. Helena, and the complete security of Louis XVIII. on the Throne of Prance, a standing army of 200,000 men was greatly beyond the amount necessary.

The Marquis of Londonderry said, great reductions were in contemplation, but to what extent he could not precisely state. Colonel Davies said, there could be no reason for not reducing the force at St. Helena forthwith. Mr. Henry Grey Bennett asked why the French servant of Buonaparte did not sign the papers, as to his appearance after death. The Marquis of Londonderry knew nothing of the fact, as stated by the Hou Gent.

Mr. S. Rice moved, that the 14th Report of the Commissioners appointed to enquire into the state of education in Ireland be reprinted. The Hon. Gent. observed, that since the Union no less an amount than 1,200,000! had been granted and expended in support of Public Schools, and sorry he was to say, it had been mischiev-ously applied. On the Protestant Charity Schools alone 622,0001. On the Foundling Hospital above 500,0001, and a large sum had been expended for the Society for the Discovering Vice. He objected to this mode of bestowing the public money, and suggested that the Report contained the only correct principles on which Education in Ireland ought to be conducted, so as to embrace all classes of the poor keeping clear of religious differences.

Mr. Brougham concurred in opinion with his Hon. Friend, and stated the reasons for delaying bringing forward his Education Bill this Session; this arose in consequence of the conflicts between the Church Establishment and the Dissenters, and he was anxious that all heats should subside and a better understanding be come to, before he introduced the measure. The motion was agreed to.

On the question for adjourning,
Mr. Hume gave notice of a motion for to-morrow for an Addures to the King, praying that he would be graciously pleased to give directions for the adoption of such measures as were rendered necessary by her Majesty's rights, the wishes of the people and a regard to the peace of the metropolis upon the approaching Coro-The Hon. Gent. wished to know whether Ministers intended to pursue that system of persecution against her Majesty, by refusing her those accommodations which were afforded to the other branches of the Royal Family. His object in bringing forward the motion was to ensure the peace of the capital at the Coronation.

Mr. Butterworth expressed his regret, that the Hon. Gent. should have given notice of such a metion. He thought her Mashould have given noise of such a motion. He thought her sha-jesty had many ill advisers, but he trusted for the sake of the little credit she had left, that she would abstain on the approaching occasion from interference in any shape whatever.—Adjourned. WEDNESDAY.

The House met at three o'clock, and then-

Mr. Hume rose to submit the motion, of which he had given notice Mr. Hume rose to submit the motion, of which he had given notice the preceding day. The Hon. Member adverted to the decision of the Privy Council, which stated that "her Majesty was not entitled to the claim specified in her Memorial." Now, it was his opinion, and that of the country at large, that her Majesty's Counsel had clearly established her right to be crowned, as resting on the same foundation with the King's right; so that the public would look apon her exclusion as another persecution. The object of the Address which he was about to propose, was to procure for her the enjoyment of that right, and which would but secure the tranquillity of the country. The Addresswould be framed so as to humbly pray that the cermiony might be performed, on the ground of expediency, and by way of kindness and consolation. He wished to leave it so that the property of a book from the Vine. He was called more than it might emanate as a boon from the Noble Marquis and his colleagues to take care how they persevered in another act of persecution, as the public would certainly feel the exclusion of the Queen from the Coronation to be. They ought to advise His Majesty, in his own clemency and generosity, to do this navise rits majesty, in his own ciennetcy and generosity, to do this act of kindness and of favour. Was the Queen to be the only member of the Royal Family who was denied the privilege of attending the ceremony? Was she, the bighest subject in the realm, to be excluded, we here every Peeress in the land was admitted? At present she did not know whether she would be allowed to go, even if sent she did not know whether she would be anowed to go, even in she was not to participate in the high solemnity. Perhaps if she presented herself as a spectator, she would be refused access, and thus further disgrace and indignity would be heaped upon her. The Hon. Member proceeded to read his Address, and just as he came the description of the country. to that part of it which alluded to the tranquillity of the country, the Usher of the Black Rod gave a loud knock at the door, and so the Hon. Gentleman was interrupted in his progress, when the Usher appeared at the Bar, and in the usual forms, summoned the House to attend on the Lords to hear the procognition. The Spenker accordingly, attended by the Members present, went to the Lords; and on their return, he read the Speech, and the House separated.

LAW INTELLIGENCE

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT, WEDNESDAY.

G. Lane Fox, Esq. v. Wright and Levy.—The plaint obtained some time since an Injunction to restrain the defendants from proceeding at Law to recover the amount of certain Post Ohit Bonds, which he had handed over to the defendant Levy, for the purpose of raising money, and one of which for 2000l. the defendant Wright had purchased for 4251.

Mr. Wetherell this day applied to the Court to dissolve that Injunction, which, he said, had been obtained on an cx parts hearing of the case. The plaintiff, a gentleman well known among the fashionable circles, was entitled on the demise of his father to very considerable landed property, and being in temporary want of money, he, in 1820, applied to the defendant Levy to raise a fund for him. The latter proposed the execution of Post Obit Bonds, which was assumed to by the plaintiff, who executed documents to the amount of 40,000l, and handed them over to Levy, who applied to Mr. Phillips, the auctioneer, of Bond-street, to sell them by auction. They were accordingly advertised, and Mr. Wright seeing the advertisement, attended, and bought one bond to the amount of 2000i. for which he paid 4251, which was secured to him by warrant of application was made for payment of the bond, and on a refusal, proceedings were commenced at law for the recovery of the amount, and the application made to this Court on the part of the plainting to restrain the proceedings. Among the other affiliavits now filed, that by Mr. Wright denied all connection or dealing with Levy previously to the sale in question, and swore positively that he was solely induced to attend by reading the advertisement; and gave as a reason for not purchasing more, that he did not like at that time to sink more money. The Learned Coursel cited various cases in support of his argument, and to show that the sale of Post Ohit securities were not to be affected in a Court of Equity, because they might (as in this case) become due curlier than was expected at the time they were given, and contended that here the full value had been paid for the boal, and the whole transaction was a fair and bona fide one. The price to be paid was not to be fixed by an Actuary in his counting-house, but by the market price; and the fact of Mr. Wright not having purchased more than the 20001, when he might have got the whole 40,0001, at so advantageous a price, proved that there was no collusion, and therefore the injunction ought to be dissolved.

Mr. Bell supported the injunction, and urged the strong necessity that existed for the Court interfering, in cases like the present, to protect individuals who might otherwise fall into the hands of unprincipled men, and be induced to give up securities to a very great amount, while they received in return but a mere trifle in comamount, while they received in return but a mere trifle in comparison. In this case 2000l, had been given for 425l, and that by a young gentleman only 27 years of age, who indertook to pay the same at the death of his father, then 64. This could not be called a fair transaction; nor could it be said that the plaintiff had not been taken advantage of; and therefore he was perfectly justified in applying to the Court for relief; and under these circumstances the Court would feel bound to continue the injunction.

The Vice-Chancellor thought the question of great importance and one that ought to receive the most muture consideration. and one that oright to receive the most induce consideration. The general rule of a Court of Equity was, that the private sale of Post Ohit securities could not be maintained, unless the full market price Ohit securities could not be maintained, unless the full market price was paid for them; but that rule did not apply to sales by auction, unless it appeared that the ventor was in the power of the purchaser, and the som paid not the market price. The cases cited by Mr. Wetherell were decided on this principle, but here the bonds were to be sold without reserve, and the plaintiff had not the power of employing a person to bid for them, and thus preclude their being sold below the market price. Had that opportunity been afforded, but he they had them on so low, and therefore. he did not think he would have let them go so low, and therefore, under all the circumstances, it would be difficult to say that the plaintiff had in no sense been in the power of the purchaser, and that the sum of 4251, was the fuir market price. His Honour, in conclusion, ruled that the injunction should be continued, and that the plaintiff should pay into Court 4251, with the interest due.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, WEDNESDAY.

The Rev. Rich. Hayes v. Shepherd.—Mr. Campbell showed cause against a Rule obtained by Mr. Chitty on a former day, callcause against a Rule obtained by Mr. Chitty on a former day, calling on the Defendant to show cause why the judgment of non prosphould not be set aside. The Learned Counsel stated that it was one of several actions brought against the publisher of the Literary Journal for a libel in that paper. The defendant, upon intimation that he had published libellous matter, made an apology, and in the first action against him the plaintiff obtained a vertice for 51, damages.

Mr. Chitty, in support of the Rule, contended that judgment of non pros had been irregularly signed .- The Rule was discharged non pros and been irregularly signed.—The Rule was discharged.

Mr. Campbell showed cause against a Rule obtained by Mr.

Stocks, calling upon an Attorney, named John Sylvester, to show cause why he should not pay back the sunt of 491, which he "had received from a client, and why he should not be struck off the Rolls for improper practice. The application was made to the Court on the ground that Mr. Sylvester had received from his client, the dethe ground that Mr. Sylvester had received from his client, the defendant in an action, the sum of 491, for the purpose of paying it over to the plaintiff; instead however of paying the money to the plaintiff he applied it to his own use, and left the defendant to be proceeded against in execution. Mr. Campbell rend the affidavit of Mr. Sylvester, who did not deny the misapplication of the money but alleged that he had offered to make every reparation to the party. He trusted the Court would not inflict the disgrace the Rule called for upon Mr. Sylvester, who was a young Attorney.

The Chief Justice said, the Court was called on to exercise a painful duty, but that duty they were bound to discharge. It was impossible they could suffer a person to continue an Officer of the Court, who was found receiving money from his client, and applying it to his own use, instead of paying it over to the plaintiff in the action, leaving his client to be taken in execution. The Rule against him was made absolute.

This being the last day of Term, the Court sat to a late hour, hearing and deciding motions.

FRIDAY .- Richardson v. Sir T. Neave, Bart. and another. This was an action against the Sheriff of Essex, and his officer, for un assault and false imprisonment. The defendant pleaded firs the general issue, not guilty, and second, a plea of justifying the alleged assault and false imprisonment, by virtue of a writ of caplas ad satisfaciendum issued against the plaintiff. To this the plaintiff replied de injuria, and denied the existence of the supsed writ.—Issue thereon.

It appeared that Mr. Richardson, who is a gentleman of fortune residing at Oak-Hall, near Wanstend, was arrested on the 30th of October, while travelling in a post-chaise; that he said his name was William John—the writ being directed against William Liebardson; nevertheless the officer made the caption, and detained him

The Chief Justice charged the Jury, that if they believed that the plaintiff was the person intended by the writ, though all his names were not set out, and though the process was sued out by frond, and from motives of malice on the part of other persons, the Sheriff, as an executive officer, was not bound for the consequences. This however might be a matter for further consideration, whichever way the verdict went.

The Jury found their verdict for the defendants,

PRIVY COUNCIL.

Tuesday, at ten colock, the Privy Council re-assembled at the Cockpit, Whitehall. The several passoges leading to the Council Chamber were throughd with persons who were desirous of hearing the proceedings, but they were informed that strangers would not be admitted; even the Counsel and Solicitors were excluded. Be-sides the Lords of the Council, Mr. Buller, the Clerk, only was present. It soon afterwards became necessary to remove the strangers from the passages immediately configuous to the Cockpit, to enable the Members of the Privy Council to pass to the Chamber.

Amongst the Lords of the Council present me Countries.

Amongst the Lords of the Council present were—the Duko of York, the Archhishop of Cameebury, Lord Harrowby (President), the Marquis of Londonderry, the Earls of Liverpool, Laudenhaie, and Donoughmore, Lord Sidmouth, Sir H. Russeil, the Lord Chance flor, Sir T. Plumer (the Master of the Rolls), the Chief Justices of the King's Rangle and Common Pleas. Clinic Baran, Richards, the the King's Bench and Common Pleas, Chief Baron Richards, the Hon. F. Robinson, &c.

At a quarter past ten o'clock, the Council proceeded to the consi letation of the case. Mr. Builer was desired to take in the documentary evidence adduced by Mr. Brough on on behalf of the Queen; the Records brought from the Tower, the Liber Regulis, and seven ral other ancient volumes. The doors continued closed, and strangers were not allowed to remain in the adjoining rooms and

The Attorney and Solicitor-General, Mr. Brougham, Mr. Denman and Mr. Williams, were in attendance in anti-rooms, but they were not in their Barrister's costume.

It will be recollected, that the Alemorial was addressed "To the King's most excellent Ainjesty in Council assembled;" so that in the event of the Lords in Council coming to any decision, judgement could not be given till it had the apprehation of the King. Arrangements, however, were made to forward the result to His Majesty, for his sanction, immediately that any opinion was pronounced, in order that no unnecessary delay might take place in the promulgation of the decision

At eleven o'clock His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-Generals were called into the Privy Council; but Mr. Brougham still remained in the anti-room.

The King's Law Officers remained with the Council till about a parter past eleven. They then wichdrew.

The Privy Council continued its sitting till half-past claven, whenit adjourned. No communication was made, or could be made, for the reason previously stated, to the Queen's Law Agents, of any decision that had been come to; but it was understood that the Marquis of Londonderry and the Earl of Liverpool were to convey to His Majesty the Judgment of the Privy Council on the subject.

to be crowned; and as I find the Committee positively denies that right which I have claimed, and which all Queens Consort have enjoyed (without one exception arising from the will of the Sovereign), I consider it necessary to inform your Lordship, that it is my intention to be present at the Ceremony on the 19th, the day fixed for his Majesty's Coronation, and I therefore demand that a suitable place may be appointed for me.
(Signed)

" To the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Sidmouth."

Whiteball, July 13, 1821. MADAM,—I have laid before the King your Majesty's letter to me of the 11th of this month, in which it is stated that your Majesty. considers it necessary to inform me, that it is your Majesty's inten-tion to be present at the ceremony of the 19th, the day fixed for His Mujesty's Coronation, and you therefore demand that a suitable place may be appointed for your Majesty; and I am commanded by the King to refer your Majesty to the Earl of Liverpool's letter to your Majesty of the 7th of May last, and to acquaint your Ma-jesty that it is not His Majesty's pleasure to comply with the Letter alluded to in the foregoing:

Fife-House, 7th May, 1321.
Lord Liverpool has received the King's commands, in consequent of the last communication of the Queen to Lord Liverpool of the 5th inst. to inform the Queen, that his Majesty having determined that the Queen shall form no part of the ceremonial of his Coronation, it is therefore his Royal Pleasure, that the Queen shall not attend the said ceremony.

Brandeaburgh House, July 13, 1821, five elclock, P. M. My Lond—I have this instant received a letter, dated Whitehall, July 13th without any signature. I therefore consider it as anonymous, and shall treat it as such till I hear from your Lord-CAROLINE R.

To the Right Hon, Lord Viscount Sidmonth.

application contained in your Majesty's letter.

THE ROYAL TOUR .- In the arrangements, making for our gracious Monarch's reception on his intended visit to various parts of his dominions, a novel style of Chints Furniture has been selected at the New Chintz Furniture and Moreen warehouse, in preference to the Foreign Silks, which have hitherto been so much used in furnishing, to the great injury of British numufacturers. The immense variety of elegant designs and the entraordinary low Priors at which they are sold at this new establishment, cannot fail of securing to the proprietors, Miles and Edwards, the support of those families to whom a saving of one third in the furnishing of their houses, is a consideration,—No. 134, Oxford-street, meanly opposite. AN ANALYSIS of the TALENTS and CHARACTER of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. By a General Officer.

The talents and character of Bonaparte must be analysed to be understood. There is so much of the Great and of the Little, of the splendid and mean, of knowledge and ignorance, that no true idea can be formed from a general view; the various talents and traits of character must be viewed and examined separately, which is what is done in this Analysis. Bonaparte does not appear to have been the greatest of the French Generals nor Statesmen; but he united in himself a greater variety of talents than perhaps any man that ever existed, and these talents, exerted in troublesome times, with a perseverance, energy, and andacity, of which there is no example, led to the wonderful success of that axtraordinary man.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, July 15.

EVERY eye and every mind is naturally turned to the grand and important ceremony of next Thursday,—to that ceremony by which the King binds himself solemnly to his people. To speak-to write-to think of any thing else seems just now impossible.

The Queen's alleged claim to be crowned has been disallowed, which, considering that all precedents went to invalidate it, is not very surprising; but her conduct upon the occasion reminds us of a French shopkeeper, who demands forty francs for an article, and if refused on the just ground of exorbitancy, takes twenty sous.

The Queen makes a great splutter about being crowned, and when she is told that she has no right to participate in the Coronation, she sends to ask for a box to see it in.

The Queen (as the evidence of her own witnesses shews has been in a bex before. The difference of her present situation, from that in which she was as an automaton, consists in the time of winding up,—she was wound up then after she was in a box, now she must wind herself up before she gets into one.

Some people have edd tastes and vitiated fancies, and the Queen is proverbial for her tastes and fancies; but that she should wish to witness a ceremony, from which she has been excluded by her own misconduct, is wonderful.

She has been informed by Lord Sidmouth, that she will have no place assigned for her to view the procession, and as she asked for one only to be refused, we suppose she must be satisfied with the answer she has received.

The Times tells us that she means to go notwithstanding. This line of conduct, so indicative of delicacy of feeling and respect for the decencies of society, surely cannot be of her own choosing?-The amiable, interesting, and respectful Lady cannot of herself surely outrage the common order of things so far, as to thrust herself into the presence of her KING and HUSBAND, after the evidence taken on oath at the Bar of the House of Lords.

Let it be clearly understood, that the Queen was voted GUILTY by the highest tribunal in this country, and then let us, if possible, understand who advises, tolerates, or supports the line of conduct which the Old Times says the Queen means to adopt on Thursday.

Before we decide too hastily upon the necessity of preventing the intrusion of the Queen into the proceedings, let us enquire where she has been admitted since her return to England?—Has she dined with Earl Grey?—has she dined with Lady Jersey?—has she dined even with Lord Fitzwilliam?—No!—But then, perhaps, she never goes out ?-Oh, yes, she does, gentle reader.

She HAS dined with the Lord Mayer, and she has been to Astley's, and to the Cobourg, and to the Circus, and to Sadler's Well, and to Drury Lane, and to Covent Garden, (as Mrs. James,) and to many other places of public amusement; but with the exception of the BONASSUS, at the back of St. Clement's, we know of no living creatures who have admitted her into their houses, excepting always Alderman Wood, and Mr. Waithman, of Fleet-street; although, in justice to the linen-draper, we must add, that it was before her trial that he suffered her visit to him.

Why then should she be admitted to the Coronation? By what right, by what claim should she expect a favour or compliment from the hands of the King? No other female assists at the ceremony, and this may, to be sure, be considered a good reason why she might be suffered to mix in it; but why an exception should be made to a general rule in favour of such a princess, we cannot exactly imagine, more especially when we recollect that the only person from whom such a grace could emanate, is THE person most injured and most outraged by her con-

Let us imagine such a case in private life, and then add to the heartless, shameless, and disgusting effrontery. of a woman who should indecently thrust herself into the presence of her husband—the fact, that that husband is also her Monarch, and we shall very easily be enabled to appreciate the delicacy of the Queen's feelings, and the real ect of her supposed determination.

The business transacted in the fore part of the week was not to any great extent, owing principally to the number of bargains effected during the latter part of the week preceding, upon the news arriving from St. Helena; and towards Friday the attempts of a strong party to bring the Funds down, were defeated by the public making large purchases at the prices of 7644 for Money ex-Dividend, consequently a re-action took place, and Consols have been again looking upwards. Consols opened yesterday morning at 761 for Mency, and 771, 78 for the Account, and finally closed at 76% for Money, and 77% for the Account. The accounts from the Continent do not represent the securities to have received any material addition by the news of the death of Buonaparte. The Neapolitan securities scarcely experienced any rise, and the Parisian 5 per Cents. were on Wednesday at 85:40. There is a strong party in London, who act in concert with those at Paris, and whose desire appears to be to depress the securities of either country, as the same effect would be produced in the event of their efforts succeeding; however, the present tranquil state of things generally is much against this connivance.

HUMBUG.

AGRICULTURE.

NOTHING is more satisfactory to the lover of his country than to perceive the total absence of political feeling when real benefit is intended to society. In many of our charitable institutions, names, opposed every where else, are ranged side by side, and all the squahblings of party are forgotten in the general effort to do good; but of all the public meetings which we have noticed, it never fell to our lot to observe one so closely confining itself to its avowed object, and so completely steering clear of political discussion and agitation, as the Annual Holkham Sheep Shearing, which has just ended.

Among the company assembled to inspect the ploughs, and harrows, and chaff-cutters, and corn-winnowers, and drillrollers, were his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, Sir Francis Burdett, Mr. Benett, Lord Albemarle, Lord Erskine, Lord Nugent, &c. and other celebrated farmers and agriculd turists, whose names will occur presently.

After having viewed all the improvements, of which for the most part they are most competent judges, the party sat down to dinner; after which Mr. Coke made a speech, in which he said that "this meeting had originally been held for the benefit of agriculture." For what purposes it now is held, we leave our readers to guess; we shall only observe, that Mr. Coke gave "Constitution, and King," immediately followed by the health of "the Queen."

To this naturally enough succeeded the "Duke of Sussex," who told the company that he relied on the resources of the country to extricate it from its difficulties. Nothing could be more satisfactory than such an opinion coming from such very high authority. His Royal Highness then proposed the health of Mr. Coke, who, sticking close to the object of the meeting, complimented Mr. Hume on his "extraordinary" exertions in the House, which had laid bare the extravagance and patronage of Ministers, which, if continued, would pre-clude relief; censured Mr. Curwen for complimenting Lord Londonderry, and concluded his short lecture upon agriculture, by talking of forcing Ministers into further concession, and of returning independent Members to Parliament. Mr. Coke gave Mr. Honeywood, who returned thanks, and informed the company that gooseberries grow in Kent; which communication was received with great applause; and the Hon. Gentleman concluded by drinking the health of "The Plough."

Mr. Benett, of Wiltshire, returned thanks, his health having been drank; and Mr. Western pledged himself (probably with a view to fattening cattle) to move the repeal of the Malt Tax, as one of the burthens oppressive to the people. Mr. Coke gave Lord Albemarle, who "acknowledged the compliment with much humour.'

Mr. Coke then gave Lord Erskine, who, it may be remembered, some two or three years since, was agriculturist enough to mistake wheat for lavender. He, in adverting to husbandry, upon which he was very luminous, praised Mr. Hume, and proposed the health of Lord Crewe.

Sir Francis Burdett was next given-need we say with how much enthusiasm in such a party? The Honourable Baronet observed, that liberty and prosperity were always united. He then entered into a "glowing description" of the constitution and the Duke of Sussex, whom he described as "the ornament of his family." He furthermore remarked, that in order to obtain good crops and large cattle, taxes must be reduced—the expenses of the country—and, above all, the national debt! He hoped that a time was fast approaching when we should not despond, but that there was spirit and energy in the country to resist a tyrannical, and corrupt, and oppressive Government. Having expressed this hope in the presence of the ornament of the Royal Family, the brether of the King, he again eulogized his Royal Highness, and gave as a toast,

" Fine fleeces and fat careases."

Mr. Coke, confining himself to the subject, declared it was necessary to destroy the patronage of Ministers, and that the country were greatly indebted to Mr. Hume, whose health he drank, and who talked of Economy and Reform as usual. He said, "exposure was his taste," which he indulged in by exposing himself—and the health of " That most excellent man—the Bishop of Norwick," was drank.

The party then (pro forma) adjourned to the sheep-pens in the park—but not a single bidder was found for the sheep on sale! The second day's proceedings took the same turn. The

Duke of Bedford's health was drank, who was highly gratified, but not having a turn for public speaking, his Grace did not express his feelings so as to make them clearly understood; he was pleased to be metaphorical, and made a great goose of himself, as those who know him best can

The Marquis of Tavistock fellowed his noble sireequally grateful, and equally unintelligible; and then a Mr. Russell's health was drank, merely because (as he himself said) he "happened to have that name."

Lord Althorp's health was drank, as also that of Lord Nugent, who appeared in high health, and well worthy of a place in any cattle show in England. He talked of delusion and taxation-change of system, and economy.

Mr. Coke and Sir John Sinclair complimented each other for nearly half an hour. The health of Count Zamoryski was then drank, and then Mr. Owen, of Lanark, preached a very edifying sermon about Lanark, and threw out several hints for the guidance of Ministers, after which Captain Manby's health was drank.

We are not aware whether this is the Queen's friend, for whom the basin and towels were put in the passage, but as "Breeding in all its branches" was the succeeding teast, we should not be so much surprised if it were.

The illustrious ornament, the Duke of Sussex, was drank again, who returned thanks, and the company retired to the sheep-pens, but not a bidding was offered.

The next-day the same farce was carried on. Mr. Coke was more violent in his harangue;—talked of the fallacy of Ministers; -said that there was nothing but corruption in the House of Commons, and concluded by gratuitously declaring, that, during the whole of the American war, he every day drank the health of General Washington, as the greatest man mpon earth.

Upon this avowal—its decency—its good taste, or its policy, we make no remark, but leave it bare and plain to the consideration of Mr. Coke's present constituents, who, should he favour them with a few more explicit declarations of a similar nature, may probably be inclined to relieve him from the painful necessity of quitting his farm and associating with corruption at Westminster.

Sir Francis Burdett was again drank, and made exactly the same speech as he made the day before, varying it only in one instance, by observing, that he was anxious that the King should be the greatest and most beloved in the world.

And so the proceedings went on. Now in our career of detecting and exposing Humbuo, we will ask our readers, how much this anniversary has to do with agriculture, and how much with politics? Are people to be found who will believe that the Duke of Sussex would travel to Norfolk to look at fat beasts, or Mr. Joseph Hume leave his trade of "cutting up" Ministers to inspect wethers and ewes? We really think not. Whatever the institution might originally have been, as Mr. Coke says, we must beg to be very sceptical as to the advantages arising from a congregation of ignorant country farmers and gentlemen, drawn together once a year to hear the harangues of such men as those who honoured Holkham with their presence. Always observing, that as the real object of the meeting gains ground, the ostensible one falls back, and that fine as the political speeches were, not a bidder could be found for a sheep!

THEATRES.

THE CORONATION continues to attract overflowing houses at Covent Garden, and appears likely to do so for a great length of time.

At the Haymarket, no novelty has appeared, and those excellent, but most arduous plays to act,—The School for Scandal, The Rivals, The Provoked Husband, and Rule a Wife and Have a Wife, have been performed, on purpose, it should seem, most distinctly to show the weakness of the company.

We are surprised that Mr. Terry, to whom, as Manager, the arrangement of the performances naturally belongs, should, with his good taste, and general tact, adopt so strange a mode of proceeding. If, instead of these heavy plays, we were to have three of the light pieces peculiar to this Theatre, in the course of the evening, we should at all events have the scene varied, and the present dull monotony of wretched acting, divided into different styles. We confess, neither The Spoiled Child, nor The Village Lawyer, nor Bombastes Furioso, (which, without Listen, is like a bowl of punch without sugar, fruit, or spirit), are exactly of the class to which we allude; nor can we, with the present company, precisely oint out what could be made attractive:—for this we grieve. The Haymarket has always been the popular merry Theatre, and it is a sorry sight, to see that the tragic actors of this season alone provoke the laugh, which the comic ones completely fail to excite.

We would necessary to him to the appropriate that the

We would venture to hint to the proprietors, that they might, with great advantage, engage, under any restrictions or limitations, a few favourites from the winter theatres, and without very much ceremony, pack off their new recruits to the country by the same stage coaches which brought them to London.

The Queen, after having hawked herself about to all the other minor theatres, went on Tuesday, to see Elliston's Company perform at Drury Lane; and, as if her measure of mor-tification were not yet full, and as if it required still stronger proofs than those she has yet received, to shew that vice must not hope for support in this country,— the audience on this occasion, consisted, in the boxes—the whole of the boxes—of less than one hundred and fifty persons, of which we counted eighty-three in the entire lower circle.

The Old Times talks of her reception with triumph; and asserts, that nobody hissed her, except four or five pawn-brokers' clerks: but though the Old Times were to pledge itself to the truth of the assertion, we should be obliged to refute it. We state, that, with the exception of a few noisy persons in the one-shilling gallery, whose voices echoed through the empty building, the only symptoms of applause shewed themselves in the pit, where a coterie of her Majesty's acknowledged friends were placed; and we do not exaggerate, when we declare, that the uproar was so considerable, that the Queen having curtsied obedience to the redoubling cries of "Out," "Out," and the overwhelming hisses, left the Theatre, much as she is reported to have done that of San Carlos, at Naples.

Men's ears adapt themselves to circumstances; and we will admit, that to a sanguine partisan like the Old Times, applause might seem to predominate; and, in truth, when one is making a calculation as to the relative strength of different sounds, it can be little more than a matter of assertion and opinion; but there is evidence of the real popularity of the Queen, which neither the Old Times nor the Chronicle can over-

Let it be remembered that the Queen's name flourished at the head of the Drury-Lane play-bills for two days; notifica-tions were given through all her papers, that she was to visit that theatre, not as Mrs. James, but as the Queen of England, then and there to shew her adored person to the people; and the result of all the puffing was, that there was collected together almost the worst and smallest audience of a very bad season, to welcome and greet her appearance in public.

This is a fact which no argument, no sophistry, can do away. From amongst the belles and beaux of Carolinestreet, Blackfriars Road, Stangate, and the Cobourg Theatre, the Queen may collect persons quite capable of admiring het beauty and justifying her conduct; but, as the fatal ex posure of Tuesday night evinces, respectability, morality, and decency turn from the sight of her with disgust, and shrink from the contact with abhorrence.

We have now a word or two for Mr. Elliston and his actors. There have been many efforts made by the galleries to substitute the name of Queen for that of His MAJESTY, in the national anthem, which efforts have been indignantly repelled by the audience, and never has it actually been substituted for that of the King, by public performers, till Tuesday even-

It should be distinctly understood by those to whom the performers in Mr. Elliston's company on the stage paraaltered the song of our phrased "God save the King,"country, and introduced the name of that Lady, whose examplary conduct in sleeping under a tent with her footman for six weeks, has entitled her to the prayers and praises of the actors and actresses of Drury-Lane Theatre.

We have a much greater respect for actresses than many of our neighbours, and the high character and exemplary conduct of such persons as Ladies Derby, Craven, and Thurlow bear us out in our vindication of the female members of the profession, from that general and sweeping speer with which some people choose to speak of them; it is therefore painful to us to point out the zeal and energy of a Miss Cubitt of Drury-Lane, who, on Tuesday, most vehemently ejaculated the name of Carolina-Columbina at the end of the verses of "God save the King," accompanied by the most extravagant expressions of devotion and rapture.

We hope, and can readily believe, that Miss Cubitt is a very silly body; but she should be taught not to forget her station and duty, by insulting the decent and moral part of her own sex by such monkey tricks. We gladly give her credit for ignorance, because we are unwilling to suppose that any female of common decency, if she were blessed with common sense, would volunteer publicly to express her admiration of such a woman as Carolina-Columbina, particularly standing in the ticklish situation of an unmarried pub-

Our Theatrical readers may be amused by seeing what a letter from America says about Mr. Kean. It seems, Mr. nean has taken his departure from Boston in quite a different temper from what he did a few weeks since, when he pronounced it the "literary emporium of the western world." farewell address to the people of Baltimore, a short time since, Mr. Kean very modestly told the audience, in substance, that, since the days of Cooke, we have never had among us (himself excepted, of course,) any one capable of exhibiting the beauties of Shakspeare. We cannot, therefore, but sympathise with the Bostonians for the loss they have experienced on this occasion. Not being able to discover the beauties of the immortal bard of Avon without looking through Mr. Kean's spectacles, or to relish his excellencies without Mr. Kean's dressing, they may now pack off their volumes of Shakspeare to the auction room.

"Mr. Kenn, the great tragedian, was to have personated the character of Richard the Third, last evening, at the Federal-street Theatre. At the usual time of raising the curtain, a very respectable, though not a crowded auditory and assembled. After waiting till nearly eight o'cleck, considerable uneasiness was displayed by the audience, and loud calls for the manager were heard from seventhement, the district of the manager were heard from seventhement, the district of the manager were heard from seventhement, the manager were heard from seventhement, the manager were heard from seventhement. ral parts of the house. Mr. Duff immediately came forward, and stated, that it was with extreme regret he was obliged to say that Mr Kean had positively refused to appear again on the Boston boards! This information was certainly disagreeable, and an awful silence pervaded the house for the space of two minutes, Mr. Duff requested the indulgence of the audience, and the play was permitted to proceed, Mr. Brown performing the part of Richard. Mr. Kean has been treated in Boston as well as he could reasonably expect to been treated in Boston as well as he could reasonably expect to have been treated; and if he had checked his passion 'one little week'longer, he would not only have fulfilled his private contract, and made one or two thousand dollars, but retired from our stage respected. But now he is universally despised. He left town this fore-boom, privately, for New York, as we suppose, where we hope he will receive such treatment as his impudence entitles him to."

"P.S. We understand," says the Boston Daily Advertiser, "that Mr. Kean, who was announced for the part of Richard the Third last evening, declined playing an account of the thinges of Third last evening, declined playing on account of the thinness of the bouse."

We subjoin a couple of paragraphs from the Boston Papers The following is from The Centinel of Saturday :-

"GRATITUDE!—After a very respectable audience, more numerous than some of those which the truly great Cooke played before, had assembled at the Theatre, to see Richard the Third, Mr. Kean took it in his head that the audience was unworthy of his erit, bolted from the Theatre, announcing to the Manager that he should play no more, and that he was preparing to leave town. The audience received this specimen of rude superciliousness with marked contempt. The play proceeded without interruption, Mr. Brown amply supplying the place of the ranaway."

The following is from The Boston Patriot, same date: "THE THEATRE.—A few minutes before eight o'clock last even-ing, Mr. Duff appeared on the stage, and unnounced to the audience that Mr. Kean had refused to take the part cust him (Richard III.) without assigning any reason for so doing, and that he was then preparing to leave town. On the rising of the curtain, there being some slight disturbance, and a call for the Manager, Mr. Duff again appeared, and stated that Mr. Kean had been during the day repeatedly importuned by the Munager, and his friends, to appear in the part, but that he absolutely declined. Mr. D. on being questioned, said he believed the reason of Mr. K's. conduct was want of patronage."

Mr. Kean has since sent the following public apology, addressed to the Editor of the National Advocate.

SIR—As I have yet some months to remain in this country, it is my earnest wish to preserve the good opinion of those friends who have so generously and nobly manifested their approbation of my character and talents. As the servant of the public, I am aware that I am amenable to public opinion and censure; and if the public voice declare that I have been in error, I am ready to apologise with all due submission. But, Sir, is it not extraordinary that the with all due submission. But, Sit, is a not extending in accine offence with which I am charged took place at Boston, with the concurrence of the managers; with the approbation of friends, with whom I afterwards spent the evening, gentlemen of fortune and literary acquirement; and that I should not hear any dissatisfaction expressed until I arrived in this city? I passed the following morning at Boston tranquilly; and on my arrival at New York, murmurs of disapprobation were heard, which appeared to me like an overwhelming avalanche at the termination of a brilliant

At an immoderate expense, and with all that additional cost which falls to the lot of a stranger, I repaired to Boston to fulfil my engagements. Had I been acquainted with the customs of the country. I should have made different arrangements; but my advisers never intimated to me that theatres were only visited in tain months of the year; that when curiosity had subsided, dramatic talent was not in estimation. I never could or would believe that the arts in this country were only encouraged periodically, or that there could be any season in which Shakespeare was diminished in value; but as I am now initiated in these mysteries, I shall hereafter profit by my experience.

Sir, I live by my professional exertions. Inaumerable family claims are satisfied by each month's disbursements; I cannot afduty of licencing theatres is confided, (for where the patent of Drury-Lane Theatre is, we believe, nobody knows,) that the my coloris and, two months before, contributed largely to augment the public charities. I repent, I and acted two characters to the very extent of my abilities without profit. On looking through the curain, at seven o'clock, on the night I was to represent Richard the Third (that character which has been the foundation of my force and force of the hearter. and fortune) I counted twenty persons in the front of the theatre. I then decided, hastily, if you please, that it was better to husband my resources for a more favourable senson, and in this decision no disrespect was contemplated to the andience, slender as it was The managers apparently concurred with me, deplored the unfortunate state of the times, and we parted in perfect harmony and

It was my intention to leave America on the close of my southern engagements. I now think it my duty to return again to Boston, and, in person, vindicate my cause at the senson when those who most patronise the Theatres are assembled. The public have treated me with the greatest liberality, and I shall ever acknowledge its favours with pride and gratitude. At the latest hour I shall remember 1. ber those friends by whom I have been encircled, and whose amity and confidence I am convinced I have not forfeited. But I may be permitted to say, that the present hostility is not the voice of the public; it is that spirit of detraction ever attendant on little minds a spirit which watches for its pray, and seizes upon transient and accidental occurrences to defame and destroy. That respectable presses in this country should have been influenced by such feelings, and denounce with such norimony and bitterness, is to me extraordinary. "There i could find it out." "There is something in it more than natural, if philosophy

I understand some Gentlemen have asserted that I have acted to equally had houses in England. I lament that they are driven to such extremities, or, rather, that they should compel me to declare that their assertions are untrue. The present existence of the first Theatre in Europe is founded on the abilities which they affect to despise. The provincial Managers of England, Scotland, and Ireland, have thankfully rewarded my efforts by sums equal to what I receive from my friend Mr. Price, the worthy and efficient Manager of the Theatre in this city. For the first three years of a career unprecedented in dramatic annals, I was in receipt of double that sum in every theatre in which I acted, and, even allowing a trifling diminution in the space of even years, what am I to think of a city in which I have been received with equal enthusiasm, and witness a total desertion in the space of three months? But the public say I was too precipitate,—that I should have performed that evening, and then closed my engagement. Granted. Our feelings frequently mar our better judgments, and from trifling causes lead to results which we subsequently regret. The error was venial, for who is exempt from error? But all unprejudiced people will, I trust, take into consideration the unprofitable labour of acting Richard the Third to a solitary few, who felt themselves perfectly contented with the Gentleman who represented the character.

I am now convinced that the fine weather was my chief enemy, and shall again resume my station in the Boston Theatre before I return to England.

I beg leave, Sir, to submit this " round unvarnished tale" to the consideration and decision of the public; and I have too exalted an opinion of their justice and liberality, not to anticiente a verdict in my favour.

EDMUND KEAN.

We must confess that we never have heard any thing more indicative of the improving taste of the Americans than their indifference to the quackery and vulgarity of Mr. Kear, who most assuredly stands first upon the Hambug list of the theatrical world.

TO JOHN BULL.

DEAR JOHN,-Never did I wish for anybody's company more than I did yours on Tuesday night. Strolling past Old Drury, about eight o'clock, I saw three or four ragged rogues poisoning the air with their breath, and disturbing respectable people with the noise of "Queen, Queen," when, lo and behold! I found she was at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane. Up marched I to the box-door, "Any room, Sir ?" "Plenty of room, Sir," says the box-keeper, and adding rather signifi-cantly—" the Queen's here, Sir." Well, Sir, up I got, and for some time was doubtful whether she was really there; however, when I looked at the dress circle, I was sure; for-woo, bounto the Times! and let him blush to hear it - there was not at the utmost twenty-five ladies-or I'll say more, not twenty-five females in the dress circle, and they hung down their heads as if ashamed of themselves for being there. At the end of the Play, a voice from above cries out "Queen, Queen," and upon this she came forth; I must tell you I had not seen her before, whether she was afraid or ashamed, I cannot tell. However, she then came forth, and her reception was such, that she immediately retired, and never showed her face again that night; and, I dare say, never will honour that place with her presence.

P. S. You will see I am not used to write upon these subjects, therefore, do as you like with me, R. E.

ADVERTISEMENT.] - Madame Catalani's First Rehearsal at the Argyll Rooms.—After having delighted all Europe, Madame Catalani appeared (after an absence of seven years) before a select audience, composed of many of the nobility, and principal professors in the country, to rehearse the songs to be sung at her Concert on Monday night. It is impossible to express the enthusiastic admiration with which she was greeted; her voice is much more beautiful, strong, and round, and in singing Rode's Violin Variations, an indescribable effect was produced on the audience by this extraor-dinary exercise of the human voice, shewing at once her rapidity, strength, and sweetness—it must be heard to be conceived. Madame Catalani looks remarkably well, and appeared highly gratified at seeing herself once again before an audience by whom she has been so long considered the greatest favourite.

On Thursday night, about half past eight o'clock, a fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Clark, an upholsterer, on Clerkenwellgreen, which, in a short time, entirely consumed the same, together with an adjoining house, and greatly damaged several houses at

On Tuesday the horse in the Norwich mail cart took fright, and ran from the yard of Mr. Sadler in Goswell-street, through St. Martin's le-Grand, knocking down and running over several persous on its way who endeavoured to stop it. At the corner of Gld Change, Cheapside, the wheel caught one of the iron posts with such excessive violence, that it flew off and dashed against a men who was very near, and who was knocked insensible to the ground, the blood gushed from the head in a dreadful manner. The atfrighted animal was not yet stopped in its progress, and it rou ca with redoubled fury, from the noise proceeding from the shock of the above circumstance; two men endeavoured to stop it, but one of them was knocked down, and the vehicle passed over his body, he was also dreadfully injured. The horse then ran on as far as Bow Church, where it was stopped by a boy, who caught hold of the reins. The two unfortunate wen who were knocked down were carried to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.—One of them, named James Canbury, a journeyman plaisterer, died on Wednesday. —The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

The death of Buomaparte is officially aumoniced in them. The following are the terms in which this news is given."—The accounts published in London are then subjoined, and not a word of remark is added. The intelli-pence does not appear from these Papers to have laid any femarkable effect on the French Funds.

In the Charder of Deputies the event was alkaled to in a way which is variously reported. The following is one of the versions:

— M. Buplessis Grenedan mounted the tribune. The orator proposed an impunion valuous of managements, the attention was opened an immense volume of manuscripts; the attention was already damped. His voice was so weak that he could scarce be heard. He began, before speaking of the Consurcially, by preneard. The began, here's speaking of the Usurper, and of his most zerious servants. 'But,'added he, 'the Usurper is dead; let us speak of him no more'—(Interruption from the centre.)—Then turning himself towards the left side, he exclaimed, 'Cry now, if you please, Five l'Empereur!' At this moment all the Members on both sides quitted their places, the Ministers retired; and the Spenker descended from the tribune without having pronounced the fourth of his discourse."—(Gazette de France.)

The French Papers state, that on the day on which the news of Buonaparte's death reached Paris, a person having met General Repp, said to him, "Well, General, your man is dead at last," "What man?" inquired the latter. The important affair of the Conspiracy of the East, the trial of which occupied the Court of Assizes of Puy-de-Dome, sitting at Rome, fifteen days, was brought to a conclusion on the 4th of After deliberating an hour and a half, the Jary unanimously acquitted the prisoners of all the charges alleged against them and they were immediately set at liberty.

The debates on the projet of haw for continuing the censorship of the Press closed on Monday. An amendment was proposed and carried, the object of which is to limit the duration of the censorship to three months after the next session of the Chamber. It was also agreed, that the restriction, whilst it lasted, should extend to Journals not avowedly political. The Chamber then divided on the question of the whole law, which was passed by a majority of 102, the numbers being 214 to 112.

FRANKFORT, JULY 5 .- Accounts from Odessa, of the 11th of June, say, that since the 9th fourteen vessels had arrived with fugitives from Constantinople, which brought the melancholy information that the killing and imprisonment of the Greeks still continued. The fears entertained by the owners of the cargoes of corn, which have been detained at Constantinople, have proved unfounded, the Turks have paid for the corn at the rate of ten pastres per kislo; so that the excivert, which costs at Olessa 22 roubles, has been sold at 38 roubles.

MADRID, JUNE 21.—It is said that the Government has received information that a conspiracy of a very serious nature has been dis-covered in Andalusia, at the head of which were General Grimnrest and Brigadier-General Isidore Mir. It is affirmed that the Authorities received notice of it only a few moments before it was to be carried into execution, and that many important arrests have taken place in Seville, Cordova, and Cadiz; and that proceedings will be instituted with all speed against the factious, to award them the punishment which they merit.

Letters have been received at Corunna which confirm the new of the removal of Pezuela, Viceroy of Peru, and of the appointment of General Lazerna. These letters add, that the inhabitants of Lima welcomed this change with extreme enthusiasm. They say that the new Viceroy resolved to take advantage of the favourable disposition of the people, and of the troops, and immediately marched from Lima with 8000 men against St. Martin, whom he completely defeated, with the loss of 1800 men killed, wounded, and prisoners. The same letters state that Lord Cochrane attempted to surprise Lima, but that he was repulsed by our forces, and that it was said that the adventurer had been wounded in the combat.

Madrid, June 26 .-- Accounts from Seville of the 19th give details of the conspiracy discovered in the province of Andalt General Don Pedro Grimarest, as it seems, was to place himself at the head of the conspiracy, together with Brigadier-General Mr, with the titles of First and Second Commanders of the Army of the Faith. Their meeting was held at the abode of General Geimarest, who furnished the money, but, as it seems, very sparingly, for the necessary expenses. The plan was most absurd: they were to seize the horses of a depot of a regiment near the town of Bornos, to release the innocent prisoners confined at Xeres; which respectable force was to serve as the nucleus, for that which they fancied they could

The Insurgent Zaldivar engaged to reinforce this great army with a body of partisans, and former companions of his at the time when he commanded a party of Guerillas in the French war. Disreported to-day, (the 26th) at Madrid, that there has been a terrible commotion at Valencia. To prevent all error, we think it our duty to say, that we have before us a Proclamation of the Captain-General of that Province, in which he states, that some malicious persons taking advantage of the night, discharged a petrod which had some persons to kaliana that cannon had been petard, which led some persons to believe that cannon had been fired from the citadel, and that General Elio was going to be set at liberty. Hence a great agitation naturally ensued, which, however, was happily calmed by the prudence and firmness of the Political Chief, and the other Authorities.

NEW YORK. - Robbery of Mr. Kean. - Mr. Kean, on his arrival here from Boston, on the 29th of May last, discovered that his trunk or case, which contained all his valuable papers, and a considerade sum of money, had been stolen. Among the papers were some receipts, signed by Le Roy, Bayard, and Co. Mr. Kean's engagements with several Managers, and numerous letters, two Bank notes of one hundred dollars each, and a quantity of specie in English gold. The case (somewhat resembling a leather trunk) left in the place of that of Mr. Kean's, and which is now in his pos-session, was filled with stones, an old pair of pantaloons, and a vest. MAY 15 .- The gigantic projects that occupy the attention of our countrymen, are truly surprising. A plan is now forming, for example, to establish a settlement at the mouth of the River Columbia, for the purpose of importing teas direct from the East Indies. It is then proposed to transport this article of merchandize up the Columbia, until it reaches the rocky mountains, and then to proceed by land to the navigable branch of the Missouri. This embraces a space of 340 miles in extent. Of this distance 200 miles are represented by travellers as constituting an excellent road: the remaining 140, comprehend the mountain barrier, which must be passed by the intrepidity will then, by the aid of the Missouri and its subsidiary streams supply the whole western continent with the refreshing beverage.

ST. GEORGE'S (BERMUDA), APRIL 25 .- The details of the pro ceedings of the House of Assembly have not transpired, but it is rumoured that several excellent Resolves of a Committee of the whole House have been framed, with a Memorial to the King, praying His Majesty to remove his Excellency from the Government of this Colony. Copies both of the Resolves and the Memorial, we are informed, have been submitted to his Excellency.

in Pall Mall, on Friday, the 27th instant,

Lord Stewart, the Brillsh Ambassador at Vienne, and his Lady, have arrived in town, to be present at the Coronation.

The Duke of Cambridgs, accompanied by Colonels Reynert and Prott, landed on Taesday afternoon at Dover, under a Royal Salute, and arrived in town on Wednesday. His Royal Highness left the Duchess and Prince quite well. He alighted at the Patnee of the King, in Pall-mall, to pay his affectionate respects to his beloved brother, and remained with his Majesty about two hours, and then proceeded to his Royal Highness's temporary residence during his stay in England, at the King's Palace, Pimlico, where he was received by the Princess Augusta. Their Royal Highnesses soon after proceeded to the King's Palace at Kensington, on a visit to the Duchess of Kent, and dined with her Royal Highness, and were there met by their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Clarence, and a select party of private friends.

On Thursday, at twelve o'clock, the Duke of Wellington, Viscount Palmerston, Sir Charles Long, Mr. Huskisson, and other official Gentlemen, assembled at the Chancellor of the Exchequer's bouse. The object, we understood to be to make arrangements for the reduction of the expenses of their different departments.

A Privy Council was held yesterday, which sat till four o'clock, at which the Dukes of York and Chrence were present.

The Coronation.—The following notice has been issued from the Lord Chamberlain's Office:—The Knights Communders of the Order of the Bath will receive their Manties, Hats, Spurs, Swords, and Belts, at this Office, on Monday next, between the hours of twelve and three, upon payment of the Fees, and the production of their respective Letters of Summons to attend His Majesty's Coronation.

A magnificent fête in honour of the coronation is to be given at Carlton Pulace; the preparations are upon a most extensive scale, and it is the wish of His Majesty that it shall exceed in splendour the entertainment given to the Sovereigns after the pence.

The Dukes of Aquitaine and Normandy, who were accustomed to walk, by their representatives, in the procession to Westminster Abbey, will not appear on Thursday.

His Grace the Archibishop of Canterbury has waived his cxclusive right of passing over Westminster Bridge on the day of the Coronation; the bridge will consequently be entirely closed on Thursday.

The dress of his Highness Prince Esterhazy, in which he will ap-pear at the Coronation is said to be the most splendid ever seen in this country.

The Lord Great Chamberlain has signified his intention to open Westminster Hall to the inspection of the public generally, and without tickets, the day but one after the Coronation, and for several days subsequently. The first day after the Coronation will be devoted to those who have written for tickets, and to whom unswers bave not been sent. His Lordship will take care that the appearance of the Hall shall be preserved in the same state as during the Royal Basquet. This liberal arrangement will, no doubt, produce general satisfaction. .

Lord Culthorpe has been appointed to carry the Gold Spurs at the Coronation, and the Earl of Abergavenny will execute by deputy the office of his Majesty's Chief Larderer. The Manquis of Exeter will execute the office of Lord High Almoner.

The company who will sit down to dinner in the Hall will consist of 204 Peers and Bishops; 36 Privy Councillors; 28 Knights (first class) Grand Crosses, attached to the Military Order of the Bath; and 86 Knights Commanders (second class). The whole number will be 354. Each of these will have his own attendant with him at table, such attendant to be habited in a scarlet frock coat, with a garter blue sush round the waist, &c. according to The Gazette Order.

It has been determined by the Lords of the Council, that each who has signified his intention to be present shall receive five Tickets; Privy Councillors, not Peers, four Tickets; Knights of the Grand Cross, three Tickets; Knights Commanders of the Buth, two Tickets; and Clerks in Council, two Tickets.

On Friday instructions were sent from the Secretary of State's office, appointing the station of each Magistrate on the day of the Coronation. All the public offices are to be shut up, and illustrated in the public offices are t minated at night.

The Duke of Weilington is to be honoured as Gold Stick, and Sir R. Hill as Silver Stick, on the Coronation-day.

In the year 1307, King Edward II. issued an order, duted at Clipston, on the 25th of September, to the Seneschal of Gascony, and Constable of Bourdeaux, to provide a thousand pipes of good wine, and send them to London, there to be delivered to the King's butler before Christmas, to be used at the approaching Coronation. The purchase and freight of the wine was to be paid for out of the cony, by a company of farmed those revenues.

First Junuary, 1308, the same King issued an order to the Sheriff Wiltshire, (and probably to all other Sheriffs in proportion), to bdy and provide out of the revenues of the sherifidom 24 live oxen, 24 live porkers, 25 live brawns, and 24 fat bacons, to be delivered at Westminster to those who should be appointed to receive the

THE CHAMPION.—Thursday afternoon, Mr. Dymoke, tried on the THE CHAMPION.—Thursday afternoon. Mr. Dymoke, tried on the suit of armour in which he is to appear before the King in Westminster Hall. It might be termed a dressed rehearsal; and Astley's Amphitheatre had to boast of a select few of the nobility and gentry who were admitted upon this occasion to witness the per-firmance. The suit of armour is composed of burnished steel, and originally belonged to the proprietor of the Gothic-hall, in Pallmall. The horse on which the Champion is to ride on the day of the Corona tion is quite familiar to the public eye. It is a handsome, strong, black and white Hanoverian borse, of the name of Cato, at old stager, and long accustomed to the glare of lamps, the sound of trumpets, &c. The Champion is a fine young man, about five feet ten inches in height. The armous sweighs upwards of 70lb. The Champion, on being dressed, mounted his charger with very little assistance, and immediately role across the stage, bowing to the ladies; be then backed his charger with considerable case and faand as a proof of the steadiness of Old Cate, on one of his fect accidentally touching one of the side scenes, which fell down he remained perfectly quiet. The Champion was without his helmet and plume of feathers; these faster articles not being quite At the request of several of the ladies, the Champion, in the most gallant manner, appeared in the ride, and trotted round it several times. Mr. Dymoko retired for a short period, and then returned in the old suit of armour, in which he had been daily re hearsing, to gratify the nobility and gentry. Lady Caroline Lamb afterwards vole the horse of the Champion across the stage, and delighted her friends with the ease, elegance, and agility she displayed in backing the spirited animal.

LADY MORGAN'S ITALY.—This work seems like'y to excit much controversy. A contemporary journal, observes, that since the rational of the old governments, and the new arrangem interfactors and people which marked the return of peace, a v st a u't tide of travellers in Italy have poured forth the contents of their journals upon the public, and we have had abundant specimens of m re categories of Italian tourists, than the fertile imagination of Sterne could invent. But, though a few bave culled such macdoles of recent times, as were publici juris upon the Continent, the great majority have treated Italy as if it had been a blat in the creation since the times of the Casars and the Catos; or, at best, have viewed it only as a picture gallery or a statue room; while have offered either general or comprehensive views of the political and social contingencies which produced a Danie, a Galico, a Machinel, or of those more recent revolutions which have even more extensively affected the interests of humanity. The deficiencies of such travellers, Lady Morgan has to a great degree supplied. Leavsuch traveliers, Lang surgran has to a general egree supplied. Leaving as he much of those dry details, which are abundantly supplied by guide books, catalogues, and works of professional criticism, our author has taken a master's view (if the term be applicable to a female) of the whole series of events which have led from the downfall of the Cæsars to short epochs of liberty, prosperity and light, to and to the consts to short epocas of incree, prospertly and ngm, we a fifful dream of plunder, bloodshed, and unavailing contention, and to that state of "grim repose" in which despotism, civil and religious, had for ages plunged the fairest portion of Europe. Lady M.'s work is not therefore a classical tour, nor a picture-sque tour; but it contains a rich harvest of "middle age" nucclote, abounding with such traits of the domestic, social, and notifical life of the great with such traits of the domestic, social, and political life of the great republics of Italy, as cannot ful of exciting an intense interest in all who sympathize with their species. The gravity and massiveness of the subject have not however prevented the author from including largely in those humourous and striking details of real life, which form the charm of her more recent novels. Her views of society, have been more intimate than those of any other recent traveller. Her literary reputation has opened wide the door of continental hospitality to her; and communications have been made to the author of ' France' that would have been, perhaps, difficultly obtained by persons, less known, or of principles less avowedly favourable to civil liberty and national independence. This circumstance has given avowedly favourable tothe same sort of interest and originality to her narration, which made the reputation of her work on France, and distinguishes it from all other books on that Country.

I RLING'Z LACE (of the real Point and Brusseis tabric), 174, Strand, near Somerset House, removed from 393, Strand,—G. F. URLING and CO. beg to inform the Pashiomatide World, they have prepared for the Season a various and extensive Assortment of their PATENT LACE DRESSES, from Four Conneas to 100 Gaineas cach; some of which, from recent improvments, they husably presume to compare with the most perfect foreign productions. Also a great variety of Veils, Scarfa, Squares, Laces, Nets, &c. of every description. This possibility clear and transparent Article having, in the higher circles, superseled the use of common Lace, which becomes rugh and full of three on the first washing, the Patentees respectfully apprise the Public, that the latter is trequently starched to conceal its defects, and make it resemble Urling's Lace, which therefore, can only be relied agon as genuine at their Whole alse and Retail Establishment in Lendom, or of the Country Dealers sumplied by them.—Every Article is distinguished by a Seai, with the Patentee's Initials, "G. F. U. and Co." and the words, "by the date Queen's authority Specimens, showing the superiority of Ucline's Lace over common Lace, may be seen in Ackermann's Sepository, La Belle Assembles, a riotice rashionande works, and may be had ratifs, by applications, post-spail, to G. DALDYESS or GREY HAIRS will not be seen, although there are Articles daily brought out for the Hale, and pulsed in the Newspapers, with proteine of Queens. Emperors, &c. having given their leave to it, which is a folly, as persons of consequence do not the to have their names, published in Newspapers or Hand-bills when they bay a bottle of Oil. If the Proprietor of the following Article were to publish, it cross of distinction who make use of his Oil, it would fill a volume. In short, Thousands of Ladies and Gentlemen have a good Head of Hair, withough being the least shaded or Grey, by using Pilace's celebrated Russia Oil only. But some Ladies being persualed by their Hair-dressers to use other Oils, or sold them counterfeit Russia Oil, they soon found the difference, as their Hair league to fail of, becoming shaded or getting Grey. In short, Prince's Russia Oil is the best Oil for dressing, preserving, and promoting the growth of their, and begun to turn grey, it is such a nonvisher, that by use it will restore it to its natural colour, which several Ladies of distinction have experienced; clears the Scarf, and keeps the Head and Hair clean, and by using it regularly for a few months, will restore the Hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, which has been proved by hundreds. But to produce the desired effect, it must be used regularly.

Ladies will find Prince's Russia Oil preferable to any other Oil for dressing their own, or false Hair, as it gives it a natural gloss, softens and curls it. Gentlemen wearing powder ought to use it instead of pomatum – promote evel-prows, whiskers, &c., The Original Proprietor has now so improved the Russia Oil that it will always be sweet and pleasant, and will keep in all climates; and good allowance to Merciants and Captains for exportation.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil, at 4s, the small bettle; or a bottle, containing the quantity of nearly five small onc propose.

**Exp Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as there are several Hair-dressers and others in town and country who seil counterfeits, and say they are genuine. As there has been so much imposition of late, and counterfeit Russia Oil sold in almost every street; and impostors have made the covers of the counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the neunine, and even builtated the Original Proprietor's Name, therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of a respectable Perfumer or Medicine Vender. As several Isadies and Gentlemen in the country have complained that they have been taken in by unprincipled persons selling them counterfeit Russia Oil, therefore Ladies and Gentlemen will be sure to have the genuine by euclosing the money in a letter for the Russia Oil, &c. directed to Mr. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London, when Mr. P. will send them by return of coach to any part of the kingdom.

THE only Article that REALLY PREVENTS the HAIR PALLING OFF, or TURNING GREY, produces a luxuriant Growth on the baldest places, and heautiful flowing Curls, is ROWLAND's MACASSAR OIL,
The Original and Genuine, which for many years has been universally admired, and is acknowledged the best and cheapest article for producing a beautiful Head of Hair, and produces WHISKERS, EVE.BROWS. &c. Its pre-endient virtues have gained it the patronage of Royalty and the Nobility, and is attested by an immense multitude of witnesses. Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.: 19s. 6d.; and One Guinea per Rottle.

Also, ROWLAND's ESSENCE OF TYRE.—By merely wetting the Hair with this Preparation, the Proprietors warrant to produce immediately a perfect charge in RED or GREY HAIR, WHISKERS, EYE-BROWS, &c. to a heautiful ghossy and permanent Brown or Black, imitating the exact natural colour. Washing makes this Dye the more durable. Ladies or Gentlemen may dye their Hair with ease and secresy. Price 4s.: 7s. 6d.; and 10s 6d.

LUNDUN MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, FRIDAY, JULY 13. We have been very moderately supplied with Wheat since Monday, and fine samples command a rendy sale on fall as good -Burley, from the shortness of the arrival, is from Is. to 2s. per quarter dearer; and Beans and Pease are steady in value. Though we have had a fair supply of Oats this week, the sales were somewhat brisker this morning, and Monday's prices fully supported.— In other acticles there is no alteration to notice.

COMMERCIAL REPORT.

FROM JULY 9 TO JULY 14, INCLUSIVE.

The market for Colonial produce still continues to be gove by much heaviness, and as the stocks are fast accumulating, the present prices must be considered untenable—the immense s which the Continent is receiving direct from the Bust and West Indies and the Brazils, is sensibly experienced by the dimination of Exports.—Owing to the superabundant quantity of low Plantation Sugar, which the merchants are desirous of quitting, the reduced prices of 52s. to 54s. have been accepted; the better qualities are, however, comparatively scarce, and maintain nearly previous rates. Office Coffee market generally, we must state a depreciation upon our last quotations, of 3s. to 4s. per owt. upon Plantation, and of Foreign 1s. to 2s. By auction, very ordinary and nearly unmerchantable Januaica Rum was forced off at the following prices, which are altogether unheard of: 12 to 15 overproofs 1s. 4d. to ls. 5d. and 30 overproofs 2s. to 2s. 1d. per Gallon-the result of is. 5d. and 30 overproofs 2s. to 2s. 1d. per Gallon—the result of which has reduced the value of Jamaicas full 2d. per gallon, and of Leewards about 1d. per gallon. The business done in Cottons has somewhat exceeded the average of preceding weeks, without, however, producing any alteration in the currency, notwithstanding the activity of the Liverpool market, where Boweds and Orleans have realized an advance of ½ per 1b. and all other descriptions are held with increased firmness.—There is a deficiency of Import into the kingdom this year of 145,000 bags compared with the corresponding period of 1820.—Tallows are held with much more confidence, and to all ampenance prices have found their minimum noise. dence, and to all appearance prices have found their minimum point. Yellow Candle is difficult to be bought under 47s. per cwt. for arrival, and 46s. 6d. on the spot. — 3855 chests of East India Indigo have been brought forward, of which about one-fourth was taken in the remainder realized an advance upon the last sale of 6d, and 1s, upon consuming qualities: 4d, and 8d, npon good and good midding, and 3d, and 5d, upon fine.—Fine Violet and Copper 7s, 3d, to 7s, 6d., middling ditto 7s, to 7s, 6d., consuming ditto 6s, 9d, to 7s, 3d. low Coromaudel 4s. 9d. to 5s., good middling Madras 6s. 3d. to 6s. 7d., middling ditto 4s. 3d. to 6s., violet and blue 8s. 6d. to 8s. 10d. fine purple 8s. to 8s. 6d., purple and violet 7s. 9d. to 8s. 3d., fine purple 7s. 9d. to 8s. 3d. fine violet 7s. 8d. to 8s., good middling 7s. 8d. to 7s. 9d., fine red violet 7s. 9d. to 8s. 3d., good and middling 7s. 3d. to 7s. 8d.

CORONATION OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY GEORGE IV.

His most excellent Majesty King George IV. acceded to the blessed to the demise of his venerable parent, King George III. of blessed to more, in the evening of Saturday, 28th of January, 4820.

On the fellowing day a Court was held at Carlton House Palace, where were assembled the various branches of the Royal Ramily, the great officers of State, a numerous collection of Peets of the Realm, and of Members of Parliament, the Lord Mayor of London and several Aldermen, &c. who thereupon took the usual oaths to the new Sovereign. A Privy Council was afterwards held, wherein an Proclamation was agreed upon for praclaiming the accession of His Majesty to the throne. This Proclamation was read with the resual formalities on the day wollowing in several places of London and Westminster, and subsequently in all the great towns of the

On the 6th of May following His Majesty issued the following Proclamation, declaring His Majesty's pleasure touching his Royal Coronation, and the solution thereof:

"GROBER R. "Wherens we have resolved, by the favour and blessing of Al-mighty God, to celebrate the solemoity of our Boyal Corountion upon Tuesday, the first day of August next, at our Palace of Westminster; and forasmuch as by ancient customs and usages, as also in regard of divers tenures of sundry manors, lands, and other heditaments, many of our loving subjects do claim and are bound to do and perform divers several services on the said day, and at the time of the Coronation, as, in times precedent, their ancestors, and those from whom they claim, have done and performed at the monation of our famous progenitors and predecessors; we, therefore, out of our princely care for the preservation of the lawful rights and inheritances of our loving subjects whom it may concern, there thought fit to give notice of and publish our resolutions therein; and we do hereby give-notice of and publish the same accordingly.

And we do hereby further signify, that by our Commission under our Great Seal of Great Britain, we have appointed and authorised our most dear brothess and faithful Councillors, [Here follow the of the different male branches of the Royal Family, together with those of the Privy Councillors, as usual in State acts,] or any ... five, or more of them, to receive, hear, and determine the petitions and claims which shall be to them exhibited by any of our loving subjects in this behalf; and we shall appoint our said Commis-sioners for that purpose to sit in the Painted Chamber of our Palace at Westminster, upon Thursday the eighteenth day of this instant
May, at twelve o'clock at noon of the same day, and from time to fime to adjourn as to them shall seem meet, for the execution of our said Commission, which we do thus publish, to the intent that all such persons whom it may any ways concern, may know when and where to give their attendance for the exhibiting of their petitions and claims concesning the services before-mentioned to done and performed anto us at our said Coronation: and we do bereby signify unto all and every our subjects whom it may concern, that our will and pleasure is, and we do hereby strictly charge all persons, of what rank or quality soever they be, who, either upon our letters to them disected, or by reason of their offices or tenures or otherwise, are to de any service at the said day or time of our propation, that they do duly give their attendance accordingly, in all respects furnished and appointed as to so great a solemnity appartaineth, and answerable to the dignities and places which every one of them respectively heldeth and enjoyeth, and of this they or any of them are not to fail, as they will answer the contrary at their perils, unless upon special reasons by ourself, under our hand to be allowed, we shall dispense with any of their services or at-

The ceremony of proclaiming the Coronation took place aftervards on the 13th of May, by the Heralds, at Westminster Hall, at Temple But, and at the Royal Exchange.

The Court of Claims assembled on the appointed day, and proled, at regular meetings, to investigate the various claims laid

The following claims were subsequently admitted:—
The Eart of Abergavenny to be Chief Larderer, or in case of his

The 1 buse of Athol to present the King with two falcons.

The D ran and Chapter of Westminster to instruct the King in the ceremonic w, and to assist the Archbishop in the Consecution.

When the Court had proceeded so far in settling the claims, his Majesty the sught proper, by his Proclamation, dated the 12th of Sally, to postpone the ceremonial of his Coronation.

In consequence of the preparations which were already made for the Coronation, the Court of Chancery and the King's Bench were employed in earrying into effect the arrangements for the Coronation. Six new windows were fixed on each side of the root of the Hall, constructed so as to assimilate with the Gothic archidecture of the building. The grand window ever the north entrance which had been in a state of dilapidation, was thoroughly restored The preparations continued to proceed with great rapidity, and these assumed a decided form. In Westmisser-hall the platform was completed, and the frame work for the side galleries erected. The lower part of each gallery was ten feet in height from the partform, and the seats rose in gradation one above the other. In wasteriester Abbey the preparations were also in rand progress. A oster Abbev U zations were a a in rapid progre plat form was exected along the nave, and galleries were erected in the t tisles. The alterated stations (occupying the former scene of the ci voir and alter) were formed, being the part where the Corona tion to bes place.

In C. wion-garden, a series of kitchens were erected, and twenty sooms were prepared for containing the concrete, and visues, &c. passage was formed from those rooms to the southern window of the Hall, to enable the several courses to be forwarded with the greatest rapidity.

The Court of Claims resumed its sittings on the 7th of June of the present year, pursuant to notice in The London Gazet &, and proceeded to the investigation of various claims. In additio, a to those already mentioned, the following were allowed by the Court The Duke of Norfolk, as Earl of Arundel, to perform the table of Batler.

The Marquis of Ormond, to be Chief Butler for Ireland.
The Duke of Bedford and Mr. Whithread, to be Almoner.

The Barons of the Cinque Ports, to hold the Canopy over the King's head.

variety of coherelaims were also heard and determined upon. On the 9th of June, 1821, the following Preclamation was issued by his Majesty: " GEORGE R.

"Whereas by our Royal Proclamation, bearing date the 6th day of May, 1820, wedid, amengst other things, publish and declare our Royal intention to celebrate the solemnity of our Royal Coronation upon/Tuesday, the 1st of August then next ensuing, at our Palace at Westminster; and whereas by our Royal Proclamation bearing date the 12th of July, we thought fit to adjourn the said solemnity until our Royal will and pleasure should be further signified thereon. And whereas, we have resolved, by the favour and biessing of Aland whereas, we have resorted, by the lavour and thesauly of Almighty God, to celebrate the said solemnity upon Thursday, the 19th of July, at our said Palace at Westmisster, we do, by this our Royal Proclamation, give notice of and publish our resolution thereon; and we do hereby give strict charge and command to all our loving subjects whom it may concern, that all persons, of whatever rank and quality seever they be, who, either upon our letters to their directed, or by reason of their offices and tenures, or otherwise, are to do any service at the time of our Coronation, do duly give their attendance at the said solemnity, on the said 19th day of July, in all respects furnished and appointed as to so great a solemnity appertaineth, and answerable to the dignities and places which every one then respectively holdeth and enjoyeth; and of this they or any of them are not to fail, as they will answer the contrary at their peril, unless by special reasons, by ourself under our sign manual to be allowed, we shall dispense with any of their services or attendance.—Given at our Court the 8th day of June, 1821, second year of our reign."

And the Coronation was proclaimed on the 14th with the usual

The Deputy Earl Marshal issued the usual orders respecting the attendance of the Peers and other persons.

The Deputy Lord Chamberlain also issued his orders relative to this preparation for the due celebration of the great solemnity A warrant of dispensation was passed to enable the Knights of the Grand Cross of the Bath, nominated since the last installation, to wear the collar and mantle, &c. of the order at the Coronation, as though actually and formally installed.

After these orders and preparations in an official way towards the due performance of this great solemnity, vast preparations were forwarded in order to enable the public most commodiously to observe so interesting and magnificent a spectacle.

DECORATIONS, GALLERIES FOR SPECTATORS. &c. The immense range of galleries in the fronts of houses in New Palace-yard, along the Exchequer Offices and Chambers, over the Champion's stables, in Parliament-street and square, in Georgestreet, in St. Margaret's Church-yard, in the large spaces, on gardens and squares, between the Parliament house and Sessions-house, it would be impossible to particularise. The magnitude of these ac-commodations, their uniformity, and convenience had excited the wonder of the inhabitants of this great Metropolis, and of millions from all parts of the country, who repuired to town solely with the view of witnessing the preparations. Besides the galleries in front of the houses, which were carried up to the parapets, sustained by double timbers clamped, and those timbers doubly bound with iron, there were galleries on the tops of several houses in Bridge street, &c.; and at a large public-house at the corner of George and King-streets, commanding an extended panoramic view of the whole line of procession from the Hall to the Abbey, the fronts of the house were entirely removed, the floors of the rooms being on a level with the seats of the different tiers of galleries. The whole were lined, rooms as well as galleries, with crimson cloth; as indeed were several other galleries in Palace-yard, Parliament-street, &c. All these galleries underwent the strictest investigation by surveyor appointed for the purpose; so that all possible precaution to prevent accidents were adopted.

Every preparation was here completed. The Throne for his lajesty was of a square form, surmounted with a square Canopy, formed of crimson velvet, richly trimmed with a gold fringe, bearing on the festoons the escutcheons of the King, beautifully embroidered in gold, the Royal Arms being embroidered on the back. In front of the Throne was placed a square table, on which the regalia were laid previous to the procession. It was covered with fine purple cloth, and ornamented with deep gold fringe round the bottom; the surface of the table was inlaid with gold work of the

The Royal Box on the right of the Throne, and the Lord Great Chamberlain's Box immediately above it, were lined and covered with scarlet cloth, and hung with luxuriant festoons of the same material. The decorations of the Boxes of the Foreign Ambassadors and their suites on the opposite side were of the like character.

The fronts of the Galleries in the Hall were papered with Gothic pannels, of a dark colour, to bear a strong resemblance to the ve perable ruof.

The great Tower at the north entrance, which had been in an unfinished state of repair, was inclosed in case of boards, and the top of them cut into the shape of embrasures, in order to resemble the corresponding tower on the other side.

The tables in the Hall were six in number, placed lengthways, three on each side. Each table was 52 feet long, and contained room for 26 Peers on each side.

The Processional Platform was approachable by a succession of raised steps, and was 1500 feet long, extending from the north door of Westminster-hall, along New Palace-yard, round Parliamentsquare, north and west, to the great western door of the Abbey.

The Platform in the centre was raised three feet from the ground, and has on each side a small platform, divided from within by a railing of about three feet from the ground. The height of the root of the platform was about 14 feet.

Within a short distance from the north entrance of the Hall, little to the east of the platform, a stable was erected for the use of the horses of the Champion, and of the horses of the two Peers who accompanied him on his entrance into the Hall. Over it was fitted up a Gallery for the convenience of spectators.

From the entrance to the House of Lords to the entrance of Westminster Abbey, at Poet's Corner, was erected a smaller platform es and other Ladies privileged to attend at the cerefor the Peerese mony in the Abbey.

Equal progress was made in the great and extensive preparations J. The sents in the Choir, the transcots, and the raised Galleries, were completed and covered with matting, and lined with crimson cloth.

A now and splendid organ was erected in the Gallery over the Altar. Two new Anthems were composed for the occasion, by his Majesty's composers, to words selected by the Archbishop of Can-

POWCE ARRANGEMENTS, BARRIERS, &c.

During Tuesday and Wednesday night, in order that no unnecessary interruption might be experienced in the public thoroughfares during the day-time, the workmen under the direction of the Board of Works were busily engaged in raising barriers at different points that commanded the streets and pusses leading to Westminster Hall and Abbey. From Charing Cross a stout barrier was placed about fifthen feet from the pavement) to Parliament-street, so that the fullest p. sable room, about twenty feet in width, should be secured for pers. ans having tickets of admission to the Hall, the Abbey, or the Coronation Calleries. And a still stronger barrier, which run from porth to south, slivided it into two passages, one for the carriages of persons proceeding to the Hall, and the other for those of persons proceeding to the Abbey, across Bridge-street, as well as in King-street, and the neighbouring thoroughfares, all the carriages entrances were wholly blockaded; thus securing the most commodious means to persons proceeding on foot to the different places for which they possessed admission tickets. At all these points were stationed constables, supported by parties of military; and at the several passes were placed experienced individuals who had been instructed in their various duties.

The barriers and guards in other directions were equally efficacious. By Prince's-street, near Storey's-gate and the Park, we there is an open space between Westminster Sessions House, was raised a strong fence, consisting of twenty-four-feet deals, pitched on end, powerfully supported by clampa, and bound with iron. Within this inclosed space were rulsed galleries; and at the corner of the Sessions House, there was a gallery for the special accommodation of the Magistrates' families and friends—erocted mainly at the expence of private parties. This strong fence was further supported by the police and military.

But the main hypericar was at the treats leading to Abingsion.

But the main barriers were at the streets leading to Abingdonstreet, College-street, and Millbank-street, thence direct to the House of Lords, where were the chief entrances. There was strong barrier across each street, so as to leave clear space for riages preceeding to the House; and, by a division in the middle of Abingdon-street, the chance of any of the different carriages coming in contact with each other was prevented; and the ends Abingdon-street, as the foot ways were of the amplest nature in other directions, were wholly blockaded, within the barriers across the pavements there being placed, as well as at the carriage entrances and outlets, persons instructed in their several duties, as previously described. Parties of military were also stationed at

All the arrangements were finally made on Wednesday night .-The High Bailiff of Westminster (A. Morris, Esq.) the High Constable (Mr. Lee), and the several Magistrates of the different police offices, Sir R. Baker, Mr. Birnie, Mr. Mainwaring, Mr. Rayssford, Mr. Markland, &c. under the advice and with the approbation of Lord Sidmouth, agreed upon at the office of the Home Secretary of State, adopted a plan of general and particular operations. Each Mugistrate had his different station allotted to bim, with a specified number of police officers and special constables to attend his commands, and enforce his instructions.

Besides the precautions taken in the several streets, and at the various thoroughfares, arrangements of a similar character were adopted at the several approaches from the river Thames. In the course of the night, the stairs, landing-places, roads from the wharfs, &c. along the Westminster side of the banks of the Thames, were closed, with parties to command them, from the Hungerford to the Horselerry stairs. Some exceptions were made regarding the stairs at Whitehall, by Lord Liverpool's house, and a temporary landing-place formed in the course of Wednesday, at the lower end of the Speaker's gurden, for the accommodation of the Treasury and Ordnance barges, conveying certain great Officers of State, Peeresses, dec. as well as the barges of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, and the twelve citizens of London, accompanied as they were (by the special favour of the corporation of the city of London) by the Mayor of Oxford, its Recorder, two Aldermen, two Assistants, &c. And at this entrance proper precautions were taken by stationing a civil force in the Speaker's gardens; while, on the river, such regulations were strengthened by the parties on board the Thunes Police-boat, and a gun-brig moore i off this point in the course of Wednesday.

Though considerable activity has prevailed for some weeks in the several departments, to make the amplest arrangements for the Royal Coronation of George IV. with all possible and becoming splendour, nothing could surpass the industry and bustle that have specialcut, nothing count surpless the industry and busile that have prevailed during the last three days and nights, both in the Abbey, the Hall, at the Procession and Peeresses' platforms, &c. to bring those extensive, and in many instances, truly wonderful works to a satisfactory completion. The workmen literally laboured day and night.

THE MORNING OF THURSDAY.

Bustle was this day the order of this immense town, and so early as four o'clock in the morning all the leading streets, particularly those containing the great hotels, were lined with curriages; while others were thronged by pedestrians. Soon after four, the brig stationed in the Thames, between Waterloo and Blackfrians Bridges, gave authentically that " preparation note" for the Coronation of His Most Excellent Majesty George the Fourth which even the deafest of his subjects for miles round must have beard.—
About this time the carriage-line extended in that direction from Temple Bar to Whitehall, and onwards to Westminster Abbey.

The public streets were guarded by the Life Guards and Oxford Blues, who were assisted by the Scotch Greys. Indeed, at the early hour of one o'clock, to speak strictly to time, this long-en-pected morning was ushered in by discharges of artillery from the Park; and soon after a line of carriages had begun to arrive, so that about three in the moraing the whole of Parliament-street (in consequence of the number of tradesmen and mechanics on foot, who had as if agreed to postpone their most necessitous avocations, to pay the respect due to this national jubilee) was rendered almost impassable. At this hour, from the corner of Palace-yard to Waterloo-bridge there was also one continued line of carriages.

The aniety to secure seats was so great, that many persons occupied those which they had previously purchased at so early an hour as twelve o'clock the preceding night. At one in the morning a considerable number had arrived; at three the various galleries exhibited many well-dressed spectators; and at four the joyful bells welcomed a fine though breezy morning. A few individuals who remained over night were the only foot passengers whom we noticed about the platform, but who continued increasing as the day advanced. At this hour a distinct discharge of cannon was heard, which announced that the celebrations for the Coronation were p suing in other directions. At five those parts of the platform which were left unfinished were completed; the bells of St. Margarets Church tolled out some joyous peals; several of the Royal attendants arrived; and the galleries opposite the Hall were very respectably filled with company of the first distinction.

At four o'clock a man arrived with a placard, stating that it was the Queen's intention to demand admission to the Abbey. This intimation produced a few, and very few ories of "The Queen!" "The Queen!" but these shortly subsided. At six o'clock such was the throng of carriages that there was a complete stoppage for a considerable time, but many of the company, impatient of delay, proceeded on foot through the crowd. Among those were some of the nobility, clad in their Coronation robes. The company continued arriving till seven o'clock (after which no carriages, except those of persons immediately engaged in the ceremony of the day, were admitted) when a minute gun fired in the Park, international that the Hall and Abbey would then be closed against the admission of any more visitors. At a few minutes before ten o'clock Champion, in his state coach, followed by his officers in three other carringes, on his way to perform his duties in the grand ceremonial, passed through Parliament-street, where he was cheered by many respectable individuals.

ASSEMBLING IN THE HALL.

The anxiety of the Peeresses, and other persons having means of access to the Hall, to obtain their seats on Thursday morning, Teas excessively intense. So early as four o'clock several of them begges to arrive, and at five the Hall was about half filled.

There is not much additional decoration in the Hall since it was first exhibited to the public. The Throne is splendidly gilt and decorated; the back is formed of crimson velvet, and the whole is surmounted by the Royal Arms, over which is a canopy.

The table, which is nearly of an oblong form, was covered with purple cloth, bordered with gold. On each side of the table, and sear the side boxes, were placed three chairs for the Princes of the Blood Royal.

The lower box on the right of the chair was appropriated to the Princesses of the Royal Family; the box above it, which is Lord Gardyr's box, was principally filled with the ladies of the Great Sag ers of State.
The lower box on the left of the Chair was reserved for the Foreign Ambassadors; and the hox above it for the officers of their suites. The floor of the Hull was covered with purple cloth, as were the tables and the chairs. There were twelve chandelier oh side, containing three rows of wax candles each, and on the tables candelabras were placed at regular distances. The canopy was yellow; of silk and gold embroidery, with curains of muslin; and eight bearers, having fixed poles by which the canopy was supported, and which were plated on steel, with silver mobs fixed, bore it up and down the Hall, to practice the mode of barrying it in procession. It was then deposited, according to the me, at the upper end of the side table of the Hall, to the left of the Throne. It bore a peculiarly light and elegant appearance.

Soon after six o'clock the Duchess of Gloucester entered the Royal Box on the right of the Throne. Her Royal Highness was ost elegantly attired in a rich dress of silver lama over French lilac, and wore in her head-dress a splendid plume of ostrich feathers. She appeared in most excellent health and spirits, as did also the uchess of Clarence, who soon afterwards followed her.

It was now about half-past six, and no little alurm in the then quiet state of the Hall was excited by repeated shouts on the outside of Off! Off!—Shame! Shame! and an immediate order for the closing of the Hall door, which was given by Mr. Fellowes, in the absence of the Lord Great Chamberlain. It was some time before the suspense, into which this threw the company, was re moved, when the noise was discovered to have been produced by the appearance of the Queen, who was at the time endeavouring to gain admittance into the Hull. This explanation seemed perfectly At a quarter past seven o'clock, Miss Fellowes, the Herbwoman conducted by her brother, and followed by her six maids, all very elegantly and appropriately dressed, entered the Hall, and proceeded to the lower end of it, and excited considerable attention from their neatness and simplicity. The Hall now began to fill very rapidly; the galleries presented such an assemblage of females of rank and beauty as were never before congregated.

About balf past seven their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent, the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, and the Princess Feodore (daughter of the Duchess of Kent) took their seats in the Royal Their Royal Highnesses were attired in splendid dresses of white satin, richly embroidered in silver, with rich bandeau, head-dresses, and large plumes of white feathers, they were accompapied by a numerous retinue of ladies

At a quarter before eight o'clock, the Foreign Ambassadors, most splendidly attired in the varied costume of their respective Courts. and, accompanied by their Ladies, took their sents; the dress of the Prince Esterhazy was particularly spleaded. The box immediately above it was filled with the Officers of their suite, principally Military Officers, and many of them wearing several Orders.

White the assembled crowd were anxiously waiting for the most splendid part of the ceremonial, the Barons of the Cinque Ports practimed carrying the canops, which is of cloth of gold, most superbly decorated, from the top of the Hall to the bottom and back again, to the infinite amusement of the ladies in the galleries

The officers of the Jewel-office now brought in a portion of the Recaling which was laid on one of the side tables

The Judges and others of the long robe, together with the gen tlemen of the Privy Chamber, Serjeants at Law, Masters in Chan-cer, Aldermen of London, Chaplains having dignities, and the sh Clerks in Chancery, being all in their proper habits, assembled in the Court of Requests, where the Officers of Arms arranged them according to their proper classes, four in a rank, and then conducted them into the Hall in the following manner:—

Esquires of the Body.

The Knights of the Bath now began to assemble, and with the others who were to take part in the procession, ranged themselves at the end of the Hall. The dresses of the Knights of the Bath were extremely splendid. The Knights had all close dresses of white satin, puckered in a variety of ways. The Grand Crosses were flowing robes of plakish red satin, lined with white; the Company of the Party of the Party Company. ers close mantles. The Judges and the Privy Councillors, manders close mantles. The Judges and the Privy Councillors, not being Peers, next entered, the latter in splendid dresses of blue velves and gold. Among them we observed the Eark of Yurasouth, Lord Binning, Mr. Canning, Mr. Bathurst, Mr. Huskisson, Sir G. Hill, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Beckett, Lord G. Beresford, and Mr. Wal-

The persons appointed to precede the Knight Marshal were mus teted without the north door of Westminster Hall.

At twenty minutes past nine the whole having b the Peers were called over in the House of Lords by Deputy Garter and proceeded to the hall, where the other persons appointed to walk in the procession had been previously marshalled on the right and left by the Officers of Arms. At ten o'clock precisely His Majesty entered the Hall, preceded by the great officers of state, and took his sent in the chair of state at the table, when a discharge of cannon was made. The Deputy I-rd Great Chamberlain, the Lord High Constable, and the Deputy Earl Marshal ascended the steps, and placed themselves at th oiner table

The Lord High Steward, the Great Officers, Deputy Garter, and Binck Rod arranged themselves near the chair of state; the royal trainbearers on each side of the throne.

His Mujesty was splendidly attired, and wore a plame of ostrich feathers, surmounted by a black heron's plume. The moment the King entered, the assembly rose, and stood during the time His Majesry remained in the Hall; the trumpets sounded "God save the King."

His Majesty, on his first entry, appeared to be somewhat fatigued but he was cheerful; and in the ceremony that followed, of deposit ing the Regulia on the table, shewed that he was intimately acquainted with the accustomed manner in which it was done; and he appeared in some instances to give directions to the Noblemen and Officers in the execution of their duties.

The Lord Chamberlain, assisted by officers of the Jewel-office, then brought the sword of state to the Lord High Constable, who delivered it to the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, Lord Gwydyr, who placed it upon the table; then Curtana, or the sword of mercy, with the two swords of justice were in like manner presented, and drawn from their scabbards by the Deputy Lord Great Chamber-lain, and laid on the table before His Majesty; after which the gold spurs were delivered, and placed on the table. Immediately after, the procession to deliver the regalia, consisting of the Dean and Probendaries of Westminster, (who met at half past eight in their church) in their surplices and rich copes, proceeded up the Hall, from the lower end, in the following order:

The Dean then presented the Crown to the Lord Ligh Constable, who delivered it to the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, and by him it was placed on the table before the King. The rest of the regalia was then severally delivered by each Pro his knee, to the Dean, who presented it to the Lord high Constable, and then the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain laid it on the table. The regalla being thus delivered, the Prebendarios and Dean returned to the middle of the Hall. His Majesty baving edshmanded Deputy Garter to summon the noblemen and bishops appointed to bear the regalin, the Deputy Lord Great Charaberlain took up the several swords, and sceptres, the orb, and errown, and placed them in the hands of those by whom they were to us carried, in the following order:---

The King went through all the ceremonies with cheerfulness and immediately set forth on the way to the Abbey. In descending the steps of the platform, His Majesty requested the nid and and port of an officer who was near him; a gentleman in a scarlet. port of an ouncer who was near him; a genterman in a senter-misform advanced, and tendered it, when his Majosty, with his right hand leaning upon the shoulder of this gentleman, descended the steps, and when he came upon the area of the Hill, Hisdismissed the gentleman who had assisted him, whose name we were unable to learn, and said, in a tone distinctly audible—"f thank yon, $ir."—Instead of standing under the canopy, His Majosty preceder it. When His-Majosty had got a little way down the Hall, he turned to his train-bearers (the Earls of Surrey and Uxbridge, Marquis Douro, &c.) and requested them to bear his train farther from him, apparently with a view to relieve himself from the wieth! hinnelf from the weight. As he went down the Hall, he con with much cheerfulness with the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was on his right hand. In the meanwhite amongst the spectators outside expectation was every where on tip-toe, and the general. appearance of all around was exceedingly striking.
PROCESSION TO THE ABBLY.

At about half past ten-o'clock, the second gun was then fired, and the procession moved, upon blue cloth, spread upon the platform, from the Throne, in Westminster Hall, to the great steps in the Abley Church; the anthem, "O Lord, grant the King a long life," &c. was then sung in parts, in succession with the Majorte's band ulpring the coursing of transmitter and the King a long life," &c. was then sung in parts, in succession with His Majesty's band playing, the sounding of trumpets, and the beating of drums, until the arrival in the Abbey.

We could not avoid notioing the peculiar marks of favour be-owed on the Marquis of Londonderry, particularly when the prostowed on the Marquis of Lou cession stopped at that part of the platform forming a line between the corner of the East end of Palace-yard and the middle of the central Pavilion. His dress was magnificent, and amply corresponded with the rich band of diamonds which encircled his velvet hat and feathers. Each of the Members of the Royal Family were welcomed with the loudest demonstrations of regard, and a more cordial love, or sincere delight, a more devoted attachment, a more affecting loyalty has never been displayed by a free people to the Sovereign of their choice than marked the conduct of all who were assembled. With respect to the effect produced by the cavalcade, it exceeds any thing which language could convey. The dresses of the Knights of the Bath were of the highest order, that of the Privy Councillors was not inferior. The Lords were their crimson velvet mantles, adorned with every ornament that can render then worthy the first nobility in Europe.

It was about a quarter before eleven o'clock, when the approach of the head of the procession to the Abbey was amounted by a load clapping of bands. Miss Fellows, fellowed by six others, who seemed to have been selected for their peculiar beauty, led the way, strewing the path with the rarest flowers.

On the approach of the procession to the Abbey, scarce token of approbation was used, except clapping of hands, till the King appeared; he was then mest warmly greated and cheered.—
The shouting was tremsadous; from the gatheries, at the opposite part of the same circle, distant several hundred feet from us, the acclamations eame like tremendous long and continued discharges of small arms.—Lord Londonderry, Lord Hill, the Lord Chancellor, the Royal Dukes, were also loudly cheered.

Alderman Wood was received in a manner that seemed quite new In the gallery where we sat, there were about three out of four of the spectators hissing, and a doma cried out together.—(turn him out!).—When the Alderman arrived at the opposite galleries, the showers of hisses reached us across that great distance, with distinctness and force.

CERRMONIAL IN THE ABBEY.

The Nakth door of the Abbey was one of the chief accesses for visitors; but nothing could be more forbidding and perplexed than its entrance through the underwork of scaffoldings and winding passages, that seemed to lead only from "dark to deeper dark." If the Coronation had occurred in winter, this almost subterranean travel must have produced formidable accidents. The interior of the Abbey at this hour might have furnished a study for a painter. Without straying into description, it may be easily conceived by those acquainted with this noble edifice how finely the grey of the merning soust assimilate with the solemn beauty of the architecture, the lofty that's, and the remote and deep coloured windows. A few figures were scattered through the galleries, and along the nave were officers of the Guazd, wrapped in their night cloaks, and moving likeso many shadows. But the light broke in rapidly, and the whole vista was seen in all its rich preparation. A line of about sixty bases fronted with crimson cloth was formed above the great es of the nave and chancel. Two galleries, also faced with som, were formed along the sulics of the chancel; the interval from the screen te she centre of the cross was laid with crimson benches, rising above each other from the floor of purple cloth; epis were filled with scalluldings of benche certain number were of crimson. In the centre of the cross was a saised floor, called the theatre, and upon it a theore; a magnificent work, on which nothing was seen but gold, with a footstool and carpet of gold tissue. Under those was laid a splendid Turkey earpet of gold tissue. Under those was laid a splendid Turkey earpet, which covered the floor to a considerable space. In front of the throne was the Sacrarium, equivalent to the Chapel, and the view from the such of the succes was closed by the organ gallery, with the organ at its summit, highly omamented for the occasion. The Bacrarium, as the place of the most select ceremony, was most superbly prepared. Looking from the centre of the transcepts on the left, was the pulpit, fixed to a piller, and of a simple and elegant construction, though its materials were of gold and crimson velvet. The area of this Chapel was a square formed by the gal-leries for the Ambassadors and, we believe, the Princesses. Its sides were festoaned with hrocaded silk; two silk benches for the Bishops were on the left side; in the centre of the side formed by the ergan gallery was the after, a splendid table covered with large pieces of gold plate under a slightly projecting ennopy sus-tained by golden palm trees. On the right of the alter was an ottoman covered with the canopy of gold tissue to be held over the King at his unction, and the robe which he was then to wear.

On and delivered so appropriate Served from the 18th of the right side was a blue velvet chair and deak where the King was to offer his private devotions, and in the centre of the area stood King Edward's Throne, a stately antique chair covered with gold.

King Edward's Throne, a stately antique chair covered with gold.

And delivered so appropriate Served from the first of the morning, when the sun riseth, even amenia without clouds, as the tender grass springeth out of the earth by clear shining the control of the c higher interest from their historio recollections, exercised curiosity for a considerable time. But the hours were many, and these was no small exhibitantion in the sight even of the King's musicians taking their places under the organ, as some promise of more active indulgence. By seven o'clock the galleries were nearly filled with elegantly dressed females, and gentlemen in uniforms or Court dresses. From this time a number of persons in red and purple costumes, with staves, were busy in making arrangements for the coming procession. Within a quarter to eleven, the foreign Ambanadors with their ladies, and other persons of distinction, took their seats in the box on the left of the Sacrarium. Nothing could be more splendid than this display. The ladies were magnificently dressed in plumes, and with a profusion of diamonds in every shape and ornament. The Princess Esterhazy were an elegant double tiara, o'dazzling splendour. Another lady were a large deep coronet of brilliants; all wore some dazzling ornament, and they higher interest from their historic resollections, exercised curiosity coronet of brilliants; all wore some dazzling ornament, and they fairly outshone the gentlemen in defiance of uniforms, blue, green, and scarlet, covered with gold embroidery. But from this inferiority we must exempt the elder Prince Esterhazy. We have beard it vaguely asserted, that his Coronation costume would be worth 100,0001. The calculation might not be far from the truth, if the eye was to decide. He wore a Hungarian Hussar dress; the diamond stars on its bosom were of great size and extraordinary beauty. The loop of his cap was diamond; it had a diamond plume, and a diamond rose in the aigrette; altogether his appearance was of the most splendid kind.

In a few minutes all was anxiety and tumult in the Abbey, for the trumpets were heard, which announced the approach of the pro-cession. The benches in the different galleries were suddenly filled; the officers of the ceremony hugied to their places, and the King's musicians stood in full preparation for beginning the Anthem at the first signal.

The Herb-woman soon appeared at the great door, followed by the King's trumpets. The procession now flowed in, and filled the mave. As the different divisions arrived at the cross, they were met by Heralds, who directed them to their respective benches. This was all done with much regularity. At half-past eleven the King's canopy appeared, slowly moving in. A vast acclamation e, and the organ began the Coronation Anthem, from Psal. 122, verses 1, 5, 6, 7.—" I was glad when they said unto me we will go into the house of the Lord."—The effect of the full orchestra was very noble. The canopy stopped at the entrance of the chancel, and the King advanced, preceded by the Princes of the Blood, who were each applauded as they respectively came to the steps of the theatre, and turned off to the benches of the Peers. The Duke of York received much applause, which he acknowledged by repeated bows. The King advanced to the Sacrarium, attended by the bows. The King advanced to the Sucrarism, automoted by sec-Great Officers, bearing the Regalia. His Majesty must have suf-fered considerable fatigue from the procession; he walked slowly, and seemed to be not slightly pleased to get rid of his immense robe, which, notwithstanding his eight train-hearers, must have been a heavy incumbrance. The fifteen Bishops present then took their seats on their banch. seats on their bench.

The King then ascended the throne and passed on the south side of the throne to his chair of state to the east side thereof, opposite to the altar; and after his private devotion (kneeling down upon the faldstool) took his seat, the two Bishops, his supporters, stand-ing on each side; the noblemen bearing the four swords on his right hand, the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain and the Lord High Con-stable on his left; the Great Officers of state, the Deputy Earl Murshal, the Dean of Westminster, the Noblemen bearing the regalia, Trainbearens, with Deputy Garter, the Lord Lyon, the Lord Mayor of London, and Black Rod, standing about the King's chair.

THE RECOGNITION.

Upon the conclusion of the authem, the Lord Archbishop of Can-terbury, together with the Lord Chascellor, the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, the Lord High Constable, the Deputy Earl Marshal, preceded by Deputy Garter, moved to the east side of the theater where the Archbishop of Canterbury made the recognition in the terms: "Sirs, I here present unto you King George the Fourth, the undoubted King of this Realm: wherefore, all you that come this undoubted King of this Realm: wherefore, all you that come this day to do your homage, are ye willing to do the same?" and repeated the same at the south, west, and north sides of the theatre; dering which His Majesty stood, and turned towards the people on the side on which the recognition was made; the people replied to this demand with loud and repeated acclamations of "God save King George the Fourth." The whole multitude stood up, and the waving of handkerchiefs and hats continued for some time. This was perhaps the finest moment to have looked upon this grand spectacle. The transepts and chancel were a sea of colours and plumes. All that met the eye was of the costliest material. The whole vista gleamed with a thousand forms and colours; and to heighten and give power to this brilliant picture, it was seen in the midst of one e finest displays of Gothic architecture in the world. And at the last recognition the trumpets sounded and the drums were beat. His Majesty then took his seat, and the Bible, the chalice, and

The King, attended by the Bishops of Lincoln, and Bath and Wells, his supporters, the Dean of Westminster, and the noblemen bearing the regulia and the four swords, passed to the altar, where His Majesty, uncovered, and kneeling upon the cushion, made his first offering of a pall or altar-cloth of gold, which was delivered by the Lord Chamberlain to the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, and by his Lordship to the King, who delivered it to the Archbishop of Canterbury, by whom it was placed on the altar. The Treasurer of the Household then delivered an ingot of gold, of one pound weight, being the second offering, to the Deputy Lord Great Chambertain, who having presented the same to the King, Ris. Majesty delivered it to the Archbishop, who put it into the oblation. His Majesty still kneeling, the prayer "O God, who dwellest in the high and holy place," was said by the Archbishop. At the conclusion of this prayer, the King rose, and was conducted to the chain of the prayer was said by the Archbishop. to the chair of state on the south side of the area. THE SERMON.

During this anthem, the King was disrobed of his crimen at the Right Rev. the Archbishop of York then ascended the pulpit, by the Deputy Lord Great Chemberlain, who delivered them to the Marter of the Robers and his Ministry taking off his case of state, the Beyong Lord Great Chamberlain deliveredly to the Bord Chamberiain; and the robes and cap were immediately carried into St. Edward's Chapel, the robes by the Groam of the Robes, the cap by the Officer of the Jewel-effice. St. Edward's Chair (covered with cloth of gold) having been placed in front of the altar, his Majesty took his seat therein to be anoisted; when four Knights of the Garbas summoned by Dausty-Garter, held over the King's head a rich pall or cloth of gold, delivered to them by the Lord Chamberlain, and the Dean of Westminster, holding the ampulla containing the consecrated oil, and pouring some into the assenting spoon, the Archibishes amointed his Majesty on the head and hands, in the form of a cross.

he King then kneeling, the Archbishop, standing on the north side of the alar, pronounced the benediction:—

"Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who by his father was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, by his holy anointing pour down upon your head ead teart the blessing of the Holy Ghost, and prosper the works of your hands; that by the as-sistance of his beavenly grace, you may preserve the people committed to your charge in wealth, peace, and godliness; and after a long and glorious course of ruling this temporal kingdom wisely, justly, and religiously, you may at last be made partaker of an eternal kingdom, through the merits of Jesus Christour Lord. Amen.'

This Prayer being ended, the King arese; and sat down again in his chair, and the Dean of Westminster wiped and dried all the places anoissed, with fine lines, or fine hombast wool, delivered to him by the Lord Great Chamberlain.

Knights of the Garter then delivered the pall to the Lord Chamberlain.

THE INVESTING WITH THE SUPER-TUNICA The Dem of Westminster then received from the officers of the Wandsche, the super-tunion of couts of gold, and a girdle of the same for the sword, with which the Denn arrayed his Majesty.

THE SPURS. According the Dean took the spurs from the altar, and delivered them to the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, who, kneeling down, touched his Majesty's heels therewith, and then returned them to the Bean, who laid them upon the altar.

THE SWORD.

The Nobleman who carried the sword of state then delivered it to the Lord Chamberlain, and in return received another sword in a scabbard of purple velvet, which his lordship delivered to the Archbishop, who placed it on the altar, and delivered the prayer :-

"Hear our prayers, O Lord, we beseech then; and so direct and support thy servent King George, who is now to be girt with this sword, that he may not bear it in vain; but may use it as the Minister of God, for the terror and punishment of evil-doers, and for the protection and encouragement of those that do well, through

The Archbishop, assisted by other Bishops then placed the sword in the King's right hand, saying,

"Receive this kingly sword, brought now from the altar of God, and delivered to you by the hands of us the Bishops and servants of God, though unworth; ."

His Majesty then stood up, and the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain girded his Majesty with the sword. The King being again scated, the Archbishop repeated,

"Remember Rim of whom the Royal Psalmist did prophecy, saying, Gird thee with thy sword upon thy thigh, O thou most Mighty, good luck have thou with thine honour; ride on prosperously, because of truth, meekness, and righteousness!' and be thou ously, because of truth, meekness, and righteousness.!' and be thou a follower of him. With this sword do justice, stop the growth of iniquity, protect the holy Church of God, help and defend widows and orphans, restore the things that are gone to decay, maintain, the things that are restored, punish and refero what is amiss, and confirm what is in good order: that, doing these things, you may be glorious in all virtue; and so represent our Lord Jesus Christ in this life, that you may reign for ever with him in the life which is to come., Amen."

The Kings, since up, ungirted the sword, and advanced to the alter, where his flajenty offered it in the scabbard, (delivering it so the Archbishop), and then retired to his chair: the sword was then redeemed fortene hundredshillings by one of the peers, who carried it during the remainder of the scabbard; and delivered the latter to an officer of the ward-

THE CROWNING.

The Archbishop, standing before the altar, and having St. Edward's crown before him, took it into his hands, and consecrated and blessed it with the prayer, "O God, who crownest thy faithful sevants with mercy, and loving kindness, look down upon this thy servant George our King, who now in lowly devotion beweth his head to thy Divine Majesty; and as thou dost this day set a crown of pure gold upon his head, so enrich his royal heart with thy heavenly grace, and crown him with all princely virtues which may adom the high station wherein ther hast placed him, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom be honour and glory for ever and ever. Ainen.

Then the Archbishop, assisted by other Bishops, came from the altar, the Desa of Westminster carrying the crown, and the Arch-bishep placed it on his Majesty's head; while the spectators, with loud and repeated shouts, exclaimed "God save the King!" the trumpets sounding, the drums beating, and the Tower the trumpets sounding, the drums beating, and the lower and Furk guins firing by signal. The acclemations ceasing, the Archbishop pronounced the exhortation, "Be strong and of a good courage, observe the commandments of God, and walk in his hely ways: fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life; that in this world you may be crowned with success and honour, and when you have finished your course, you may receive a crown of righteousness, which God the righteous Judge shall give you in that day. As soon as the King was crowned, the Peers put on their coronets, the Bishops their caps, and the Kings of Arms their crownes.

THE HOLY BIBLE.

The Dean then taking the Holy Bible from the shar, delivered it to the Archbishop, who, attended by the rest of the Bishops, presented it to the King, saying, "Our gracious King, we present unto your Majesty this Book, the most valuable thing that the most affective that the state of the Bishops. this world affordeth. Here is wisdom; this is the royal law; these are the lively oracles of God. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this book; that keep, and do, the things contained in it. For these are the words of etward life; able to cantained in it. For these are the works of exercit the; asset to make you wise and happy in this world, may, wise unto salvation, and so happy for evermore, through faith which is in Christ Jesus; to whom be glory for ever. Amen."

The King refurned the Bible to the Archisishop, who handed it to the Dean, who replaced it on the altar.

THE BENEFICTION.

And now the Ring having been thus mointed and crowsed, and having received all the ensigns of noyally, the Archbishop setembly blessed him, and all the Bishops stabiling about him, answered each benediction, with the rest of the Pears, with a load and hearty

"The Lord bless and keep you: the Lord make the light of his countenance to shine for ever upon you, and be gracious unto you :

the Lord protect you in all your ways, preserve you from every evil thing, and prosper you in every thing good.—Amen."

"The Lord give you a faithful Senate, wise and upright Consellors and Magistrates, a loyal Nobility, and a dutiled Gentry; a plous, and learned, and useful Ctergy; an honest, industrious, and obedient commonalty.—Amen."

"In your days may mercy and truth more together, and righteousness and peace kiss each other; may wisdom and knowledge be the stability of your times, and the fear of the Lord your treasure. The Lord make your days many, and your reign prosperous;

your fleets and armies victorious; and may you be rev beloved by all your subjects, and ever increase in farour with God

"The glerious Majesty of the Lord our God be upon you: may be bless you with all temporal and spiritual happiness in this world, and crown you with glory and immortality in the world to come.

"The Lord give you a religious and victorious posterity to rule these kingdoms in all ages.—Amen."

Then the Ambhishop turned to the people, and said—

"And the same Lord God Amighty grean, that the Clergy and Nobles assembled here for this great and solerm service, and together with them all the people of the land, fearing, God and honouring the Kings may by the mercial superintendency of the Divine Providence, and vigilant core of our gracious Sovereign, conti-

Providence, and vigitant care of our gracious Sovereign, continually enjoy peace, plenty, and prosperity, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom, with the Eternal Bether, and God the Holy Ghost, be along in the clauseh, would without end.—Assum?"

The blessing being thouselven, the King are down in his chair; vouchsafed to kiss the Archbishop and Bishops assisting at his Corrotation, they kneeling before him one offer smother.

Then the Choir began to sing the Te Deum, and the King went up to the Theatre on which the Theatre is placed, all the Bishops, Great Officers, and other Peers, attending him, and then he sat down and reuseed himself in his chair. Jelow, the Thomas. down and repeated himself in his chair, below.
THE INTHRONIZATION.

To Down being ended, the King was then inthroned by the Bi-shops and Peers; and the Archbishop prenounced the enhortation, Stand firm, and hold fast, from henceforth, the west and imperial dignity, which is this day delivered unto you in the name and by the authority of Almighty God, and by the hauds of us the Bishops and servants of God; though unwordry; and as you see us to approach nearer to God; altar, so vouchsafe more graciously to continue to us your Royal favour and proteotion; and the Lord God Almighty, whose Ministers we are, and the stewards of his mysteries, establish your Throne in righteousness, that it may stand fast for evermore, like as the san before him, and as the faithful witness in Heaven. Amen." THE HOMAGE. THE HOMAGE.

The Archbishop of Cauterbury then knick before the King, and, for himself and the other Lords Spiritual, pronounced the words of homage, the Bishops kneeling around him, and saying after him, in these words:—

"I, Charles, Archbishop of Canterbury [and so every one of the rest, I, N. Bishop of N. repeating the rest audibly after the Archbishop] will be sait bull and true, and faith and truth will bear, unto you our Sovereign Lord, and your heirs, Kings of the United King-dom of Great Britain and Ireland: and I will do, and truly acknowthe service of the lands which I claim to hold of you, as in right of the Church. "So help me God."

whim, and settred. Then the Dille of cended the steps of the throne, and taking off his coronet, knelt before the King, and, for himself and the other Dukes of the Blood Royal, pronounced the words of homage, the rest putting off their coronets, kneeling with him and about him, and saying after him,
"I, N. Duke, or Earl, &c. of N. do become your liege man of the and limb, and of earthly worthip, and faith and truth I will bear mto you, to live and die, against all manaer of folks.

"So help me God."

The Duke of York then touched the crown upon His Majesty's head, and kissed His Majesty's left check, the rest of the Blood Royal after him, and retired. The Dukes and other Poers ob-served the same coremony, the senior of each degree pronouncing the words of homage, and the rest of the same degree saying after him, and each Peer of the same degree, successively, touching His Majesty's crown, and kissing His Majesty's left cheek, and then retiring.

During this time the Teensurer of His Majesty's Household scattered about the medals of the coremation.

During the homage the sceptre with the cross was held on the King's right hand, by the Lord of the Munor of Worksop; and the sceptre with the dove by the Duke of Rutland.

THE HOLY SACRAMENT.

The two fishions, who had read the Epistic and Gospel, re-ceived from the altar, by the Jands of the Archbishop, the patima and the challes, which they carried into St. Edward's chape brought from theuce the bread upon the patinu and the wine in the chalice. His Majesty then descended from the threne, and went to the altar, where, taking off in ensura, His Majesty delivered it to the Lord Great Chamberlain to hold. Then the Bishops delivered the patina and chalice into the King's hands; and His Majesty handed them to the Archbishop, who reverestly placed them upon the altar, and covered them with a fair lines cloth. His Majesty then received the sacrament, the Archbishop administering the bread, and the Dean of Westminster the cup.

The choir then sung the last anthem, "Blessed be thou, Lord God of Israel, our father, for ever and ever. Thine, O Lord, is the greatness and the power, and the victory, and the majesty; for all that is in the heaven and the earth are thine. Thine is the kingdom, O Lord; and thou art exalted as head over all. Both riches and there; and those are exacted as dead over all. Both riches and fromour come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand is to make great, and to give strength unto all. Now, therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name."

At the conclusion, the people shouted, crying out—" God save King George the Fourth! Long live King George! May the King live for ever!"-and amids the sounding of trumpets, the beating efidenms, and the acciamations of the assembly, the King put on his orown, and taking the two sceptres in his hands, again ascended the throne and sested himself, supported and attended as before, until the conclusion of the post-communion service and the blessing.

THE COMMUNION.

Then the Offertory began, the Archbishop reading these sentences:

"Let your light so shire before nime that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

"Charge them who are rich in this world, that they be ready to give, and glad to distribute; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may attain

The King descended from his throne, supported and attended as before; and went to the steps of the altar, and knelt down there.

Grant this, O Lerd, for Sesias Choist's sake, our only Mediator and Astrocats. Astron."

Then the King, streeting, at before; made his record Oblation, offering a Markt week but gold; which the Transarer of the Flouis-hold delivered to the Lord Great Chamberlain, and he to his Majerty. And the Archbishop came to him, and received it in the basin, and placed it upon the altar. After which the Bishop said:—

" O God, who dwellest in the high and body place, with them also who are of an humble spirit; Look down mercifally upon this by servant George, our King, here bumbling himself before thee at thy feotition; and graciously seetle these oblations, which is blumble acknowledgment of thy sovereignty over sill, and of the great bounty to blue in particular, he has now effered up onto theo, prough Jesus Christ, our only mediator and advocate.

Then the King returned to his chalz, and knelt down at his fald-spool, the Archbishop said :--

"Lot us pray for the whole state of Christ's church militant hom on corth:

" We that donner and earnestly repent you of your wins, and wre id love and charity with your neighbours, and intend to lead a new life, fallowing the commandments of Gad, and walking from forth in his boly ways; draw near with faith, and take this holy Secrement to your comfort; and make your humble confession te Amighty God, meelely kneeling upon your knees."
THE GENEBAL CONTESSION.

"Almighty God, Pether of our Lord Jesus Christ, maker of all things; Judge of all men; we acknowledge and bewall our mani-feld sits and wickedness, which we from thus to time most grievusly have committed, by thought, word, and deed, against thy flivine Majesty, provoking most justly the wrath and indignation against us. We do earnestly repent, and are heartly sorry for these our misloings; the remembrance of them is grievous to us. the burden of them is intolerable. Have mercy upon us, mercy upon us, most merciful Futher; for thy Son our Lord Jessa Christ's sake, forgive us all that is past, and grant that we may ever-hereafter serve and please three, in newness of life, to the ho-nour and glory of thy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord.— THE ABSOLUTION.

" Almighty God our heavenly Pather, who of his great mercy hath promised forgiveness of sine to all them that with hearty repentance, and true faith, turn unto him; have merry upon you, pardon and deliver you from all your sins, confirm and strengthen you in all goodness, and bring you to everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

After which was suffice. Hear what comfortable words our Saviour saith unto all that truly turn to him,

After which the Archbishop proceeded, saying, Arch. Lift up your hearts.

Answ. We lift them unto the Lord.

Arch. Let us give thanks unto our Lord God. Answ. It is meet and right so to do.
Then the Archbishop turned to the Lord's table, and said,

It is very meet, right, and our bounden duty, that we should at all times, and in all places, give thanks unto thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty everlasting God:

"Who hast at this time given us thy servant our sovereign King George, to be the Defender of the Faith, and the protector of thy Therefore with angels and arch-angels, and with all the company of heaven, we laud and magnify thy glorious name, evermore praising thee, and saying, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts, beaven and earth are full of thy glory. Glory be to thee, O Lord most high. Amen.

THE PRAYER OF ADDRESS.

"We do not presume to come to this thy table. O merciful God, trusting in our own righteousness, but thy manifold great mercles We are not worthy so much as to gather up the crunibs under thy table. But thou art the same God whose property is always to have mercy; grant us, therefore, gracious God, so to eat the flesh of thy dear Son, Jesus Christ, and to drink his blood, that our sinful bodies may be made clean by his body, our souls washed through his most precious blood; that we may evermore dwell with him and he with us. Amen."

THE PRAYER OF CONSECRATION.

" Almighty God, our heavenly Father, who of thy tender mercy didst give thine only Son Jesus Christ to suffer death upon the cross for our redemption, who made there, (by his one oblation of himself once offered) a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world, and did institute, and in his boly Gospel command us to continue, a perpetual memory of that his precious death to his coming again; here us. O merciful Father, we most humbly beseech thee, and grant that we receiving these thy creatures of bread and wine, according to thy Son our Saviour Jesus Christ's holy institution, in remembrance of his death and passion, may be partakers of his most holy body and blood: who in the same night that he was betrayed took bread, (1) and when he had given thanks he brake it, (2) and gave it to his disciples, saying, Take, eat, (3) this is my hody which is given for you, do this in remembrance of me. Likewise after supper, (4) he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of this, for this (5) is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you and for many, for the remission of sins. Do this, as often as you shall drink it, in remem brance of me. Amen."

While the King received, the Bishop appointed for that service held a towel of white silk, or fine linen, before bim.

Then the Archbishop went on to the Post-Communion, saying-Gar Father which art in heaven; hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever." Amen.

Then was said—" Glory be to God on high, and on earth pence: good will towards men. We praise thee; we bless thee; we worship thee; we glorify thee; we give thanks to thee for thy great glory, O Lord God, heavenly King. God the Father Almighty.

right hand of God the Father, have mercy upon us.

"For thou only art hely, thou only art the Lord, thou only, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, are most high in the glory of God the Father. Amen."

The King returned to his throne upon the theatre, and afterwards

the Archbishop read
THE FINAL PRAYERS.

"Assist us, mercifully, O Lord, in these our supplications and prayers, and dispose the way of thy servants towards the attainment of everlasting salvation, that, among all the changes and chances of this mortal life, they may ever be defended by thy most gracious and ready help, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." "O Lord our God, who upholdest and governest all things in beaven and earth, receive our humble prayers with our thanksgivings, for our Sovereign Lord George, set over us by thy good providence to be our King: And so, together with him, bless all the Royal Family, that they, ever trusting in thy goodness, protected by thy power, and crowned with the favour, may continue before thee in health and peace, in joy and honour, a long and happy life upon earth, and after death may obtain everlasting life and glory in the kingdom of beaven, through the merits and me tion of Jesus Christ our Saviour; who with thee, O Father, and the Holy Spirit liveth and reigneth, ever one God, world without end.

"Almighty God, who hast promised to hear the petition of them that ask in thy Son's name; we beseech thee mercifully to incline thine cars to us that have made now our prayers and supplications unto thee, and grant that those things which we have faithfully ed according to thy will, may effectually be obtained to the relief of our necessity, and to the setting forth of thy glory, through sus Christ our Lord. Amen."

"The peace of God which passeth all understanding keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son lesus Christ our Lord. And the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost be amongst you, and remain with you always. Amen."

Then the King was disrobed of his Royal robe of state, and arrayed in his Royal robe of purple velvet, by the Deputy Lord Great

The Archbishop then delivered the sceptre with the cross into his right hand, and the orb into his left. The Deep delivered the sceptre with the dove to the Nobleman who had before carried it, to bear it in the returning procession.

As soon as the King went into St. Edward's Chapel, the officers of arms called over and arranged the procession for the return to Westminster-hall; and at the moment his Majesty came out of the chapel, the procession moved forward in the following order; except that the noblemen who, in the former procession, bad borne the gold spurs, and St. Edward's stuff, left in St. Edward's Chapel, the orb and the sceptre with the cross, borne by his Majesty, walked in their due places, according to their degrees in the peerage.

RETURN TO THE HALL-THE BANQUET.

While the ceremonial was proceeding in the Abbey preparations were going on in the Hall for the Banquet. The waiters and attendants soon covered the tables with silver plate, napkins, &c. On each side of the Hall were two sideboards covered with massive gold plate.

On each side of the Throne there were placed several tiers covered with rich crimson velvet, and sustaining a vast quantity of magnificent embossed plate. The centre piece represented in relief, splendidly embossed, The Supper of our Lord.

The Royal table was of a somewhat triangular form; it was covered with a rich damask cloth, on which might be seen the Royal arms beautifully and chastely figured, and the arms and mottos of the several Orders. In the centre of this table a most beautiful and rich plateau attracted universal admiration. The cloth was fringed with gold, and golden tassels hung down in all the luxuriance of eastern splendour from its several corners. each side of it there were three chairs for the reception of the Royal Dukes and of Prince Leopold.

During these preparations there was but little to interest the imagination or to excite the sensibility of the fair gazers, who in the morning had manifested an anxiety at once so natural and so laudable, to see with all imaginable minuteness the various movements of this most imposing and impressive ceremouy. Here might have been seen reposing the most graceful and picturesque forms in a culm and undisturbed sleep, and suddenly awaking from perhaps a dream of unusual bliss, to a scene that "gave to airy nothing a local habitation and a name."

At two o'clock the chardeliers were lighted; they contained sixty condles each, and there were twenty-six chandeliers in the Hall There were two beautiful shaded lamps suspended from the ceiling of the Hall, on each side of the throne. On the tables stood twelve branches raised upon a very appropriate pedestal, each of which contained eighteen candles.

The hour selected for lighting up the Hall was too early. The candles were nearly consumed before the expiration of the ceremony, and the general effect did not harmonise well with the surrounding

Soon after the candles were lighted the covering of the tables commenced. Fruits and visads of an exquisitely beautiful appearrance were spread over them with considerable caste, and thus decorated they presented a very delightful appearance.

There were three tables on each side of the Hall, and 56 seats at

For a considerable time before the approach of the procession to the Hall, those who were fortunite enough to have been present at Westminster Abbey preceded the procession, and occupied their sents with all possible expedition. The King, upon his entrance to the Hall, was received with load and long continued acclamations, and cries of "Long live King George the Fourth our Sovereign" were pealed forth from every part of the Hall. His Majesty bowed and acknowledged them with his wonted grace, and moved slowly towards the Royal table, while the band played "God save the King."

His Majesty, upon reaching the Royal tuble, bowed to the Peers and to the people, and retired towards his chamber behind thethrone, amidst acclamations redoubled; and shouts of "God save King George the Fourth" became universal. His Majesty bowed, and again graciously acknowledged the enthusiastic attestation felt strongly, and expressed forcibly by the Peers and People.

His Majesty now wore the new Crown of State, and robes of purple velvet, furred with ermine.

The Barons of the Clique Ports carried the canopy over his Majesty. On reaching the bottom of the steps they stood still while King ascended the platform towards the table.

The procession was thrown into a temporary confusion through the mistake of some of the Aldermen, who advanced too speedily towards the tables, already, as we have before observed, covered with the most delicious viands. The error, however, was soon rectified by one of the Heralds, and the worthy Aldermen were once more placed in their appropriate situation. The procession then moved forwards without interruption.

The Peers retired to their stations at the several tables. His Majesty having retired, the Peers ent of the banquet prepared for them, and considerable festivity was displayed on this occasion. Several lovely young ladies visited their noble friends and relatives while at dinner, and not a few were seen soliciting fruit with looks so eloquent, that the fair suitors were sure to be successful.

About twenty minutes after five o'clock the Hall was cleared by the Hernids and Knight Marshal, which had hitherto presented a motley but magnificent confusion of all descriptions of mobility, gentry, and orders of Knighthood, here and there mixed with very elegantly and orders of Knighthood, here and there mixed with very elegantly dressed females, whose curiosity had anticipated the period of its being gratified with a sight of the tables and refreshments, according to custom after the performance of their services by tenants in grand serjeanty. This was not performed without some difficulty, as the fair fugitives and their 'squires sought to elude the vigilance of their pursuers by flying from one part of the body of the Halt to apother. The centre aisle or promonade was at length cleared, and these votaries of curiosity contented themselves with a precar-ous tenure of situations in the back passages between the tables and the butteries under the galleries on either side.

The Knights Companions, a most elegantly attired and interesting group of persons, who, for the greater part, have written inde-libly, by their heroic exploits, their manes on the pillar of national gratitude to the latest posterity, were then marshalled at the upper end of the Hall, on each side of the grand avenue to the Throne cpu or use mail, on each side of the grand avenue to the Thune plotform, upon which at that moment the Dukes of Suser and Gloucester appeared engaged in conversation with the Princes Augusta and other branches of the Royal Family then seated in the Royal box on the right hand of the Throne. On this elevated platform we also noticed our late Envoy to the Court of Pioresce, Lord Burghersh, splendidly dressed in a General's uniform, decorated with various stars and orders. The Hall note have a second to the various stars and orders. The Hall now being restored to order, and the company being all seated at their respective tables, his Majesty, attended, supported, and his train, as before, with swords borne before him, about six o'clook, returned to the throne, where he was again received with the most unequivocal marks of attachment and affection. He received this fresh mark of the regard of his people with the most evident marks of grateful affection. He seemed scarcely affected by the fatigue he had already undergone, and perfectly cheerful in the contemplation of what he had yet to endure before the completion of that day's most ardson undertaking. He were his crown a little inclined over his right eye, and was in appearance precisely the King which any man would have expected him to be, who had witnessed his amiable manner relarity in A early li

The company at the tables then sat down: and the Barons of the Cinque Ports carried away the cancey as their fee.

Their appearance was truly magnificent, being dressed in the same manner as in the procession. Their splendid trains, notwithstanding they were on borseback, trailed on the floor as they traversed the Hall. Four Sergeants at Arms, with their maces. These were followed by the tastefully dressed band of Gentlemen Pensioners, bearing the dishes of meat. Nothing could exceed the richness of their equipage, which was of scarlet, slashed with blue, richly ornamented with lace, and inaumerable gilt buttons, producing the effect of massive lace, with scarlet stockings, and caps fringed round with ostrich of the Kitchen, As soon as the cloth was laid, 336 silver plates, (the number pected to dine) were laid on the table, each plate having two silver spoons placed near it. All the vessels were richly embossed with various devices. Some of these pieces are of very ancient date—a few of them were marked A R. (Asna Regins), and some C R.

The Earl Marshal, Lord High Steward, and Lord High Constable, then retired, with their faces always to His Majesty, backing their horses out the whole length of the Hall until without the great

The Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, with His Majesty's Capbearer, the Earl of Abingdon, and his Assistant, the Earl of Verulam, being preceded by Black Rod, received from the Officer of the Jewel-office the gilt basin and ewer for His Majesty to wash, attended by the Lord of the Manor of Heydon with the towel. The King rising, delivered his sceptre to the Lord of the Manor of Worksop, and the orb to the Bishop standing on his left hand, the cup-bearer then poured out the water on His Majesty's hand, the Lord of the Manor of Heydon holding the towel.

The Donn of the Chapel Royal then said grace; and His Majesty having taken his seat, the Bishops, his supporters, retired to their dinner

On the King's right hand stood the Lord of the Manor of Work sop holding the sceptre; next to him on the same side, the Lords bearing the four swords; on His Majesty's left hand, the Duke of Devonshire with the orb, and next to him the Deputy Lord Great Chamberlain, and next to him the Duke of Rutland, bearing the sceptre with the dove.

At the end of the table on the King's right hand were sented their Royal Highnesses the Dukes of York, Clarence, and Sussex; and on his left hand the Dukes of Cambridge and Glocester, and the Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg.

The duties of His Majesty's Curver were performed by the Earl of Denbigh; and those of the Assistant-Curver by the Barl of Chichester. The duties of His Majesty's Sewer were performed by the Earl of Mount Edgeumbe; and those of the Assistant-Sewer by the Earl Whitworth.

Then the Deputy appointed by the Lord of the Manor of Addington presented the mess of dillegrout, prepared by the King's Master Cook.

The Lord of the Manor of Wymondley in Hertfordshire, assisted by the King's Cupbearer and his Assistant, received from the Officer by the King's Cupbearer and his Assistant, received from the Omeer of the Jewel-office, and, kneeling, presented to His Majesty a silver gilt cup containing wine; and His Majesty having drank thereof, returned the cup to him for his fee.

The Duke of Argyll, as Great Master of the Household of Scotland, then presented a gold cup of wine; and, His Majesty having drank thereof, returned the cup to him for his fee.

THE CHALLENGE.

Before the second course, the Deputy appointed to officiate as King's Champion, for the Lord of the Manor of Scrivelsby in Linconshire, entered the half on horseback in a complete suit of bright armour, between the Lord High Constable and Deputy Earl Mar-armour, between the Lord High Constable and Deputy Earl Marshal, also on horseback, in the following manner:

Two Trumpets, with the Champion's arms on their banners.

The Sergeant Trumpeter, with his mace on his shoulder.

Two Sergeants at Arms, with their maces on their shoulders.

The Champion's lance, the other on the left band with the Champion's larget, and the arms of Dymoke depicted thereon.

A Herald, with a paper in his hand, containing the challenge.

The Deputy Berl Narshal on borseback, in his robes and coronet, and collar of bis robes and coronet, with the Karl Marshal's staffinhis band, attended by a page.

Four Pages, richly apparelled, attendants on the Champion.

His belimet was of pollshed steel, surmounted by a fall rich bending plume of white ostrich feathers, next of light blue, next red, ing plume of white ostrich feathers, next of light blue, next red, and lastly of an erect black feather. He seemed rather pule in the face, which was of a resolute cast, and ornamented with handsome mustachios. He sat his horse with ease, and the appearance of great firmness, which was no doubt in part attributable to his enormous weight, under which the noble animal that bore him seemed to bend. His armour was extremely massive, and deeply lined and engraven: no part of his body was uncovered; and even the broad circular shoulder blades of the armour were so folded over the culrus, that in action, the body could not but be completely defended at all points. The horse was very richly caparisoned, and wore in his head stall a plume of varied feathers. Nothing could exceed the impression produced by the approach of the Champion and his loyal array.

At the entrance into the Hall, the trampets sounded thrice, and the passage to the King's table being clear. A by the Knight Murshal, the Herald, with a loud voice, proclaimed the Champion's challenge, in the words following:

"If my person, of what degree soever, high or low, shall deny or gainsny our Sovereign Lord King George to Fourth of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Vefender of the Faith, son and next heir to our Sovereign Lord Kin't George the Third, the last King deceased, to be right heir to use Imperial Crown of this United Kingdom, or that he ought not to erroy the same, here is his Champion, who suith that he lieth, and is a false traitor; being ready in person to combat with him, and in thi Conbat will adventure his life against him, on what day soever . hall

The Champion then threw down his gauntlet, which, having lai. a short time upon the ground, the Herald took it up, and delivered it again to the Champion.—They then advanced to the middle of the Hall, where the ceremony was again performed in the same manner.—They then advanced to the steps of the Throne, where the Herald, ascending to the middle of the steps, proclaimed the challenge in the like manner; when the Champion, having throne down his gauntiet, and received it again from the Herald, made a low obelsance to the King. The Prers had repeated, as if with one volce, "God bless the King! God save the King!" which was accompanied by acclamations so loud through all parts of the Hall, that is startled the horses of the Champion, and his noble companions. - Then the cup-bearer, having received from the officer of e Jewel-office, a gold cup and cover, filled with wine, presented the same to the King, and His Majesty drank to the Champion, and sent to him; by the cup-bearer, the said cup, which the Champion (baving put on his gnunflet) received; and in a loud articulate voice, exclaimed; turning round—"Long Life to His Majesty King George the Fourth!"—This was followed by a peal of applause redrank of the wine: after which, making another low obeisance to the King, His Majesty, and being accompanied as before, he departed, back-ing his horse out of the Hall, and taking with him the said cup and cover, as his fee

PROCLAMATION OF THE STYLES.

Immediately after, Garter, attended by Clarenceux, Norroy, Lyon, Ulster, and the rest of the officers of arms, proclaimed His Majesty's styles in Latin, French, and Raglish, three several times; first upon the uppermost step of the elevated platform, next in the middle of the Hall, and lastly, at the bottom of the hall, the officers of arms, before each proclamation, crying "Large-se," in the usual manner. SECOND COURSE.

The Second Course was then served up with the same ceremony as tbe first.

SERVICES IN PURSUANCE OF CLAIMS. Then the Lord of the Manor of Nether Bilsington presented His Majesty with three maple cups.

The office of Chief Butler of England was executed by the Duke

Norfolk, as Earl of Arundel and Lord of the Manor of Keninghall, who received a gold basin and ewer as his fee.

Dinner being concluded, the Lord Mayor and twelve principal

Citizens of Loudon, as Assistants to the Chief Butler of England, accompanied by the King's Cupbearer and Assistant, presented to His Majesty wine in a Gold Cup; and the King having drank thereof returned the Gold Cup to the Lord Mayor as his fee.

The Mayor of Oxford, with the eight other Burgesses of that City, as Assistants to the Lord Mayor and Citizens of London, at Assistant to the Chief Butler of England, in the office of Butler, was conducted to His Majesty, preceded by the King's Cupbearer, and having presented to the King a bowl of wine, received the three Maple Cups for his fee.

The Lord of the Manor of Lyston, pursuant to his claim, then brought up a charger of wafers to His Majesty's table.

The Duke of Athol as Lord of the Life of Man presented

The Duke of Athol, as Lord of the Isle of Man, presented His Majesty with two falcons. Considerable curiosity was excited by the presentment of these beautiful birds, which sut perfectly the arm of his Grace, completely booded, and furnished with bells.

The Duke of Montrose, as Master of the Horse to the King, per formed the office of Serjeant of the Silver Scullery

The Lord of the Barony of Bedford performed the office of Almoner; and the office of Chief Larderer, was performed by the Deputy of the Earl of Abergavenny.

After the dessert was served up, the King's health was anno y the Peers, and drank by them and the whole hall standing, with three times three. The Lord Chancellor, overpowered by his feelings on this propitious occasion, rose, and said, it was usual to drink the health of a subject with three times three, and thought that his subjects ought to drink the Sovereign's health with nine times nine. The choir and additional singers had now been brought forward in front of the Knights Commanders, and the national authern of "God save the King" was sung with incomparable effect. The immense crowd seemed to be electrified by the stanza.

"Scatter his enemies,
"Scatter his enemies,
"And make them fall," which was sung in a corresponding boldness of tone with the invocation, by Mr. Braham. The shouts and applease which instantly followed could only be equalled by a similar demonstration of feeling at the stanza—

"Frustrate their knavish tricks."

In the latter instance, the Ladies seemed first to apply it to recent

By this time the crowd bad completely crowded and choked up the access from the lower part of the Hail to the Royal Platform.
The crowd was dense and impervious, but it completed the splendid and gorgeous appearance of the whole scene. His Majesty caused it to be announced, that he intended drinking the health of the Peers in return. The King then rose, and thealting the Peers for rects in return. The King then ross, and the health of the Peers, and that of his good people. On this announcement, the Peers, who had all risen, bowed low, and the Hall re-echoed with peals on peals of applicase. Non Nobis Domine was admirably sung by the

The only change made in the appearance of the Hall is in the smoval of the splendid gold plate, on each side of the Throne.

After His Majesty quitted the Hall, at about a quarter before eight on Thursday evening, a general rush was made towards the table from whence the King had but just departed; every one was anxious to obtain some remembrance of this ever memorable coremony, and for that purpose seized every decorative or useful article which had served the Peers' tables at the dinner. The Lord Great Chamberlain and some other Officers of State threw themselves on the King's table, and by grasping every thing within their compuss, they succeeded with the utmost difficulty in preserving the gold and silver; it was a complete scramble, many persons bore away in triumph spoons, wine glasses, saltsellers, &c. &c. The Hall was nearly cleared by me o-clock. Several ladies fainted during the day, among whom was Princess Esterhazy, who it appears suffered considerably from the overpowering bent of the day. His Majesty afterwards supped with the Speaker and a select party.

THE QUEEN.

It was scarcely expected that her Majesty would make her appearance, but about half-past six, however, the attention of the as sembly, was suddenly excited, and a rumour that the Queen had arrived at the Abbey door was in general circulation; and at 20 minutes before seven her Majesty's carriage advanced towards the platform. The rush of strangers on the platform was almost over-whelming, and the soldiers were ordered to stand to their arms, and clear the stage. While this was partially effecting, her Majesty's carriage drew up nearly in front of the King's Arms Tavern, close to the platform. She was immediately surrounded by a portion of the crowd which had broken in. She bowed and smiled. Lord Hood descended from the entringe, and went in search of a way of ingress. He proceeded behind the Champion's stable, where there was a gate leading towards the Speaker's house. He then returned to her Majesty, and communicated to her the discovery he had made. Her Majesty alighted; she was handed from her curriage by Lord Hood, and Lady Hood alighted after her. The air now resounded with cries of "Shame! Shame!" and the spectators in the galleries unequivocally expressed their disgust at the exhibition presented to

Lord Hood then led her Majesty to the opening in the platform for Peers? 'lickets, opposite Parliament-street. She ascended the steps, and wa. there asked for her authority. Lord Hood said he had an authority, pulling out of his pocket at the same time a

Her Majesty was then suffered to pass, and descending the steps the other side, she walked on towards the House of Lords, stili followed by contending cries of Shame! and some cries of The Queen, The Queen! Following the crowd, she by accident turned down towards the iron gate leading to the kitchens, and here a notice presented itself to her view, studing that no person was admitted without an order.—Lord Hood now said, her Majesty wished to go to the Abbey; upon which a constable showed her the way towards an opening in the covere, passage leading to Poets' Corner. The guard was at first drawn up to oppose her entrance, but by the command of their officer they withdrew respectfully, and let her Majesty pass. One of the attendants of the Abbey now came forward, and conducted her Majesty to the Abbey door.

Here Lord Hood desired admission for her Majesty The door-keepers drew across the carrance, and requested to see the tickets.

Lord Hood-I present you your Queen, surely it is not necessary for her to have a ticket.

Door-keeper-Our orders are to admit no person without a Peer's

Lord Hood.—This is your Queen, she is entitled to admission without such a form.

The Queen, smiling, but still in some agitation - Yes, I am your ueen, will you admit me?

Door-keeper-My orders are specific, and I feel myself bound to ey them.

The Queen laughed.

Lord Hood-I have a ticket.

Door-keeper-Then, my Lord, we will let you pass upon pro-

Lord Hood now drew from his pocket n Peer's ticket for one person; the original name in whose favour it was drawn was erased, and the name of "Wellington" substituted.

Door-keeper-This will let one person pass, but no more

Lord Hood-Will your Majesty go in alone?

Her Majesty at first assented, but did not persevere. Lord Hood-Am I to understand that you refuse her Majesty Door-keeper-We only act in conformity with our orders.

Mer Mujesty ngain laughed.
Loid Hood—Then you refuse the Queen admission?

A Door-keeper of a superior order then came forward, and was asked by Lord Hood whether any preparations had been made for her Majesty? He answered respectfully in the negative.

Lord Hood - Will your Majesty enter the Abbey without your Ladies?

Her Majesty declined.

Lord Hood then said, that her Majesty had better retire to her carriage. It was clear no provision had been made for her accommodation.

Her Majesty assented.

Some persons within the porch of the Abbey laughed, and uttered some expressions of disrespect.

Lord Hood-We expected to have met at least with the conduct gentlemen. Such conduct is neither manly nor mannerly Her Majesty then retired, leaning on Lord Hood's arm, and folwed by Lady Hood and Lady Hamilton. She was preceded by constables back to the platform, over which she returned—entered her carriage, and was driven off, amidst reiterated shouts of applause and disapprobation.

In her progress to Westminster, her Majesty was not observed by the public until she entered the Park, where a scene was soon opened of noisy bustling familiarity, in consequence of persons running to greet her. By the time of her Majesty's arrival at Story's gate a great conjourse of people had collected, who cheered her. The soldiers at their different posts as her Majesty passed presented arms. About six o'clock her Majesty's carriage attented presented arms, About six o'clock her Majesty's curringe entered Dean's-yard, and from the length of time before it was again seen, it was confidently asserted that her Majesty had been admitted; but at seven o'cleck the carriage was again visible in Parliament-street, her Majesty still seated in it, and not appearing much afscreen, her anjoesy state and the process and allowed by the peculiarity of her situation. The carriage proceeded slowly along, attended by an immense concourse of people, passing Charing-cross, Cockspur-street, Pall Mall, up St. James't-street, and along Piocadilly, to Hammersmith. The multitude kept increasing in number as the carriage moved on. It was accompanied in its progress by some hissing and grouning, as well as by the cheers of a part of the multitude. Her Majesty was dressed in white, and had on her head a cap or bundeau, with a large plume of white ostrich feathers; she appeared in full health.

Accounts differ as to her Majesty's mode of applying for admission to the Coronation; but all agree is the decisive and unquestionable fact, that wherever she applied, she was trented by the decent part of the spectators with marked disapprobation.

Her Majesty communicated on Sunday a laster to the Archbishes.

Her Majesty communicated on Sunday a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in which she trusts that there can be no objection to her being crowned next week. To this communication the Archbishop replied in these terms :-

"The Archbishop of Cauterbury has the honour to acknowledge with all humility the receipt of her Majesty's communication. Her Majesty is undoubtedly aware that the Archbishop chanot stir a single step in the subject matter of it without the commands of the King.
"Lambeth Palace, July 15, 1821."

Her Majesty on Thursday wrote to the King on the same subject, claiming to be crowned on Monday next, by the Archbishop of Canterbury. She also states therein her intention of visiting Edinburgh while his Majesty is absent in Ireland. To this latter communication Lord Sidmouth replied on Friday, in the same terms as before, viz. that the Queens Consurt are not entitled to be crowned, and therefore His Majesty did not think proper to give any orders for her coronation.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS .- The Theatres of Drury Lane, Covent Garden, the English Opera House, the Surrey, Sadler's Wells, &c. were, by command of His Majesty, thrown open to the public, a sufficient number or tickers having been issued on Thursday morning. to persons applying, on giving their names and addresses. Long before the appointed hour, the crowds assembled in attendance were immense, the distribution was rapid, and numbers had the mortification of seeing or hearing the doors closed, and reading the vexatious placerd of "All the Tickets are issued." The houses of course overflowed from the beginning of the evening. The loyalty evinced by the audiences at each Theatre shewed the estimation in which our Monarch is hald by his people. "God save the King" was sung amidst acclamations.

THE PARKS. -- At an early bour in the morning, crowds of welldressed people of both seres, were moving towards the Parks from every direction, and much confusion in consequence took place at the avenues. The first point of attraction was the Green Park, from whence a balloon was to ascend in the foremon. An enclosure had been made at the side of the basin, where the balloon, which was constructed of blue and white silk, was filled. The process of inflation was completed at about half past twelve o'clock, and at one the aëronaut (Mr. Green) was launched into the uir amidst the shouts of the immense multitude who covered the whole extent of the Park. The balloon rose majestically, and as the atmosphere was serene, it continued in sight for more than twenty minutes, taking a north westerly direction. It descended twenty minutes before two, in a field near Potter's Bar, North Minis. The populace then poured into Hyde Park, where arrangements had been made on the most munificent and splendid scale for their en tertainment. Marquess had been erected in various parts of the green; and by the west end of the river a complete fair was comprising booths, with almost every speakes of entertainment, excepting shows. A number of bonts had been hamehed on the river, and in the afternoon the public were entertained with three well contested rowing matches in whereles for munificent prizes. A non-descript bunt of a drugon, after a crocodite in the water, eccasioned much enaugement. In the evening a sort of carnival or fete champetre was given on a scale of unprecedented spleudour, and with a degree of taste and effect that did great credit to the taste and soience of Sir William Congrese, by whom we understand the whole of the arrangements were mu The whole extent of the Serpentine river was illuminated with stars and tasteful devices. At the east end was a grand transparencv. representing his Majesty drawn in a triumphal car, and attended by allegorical characters, surmounted by the crown, with the royal initials, and a profusion of variegated lamps, so elevated above the trees as to be seen in the most imposing and novel manner from the entrance at the corner of the Park. The receiving house, or magazine, at the corner of the river, was illuminated to represent an elegant Grecian temple, which was surmounted by the Royal crown, and had a most pleasing effect, as viewed from the banks of the river. The trunks of all the trees about and adjacent to the banks were hung with variegated lamps, grotesque Chinese lanterns, handsomely painted, and under them, in every direction, were formed dancing parties of well dressed persons, and music was heard in every one of these illuminated groves. The effect produced by this illumination of the river and the park from one end to the other, the general mirth and joy, was equal to any thing that could be imagined of the most splendidand well regulated carnival. At the opening which is formed by the trees on the north side of the river, and on an area judiciously chosen to command all purts of the Park, was made in the evening a display of fire-works. A counter display was made on the side of the river towards Kennington. On the river several pyrosechnic displays were also made. The boats, which rode up and down majestically, were ornamented with Chinese lanterns and illuminated lamps; but the greatest addition to the scene was a grand illuminated car, filled with musicians, and drawn by two elephants, spiendidly caparisoned, as larger as life. By the side of them were placed attendants; with Andian lanterns; and the whole being brilliantly illuminated; was towed round the hanks of thesiver by some illuminated boats. The effect of this car, with the elephonts moving with majesty upon the surface of the river, with the music and banners, was particularly novel and called forth great applause. With these and a number of other amusements, too numerous for us to mention, the public were entertained until a fate hour of the night.

Some of the lowest of the subble which had followed the Queen committed some excesses; they broke the windows of Lord De ha Zouche, and Mr. Williamson, in Hill-street; of Borl Powis, in Borkeloy-square, and of many Noblemon and Gentlemon in Doverstreet, and Albemarie-street, where preparations had been made for illuminating; they also attacked Grillion's Hotel; they demolished the windows of the Marquis of Londonderry; but a party of Horse Guards boming up, they dispersed. They then proceeded to Grosvenor-square, where they demolished the windows in the Duke of Mostrose's house, and in Earl Whitworth's. A party of foot soldiers, however, put them to slight. When they could not find stones, they amused themselves by pelting the servants and carriages who were conspicuous for splendid liveries, with mud; when oir order to pull off their buts for the Queen was not instantly

ILLUMINATIONS.-At the Admiralty, in letters of large dimensions, were the words " God save the King;" a large Anchor, surmounted by a superb Crown, and supported on each side by illuminated flags, borne by sea-houses. On the roof of the building were placed two grand stars, and on the top of the portion the Royal standard. The whole but a most grand and brilliant appearan At the Office of Woods and Forests, on the west front G. R. and Crown.—The Horse Guards, two large and superb stars. Over the arch, under the cupola, in very large letters, G. IV. R. surmounted by the Crown. The same devices were also placed on the back of the building facing the Parade, and bad a splendid effect.—The Treasury, on the north side in the Park, G. IV. R., with a large star on each side, the whole surregented by a Crewn of great-size. On the front of the healthing in Whitshall, G. IV. R. the Crewn with laurel, and olive hranches; Mr. Stacey's Offices, G. R. and Crown; Council Office, G. R. and Crown, supported on each side by brilliant stars. In fact the whole of the Public Offices exhibited a splendid appearance. The Bank of England (which had 16,000 variegated lumps), the Mansion-house, the Companies' Hells, most of the prirate houses of the Nobility and Gentry in the different squares and streets, the theatest, &c. Among the tradesment houses were those of Mr. Peacock, in Salisbury-square, who had a handsome star in front of his house; Mr. Burgess of the Strand, who displayed a brittiancy of highe, over which a large onsign and union flag was suspended, the tout ensemble was pretty.

Many houses at the west end of the town were again Huminuted on Friday night, notwithstunding that it had been officially discountenanced by refraining from illuminating the Public Offices. It the City every thing went off on Thursday with the utmost tranquillity. At the Munsion-house there was not one charge arising out of or occasioned by the proceedings of the day, our did we hear that a window was broken in any quarter of the City.

On Friday, manerous applications were made by persons of rank' to obtain admissions for a sight of the Hall; and the bord Greut Chamberlain's Office was also mandated with letters and earls

Chamberlains Office was the form to the same effect; but the Lords Chamberlain published the following notice:

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, July 22.

NEVER upon the face of the earth was there a ceremony more glorious in its character and attributes, or more in teresting and beautiful in its details, than the Coronation of our beloved KING on Thursday.

We give to-day a correct and authentic account of the proceedings; but who will venture to tell their effect? where is the pen, unless it be found in the hand of a Walter Scott, to describe the witchery of the seene, and the ten

Neither the lustre of gold, nor the waving of banners nor the beamings of jewellery can give that, which the so-lemn festival of Thursday gave. There was a holy feeling in it, not derivable from its mere splendour. The MONARCH was seen by his people receiving the splendid ensigns of power and dominion in the House of God, and in the midst of their prayers and blessings,

Of the enthusiasm of the populace we can give no just ccount-shouts rent the air wherever the KING was seen, We love-ardently and devoutly love-the King; and there are some of our readers far distant in the country, who may think that we are led by our attachment to depict in colours somewhat too glowing, the reception his Majesty met with, for which reason we select the following pass The Morning Chronicle, a paper not very remarkable for its flattery or courtesy towards His MAJESTY's Person or Government.

"The Marquis of Londonderry, whose commanding figure attracted general notice, was loudly and repeatedly cheered as he presedulous; the Noble Marquis bowed, and seemed highly gratified at receiving this mark of public attention. But it would be difficult to describe adequately the ENTHUSIASM with which the appearance of His Majesty was halled by all classes. The Ladies and Gentlemen in the booths stood up, the Gentlemen uncovered (as were she populace who stood between the booths and the platform), AND NOTHING WAS HEARD FROM THE MANY THOUSANDS OF PERBORS PRESENT, BUT OVE UNANIMOUS EXPRESSION OF ESTEEM AND VENERATION. His Majesty appeared to feel deeply: sensible of this mark of DEVOTION and ATTACHMENT ON THE PART OF HIS PROPER, and expressed his satisfaction by bowing repeatedly to those persons who were more immediately within his view."

If we were to point out any particular part of the proceedings as the most strikingly splendid, we should say that the sublimity and grandour of the day were at their some at the moment the challenge was given, after the first course of the diancr. Surely there never could have been -if there have, no history records it-any thing comparable with the scene at that moment. The vast Hall blazing with its thousand lights—the trumpets sounding their change—the glittering armour of the Champion, on his plumed steed;—and how attended?—On one side of him rode the MARQUIS OF ANGLESEA, on the other WELLINGTON! Round about the tables were set the heroes of the age the sages of the land—the pillars of the Church and State. The galleries towering above were filled with women, beaming in beauty and ormanent!—women whese charms, whose virtues, and whose accomplishments are the pride of England, and the envy of every other nation of the On his splendid Throne was the KING, surrounded by his Royal Brothers; on his right were his Sisters and female relations: on itis left the illustrious Ambassadors, assembled-from all parts of the world to do him honour and mage; and here he sat, dispensing his gracious favours, and conferring dignities, which came with double value from his hand.

But when the health of GEORGE THE FOURTH was drank, the multitude seemed to have but one heartvoice;—shouts echoed through the roof;—a cry of Gon BLESS THE KING burst from every tengue—and the prayers and invocations of the glorious assembly were given forth with a zeal and energy which made the welkin

The beauty of the decerations, and the excellent taste of the dresses, particularly these of the King's train-bearers, the Privy Councillors, and the Gentlemen Pensioners, were most strikingly remarkable. With His Majesty's robes we were least satisfied; from their heavi-ness they incumbered and disguised his fine person, and loaded the figure instead of shewing it to advantage; but in those no room is left for the exhibition of taste, their form and fashion being specifically ordained.

The Kent, graciously yielding to the wishes of his subjects to have a free and uninterrupted view of his person, walked before the canopy in the procession, and not imme-diately under it. This afforded a full opportunity to every one of seeing him, of which, had the canopy been immediately ubove his Majesty, they would have been de-

Our readers knew that every Peer was attended at the Banquet by one person, who was habited in a scarlet coat, with a blue sash. We confess, that in young men, or persons whose influence might be inadequate to the procuring admission otherwise, or in the sons of the Peers to be waited on, if of a certain age, the fashion of under-taking the character of servants might be quite excusable, but we are at a loss to understand how Members of Parlia ment, and men holding high and responsible official situations, could consent to wipe glasses, and hand soup about, even for the sake of being where they were. Lord Gwydyr's activity, as Lord Great Chamberlain, was very remarkable; that slender symbol of his office, his wand, not unfrequently came into play upon the backs and shoulders of the tardy or unwilling. One of the Heralds amused us excessively with his anger at his Lord-ship's energy; he told his story to his "brothren in arms" with great feeling, and they appeared to receive it with great sympathy; yet, nevertheless, me believe t was a Lord Great Chamberlain who executed his office more ably or gave more general assisfaction than my Lord Gwydyr.

Aklerman Wood was a good fleat hissed as he walked in the procession ;—this was harsh and indelicate;—the fact of his being present proves that he has renounced his of his being present proves that he has renounced his errors with respect to the Queen; for certainly, neither curiosity, nor the love of good eating (more trying to an Alderman) could so far have got the botter of his principle, as to have led him to dime at the novement of his principle, as to have led him to dime at the novement of his protect face, unless he had seen and acknowledged the absurdity of her alarms and nonetarious to be of the marky.

of her claims and pretensions to be of the party, it will be seen that the Queen, contrary to the grain of her friends and councillors, went to the doors of the Hall and of the Abbey,—and—was turned, away from them. If people, having been fairly warned, choose to subject themselves to affronts, whose business is that?

Notwithstanding the advice given by the Menning Chronicle to the soldiery, she was opposed and obstracted and moreover, hissed and hoofed; and, what must be more mortifying to a lady of her turn of mind, laughed at. One of the crowd close to her bid her go home to her "Brandy and Bergami:" and she retreated from her last GREAT attack discommend, despised, and, if she have any feeling left, covered with shame and mortification.

We copy the following paragraph from the Time of

"We are informed on undoubted authority, that Col. Manage did not at all interfers to stop the admission of her Majestyinte Westminster-hall, nor was any military officer employed in that odious task. It was left to the police-afficers and door-keepersto offer this disgusting indignity to the Queez of England. We my here mention, that from a necessary association with the treatment which this noble scion of the Brunswick stock had on that remorning met from the servants of her royal husband, a cold theil pervaded the whole assembly in the ball when his Majesty, in the

With respect to the first part of this paragraph, we are quite sure that the Times, which is so justous of the appearance of soldiers, and which enumerates at length the different regiments which were in London on Thursday, must rejoice to find that the civil power was quite strong enough to perform every necessary duty without the aid of the mulitary. As to the second part of the pararah about a cold thrill pervading the assembly, the Times "may, indeed, mention it," whenever and wherever it pleases—and nobody will believe them. A more single talschool never was told by a stupid Editor and the us of

The business transacted during the early part of the week we but stilling, the brokers on the Stock Exchange being principally engaged in winding up their accounts for settling day, frithy, the 20th. There was but one triffing defaulter. Buring the whole of the past Account gradual improvement has taken place in the state of affairs generally, which is manifest by the public securities retraining at such prices as to inspire more than ordinary confidence. It was reperted yesternay that a Russian freet had salled against Turkey; this had rather an unpleasant effect upon the Funds, but they are expected to recover their former prices on Monday, Testerday being pay-day, cheques for the differences of the 5 countwere exchanged. MSCIELLANGUES.

We are happy to state that His Misjesty is in good health after the things fitting on Thursday. His Misjesty left tows for Windsor on Friday night.

The interesting ceremony of the Coronation restricts us to a very brief between the passing events of the week. The intelligence by the Ferriga journals state, that the relations between Turker and Russia are coming to a crisis. Baron Strogonoff has broken off his communication with the Forte.—Orders have been given for reducing the St. Helena establishment—hancas Brisice. Mapp is elected Addressian to going abread.—Nr. Serguist Vaughan, we regret to state, hed the misfritune to break his fligh, in consequence of his horse standbling in Leicenter-fields; he is, however, doing well.—An Official Committee are signing at Fife House, for the purpose of reducing public offices. reducing public offices.

MARGATE.—The enthusiasm displayed in this town on the day of the Co manaram.—The enthusiasm displayed in this town on the day of the first conation produced the utmost festivity and rejoicing; the Investigator survey brig, in the roads, formed an interesting object by the display of her select pendant from every part of the ship; the Royal Standard of England was hotsted at the Royal litely; a bullock was roasted whale on the beach, adjoining the new road; a subscription had been raised, and 1500 men, wowen, and children partook of roast heef, plumb pudding, and atrang-beer, sher dinner the health of the King was drank, amidst the most enthusiasis shout. At five o'clock 120 gentlemen of the fown and naighbbourhood ast down to a dinner at the New Town Hall. In the evening fireworks ware enthilited.

On the 1st of August will be published, in 2 vets. 4to, price 4l. 4s. in boards,

"HE UNIVERSAL CAMBIST, and COMMERCIAL IN-THE UNIVERSAL CAMBIST, and COMMERCIAL INSTRUCTOR; being a full and accurate Treatise on the Exchanges. Monies, Weights, and Menaures, of all Trading Nations and their Colonics, with an account of their Banks, Pub is Funds, and Paper Currencies. By P. KELLY, LLD. The Second Edition, revised and enlarged. This Edition contains the result of an extensive and important operation—that of determining the relative Contents of Foreign Weights and Measures, by an actual comparison of their several Standards. This general revision which has long been considered a desideratum in the commercial world, is now effected for the first time, under the sanction and aid of the British Government, by whose order Foreign Standards, duly verified, have been transmitted to Londom by the British Consults abroad, and have been accurately compared with the British Standards at His Majesty's Mint. By this plan of revision and vérification, co rections have been made in the comparative Metrology of almost every country; and considerable errors have been found to exist ever where least expected. Thus, in the established proportion be ween the Weights of England and France, a mistake of many years standing has been discovered; and the correction, which is important, and in favour of England, has been examined and allowed by the official authorities of France. The present Edition likewise contains a Revision of Foreign Exchanges, from recent quotations; and of Foreign Coins, from verified assays.—Printed for the Author; and sold by Messrs. Lackington and Co. Finsbury-square; and by all the principal Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

THE KINGS LEVEE.

On Wednesday His Majesty held a Levee at his Palace in Pull Matl, which for splendour and numbers has been rarely equalled. It is the etiquette, that every person, notwithstanding any previous attendance at Court, should be presented after the Coronation.— The number present, of pobility and others, was estimated at nearly two thousand. A detachment from the King's Guard marched into the Palace-yard from the Old Palace, under the command of Coins, of the Coldstream regiment of Guards. A detachment of the first regiment of Life Guards, under the command of the Earl of Uxbridge, arrived in Waterloo-place, opposite the King's Palace. The Life Guards were dressed in armour, in the style of cuirassiers; two of this corps were stationed in the Hall; one of them measured six feet two inches, and the other six feet two inches and a half.

The King's Pages, the Gentlemen Porters, &c. appeared in their new Coronation uniforms, the coats of purple richly embroidered with gold lace, the waistcoats and breeches of white kerseymere, with gold embroidered buttons and gold lace to the knees. The Yeomen of the Guard had their new partizans given to them at the Coronation; some of their principal officers appeared in their an-tique dresses, with ruffs round their necks, &c. Most of the Household appeared in their Coronation dresses, and all kined hands after the Coronation. Being a Collar day, all the members of the different orders were their collars. The King entered the state apartments soon after the appointed time, and proceeded to receive the complimentary congratulations of the Foreign Princes, the Ambassadors and Ministers, with others specially appointed to our Court, and of a very numerous assemblage of other foreigners, the Cabinet Ministers, that Great Officers of State, and others, who have the privilege of the entrée.

His Majesty then proceeded to his general Levee Room, additionally attended by the Honouruble Corps of Gentlemen Pensioners. In addition to those alluded to, there were present the Dukes of York, Clarence, and Cambridge; the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Llundaff, the Bishop of Chester, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, the Vice-Chancellor, the President of the Royal Academy, the Lord Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, the Chief Baron of the Exchequer of Scotland, the Judge of the Arches' Court, the Chumberlain, Count de Mandelsloh, Charge d'Affaires from the King of Wirtemburg, accompanied by General de Neuffer, the Marquess Santa Cruz, from Spain, the Duke de Gramment, from Frauce, Count Lowenheim, Count de Protorme, the Prince Haltzfeldt, Count Montzon, Count Maltzhan, Count de Stackelberg, from Russia, &c. &c.—Among the presentations were Lieut.—Col. Dance of the 2d Life Guards, Major Gannard Ackers of the Collegement Standard, wheely a contract the Collegement Standard wheely ackers of the General Askew of the Coldstream Guards, who both received the bonour of Knighthood. After the Levee, Major-General Sir C. Philip Belson was introduced to his Majesty in his closet, when his Majesty was pleased to invest him with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Bath.

THE KING'S DRAWING-ROOM.

On Thursday his Majesty held the first Drawing-Room since the celebration of his Coronation, at the late Queen's House, in St. James's Park, where he arrived at about 12 o'clock, escorted by a party of the Oxford Elues, en culrassier, from his Pulace in Pall-Mall. The fineness of the weather had drawn together great numhers of spectators in the direction of the Mall, who remained for hours rivetted to their respective stands. Nothing could exceed the effect of the carriage line, and the profusion of feathers and diamonds which decorated the ladies who were driven in succession to the Drawing-Room. After the arrival of his Majesty, their Royal Highnesses the Duke of York, the Duke and Duchess of Clarence, the Duchess of Kent, and Princess Sophia Matilda, all followed in full State, and were escorted by the military.

The company in general, which began to congregate so early as half after 12 o'clock, continued to arrive till nearly four.

Dressed in a Field Marshal's uniform, and decorated with the splendid Orders which belong to him, the King, after giving some private audiences, at two o'clock proceeded to the Entrée where the Great Officers of State, Cabinet Ministers, the Foreign Ambassadors and Plenipotentiaries, were assembled. Here the Duchess Downger de Frias was introduced to his Majesty by the Marchioness of Londonderry, when she took leave of the King previous to her return home. Afterwards the King received, near the throne, the congratulations of those assembled. There were present—the Ambassadors or Ministers of Russia, the Netherlands, Austria, Spain, France, Sardinia, Bavaria, Denmark, Suxony, America, Naples, Sweden, Prussia, Wirtemberg, the Consul General for the Hanse Towns, the Count of Mandelstoh, Charge d'Affairs, from his Majesty the King of Wirtemburg, accompanied by General Neuffer; Marquis Santa Cruz, Count Lowenbeilm, the Duke de Grammont, Count de Prolorme, Count Pollen, General Federburg, Count of Paleschutz, Count de Prolorme, Count Dollen, General Felesberto, C. Brant and his son, Gen. Nareshkein, Prince Parlard, the Duke Fernan Nuaez, Prince Haltzfield, Count Maltzhan, Count de Stackelberg, Count Vibgum, and Count De; the Princess Sanalaider was presented by Countess Ludolf, the Lady of the Neapolitan Minister; the Prince Sanalalder was presented by his Excellency Count Ludolf. Prince Sanadier was presented, is was Prince Metternich, and Count Esterhazy, &c. The splendid dresses of the numerous assemblage of foreigners had a very magnificent appearance.

Among the dresses of the ladies, which were all elegant and eautiful, were the following :-

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCESS AUGUSTA-Over a petticon of white satin, wore a splendid dress of silver lama, richly sprigged with magnificent and unique wreaths of grenades, terminated with graceful plaits and azure blue and silver, finished with dentelle d'argent, forming un elegant und gruceful border; corsage und manienu of azure blue satin, superbly strewed with silver, and finished with massy dentelle d'argent; the whole embellished with a profusion of exquisitely fine blond and brilliants: bend-dress ue of silver, with a magnificent plume of ostrich feathers and brilliants.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCESS SOPHIA OF GLOCCESTER. A magnificent dress of silver lama, with a splendid horder of rich flowers in brilliant and matted silver, surmounted with a handsome garatiure of silver tulle, tastefully relieved with superb hands of silver; the trulu silver tissue, trimmed with silver; the body and le trim silver; the whole was perfectly elegant and magnificent.

Royal Highness wore a profusion of diamonds and feathers.

THE PRINCESS ESTERHAZY.—A superb real silver lama robe and apronatudded with diamonds, real silver lama train, lined with rich French white satin: head-dress, a magnificent plume of white feathers and superb diamonds. Queen Elizabeth's ruff.

MARCHIONESS OF LONDONDERRY .- A beautiful embroidered white dress, with flower and satin, train of rich French white gros de Naples, lined with rich satin of the same colour, apron studded de Naples, linea with rich some of the same of the same all over with costly brilliants and diamonds, forming a complete diadem, with a magnificent plume of white feathers. Queen Elizabeth's ruff.

THE MARCHIONESS OF SALISBURY - A yellow and silver striped gauze robe, embroidered in chenille flowers and silver; train of yellow satin, richly trimmed with tulle and silver; head-dress, feathers and diamonds.

Among the numerous presentations were Lady Cranborne, on her marriage, and the Hou. Miss Strutt, on Lady Charlotte Strutt being created Baroness Rayleigh.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JULY 21.—Yesterday morning, Lady Hamilton had the honour of being admitted to a private audience with his Majesty.

We received three days ago, the intelligence that Baron de Stro-gonoff, the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, had been conveyed to the prison of the Seven Towers, but we were not permitted to publish it. The Journal de Paris of yesterday, however, announces that he is closely confined in the said prison, and that the Grand Seignior has not paid the least attention to the interference of the Christian Ambassadors who have demanded that the Baron should be sent to Odessa .- (Constitutionnel.)

On Thursday, various engravings, representing subjects relative to the death and tomb of Buomparte, were seized at several printers' shops.

The Gazette de France announces that preparations are making for the coronation of his Majesty Louis XVIII. Another Journal adds, that the Crown has been finished for some time; and that for the last two months the different artificers have been engaged in preparing the decorations for the Throne, and the costumes to be orn on the occasion.

It is stated, that the result of the Grand Council, lately held at Vienna, at which the Emperor presided, was an order for considerably augmenting the Austrian force on the Turkish frontiers. It is added, that the offer of mediation between Russia and the Porte has been renewed. From Spain it is stated, that a new conspiracy has been discovered in Murcia, and that the number of arrests to which it has led, is very considerable.

We learn, by advices from Berlin, that the object of the conspiracy, which has lately been discovered, was to introduce the Spanish Constitution into Prussia. A Nobleman, residing in the vicinity of Dantzic, was at the head of these innovators, who intended, in the first place, to take possession, by surprise, of Stutgard, a strong town, in which is a depot of arms belonging to the Landwehr. Fourteen persons have been arrested .- Gaz. de Fran

July 23.—The galliot La Nantaise, commanded by M. Couhitte. Lieutenant of the Royal Navy, arrived at Toulon on the 17th inst. from Smyrna, which port ske left on the 17th of June. At the time of her sailing, the Pacha was vainly endeavouring to maintain his authority. The populace had triumphed, and were massacring the Greeks; and the utmost consternation prevailed, from the expectation that their fury would become more desperate, when they learned the intelligence that the Greeks, on the 7th or 8th instant, and burned a Turkish vessel off the Isle of Mytilene, after having cut the thronts of nearly the whole of her crew. But for the firmness of M. David, Consul-General, and of M. le Normand de Kergrist, Commandant of the French squadron, the quarter of the town in which the Franks resided would have been burned to the ground, during the first days of June.

It is affirmed, that on the 19th Instant, Monsieur the Marquis de Lafayette deposited on the bureau of the Chamber of Deputies, a petition from General Gourgaud (who has recently obtained leave to re-enter France), and Colonel Fabrier, soliciting the intervention of the Chamber, to obtain the conveyance to France of the corpse of Bonaparte.—Gazette de France.

An Article from Hamburgh gives an account of a grand entertainment in the saloon D'Apollon, in honour of the Coronation of the King of England, at which W. Mellish, Esq. the British Charge D'Affaires presided.

The Austrian Observer of the 10th, on the authority of letters from Becharest, states that a letter from the Greek camp has been received here, addressed by the Insurgents to the Turkish Governor, in which they beg for an amnesty, and declare themselves ready, in case it should be granted, "to return to obedience, from which they have been led astray by Ypsilanti's delusive intrigues and seducing promises." The Kiaja of the Pacha immediately gave orders to have proclamations every where made, that the amaesty required should be given to all insurgents who lay down their arms and return to obedience.

LIBRON, JULY 4.—During the sitting of the Cortes yesterday, a note from the Ministor of the Marine was received, stating that the squadron in which his Majesty returned was in sight.

JULY 5 .- In the sitting of the Cortes yesterday, which began at half past eight o'clock, the President communicated several Notes from the Ministers of the Marine and the Interior.

At a quarter before twelve, a message was received that his Majesty would land immediately. It was five o'clock when his Majesty entered the hall of the Cortes, supported by the Secretary, Folgueiras, preceded by the Deputation of the Cortes, and accompanied by all the Officers of his Royal Household; and having taken his seat on the throne, the Book of the Holy Gospel was presented to him by the President, on which his Majesty laying his hand, pronounced the following Oath:—

"I, John VI. by the grace of God, and by the Constitution, King of the United Kingdoms of Portugal, Brazil, and Algarre, sweur upon the Holy Gospels to maintain the Catholic Apostolic Roman Religion, and cause to be observed the bases of the Constitution decreed by the General, Extraordinary, and Constitutional Cortes of the Portuguese Nation, and the Constitution which they shall make, and to be in all respects faithful to the said Nation."

After this solemn oath was taken, the President delivered a most energetic and pathetic speech, to which his Mujesty listened with particular attention, and evident signs of approbation. His Ma-jesty then left the Hall, accompanied by the Deputation.

July 17.—A long Report from the Committee of Commerce was read, relative to the true meaning of the 26th Article of the Treaty of Commerce with Great Britain, made in 1810. After the Report had been read, some discussion arose, in which several Deputies spoke of the immense loss which Portugal sustained by the reduction that had been made of the duties on English woollen manufactures, from 30 to 15 per cent. and it was resolved that they should pay in future 30 per cent. as they had done till the year 1813.

JULY 12.--The Regency announced, on the 4th, that it had laid down its functions, in consequence of his Majesty having assumed the reius of Government. The Cortes have returned thanks to the Members of the Regency for their conduct in the exercise of their important duties.

VIENNA .- JULY 12 .- Baron de Strogonoff is still at Bujukdere, and is strictly watched. He is neither permitted to send nor to ceive letters. He succeeded in embarking his family for Odes but the populace insulted them most grossly during their emberkation; they even fired upon the ship. Some Greek families have also escaped. According to letters from Smyrna, dated the 17th of June, the troops of Asia had forced their entrance into the town, and killed the Governor, the Cadi and the Mollah, who endeavoured to keep them out. They afterwards pillaged and assassinated all the Christians who had not taken refuge on board the European ships. This ill-fated town is ruined for a long period to come.

GENOA, JULY 14.—By the steam-boat, just arrived from Venice, we learn that intelligence had arrived there from Corfu, stating that the Turkish fleet, consisting of twelve ships of war, had been defeated by the Greek squadron off Mytilene; but this news requires confirmation.'

MADRID, JULY 12 .- Their Majesties lest this capital yesterday morning for the baths of Saccdon. The orators of the club La Fontana became so violent in their invectives, and excited so much suspicion of the King's conduct, that the Ministers, intimidated, presented a petition to the King, urging him to convoke the extraordinary Cortes. The King wrote on the margin of the petition as follows:—" I have pledged my Royal word that I would convoke the extraordinary Cortes before the 1st of October, which I will do. I see no motive for hastening the re-assembling of the deputies. The general opinion of Spain cannot be represented by a few individuals, whose intemperate conduct is known."

Every day perfidious rumours are disseminated from the club La Fontana; the populace reply by cries of "The hammer!" alluding to the instrument with which the Canon Vinnesa was murdered. Yesterday evening, three assassinations took place in the Rue St.

John of this enpital.

A Neapolitan Revolutionary Committee is established at Barce 10nn. At the end of the month of June, a ship, under Spanish co-lours, laden with arms and ammunition, and having on board several Neapolitan individuals, sailed from that port for the coast of Naples, doubtless having in view to foment some plot.—Quotidienne.

SMYRNA, JUNE 19.—The town of Sydonia, which the Turks call

Ivalia, in which were 30,000 Christians, has just been burnt to the ground by the Turks, who put all capable of bearing arms to the sword, and took their wives and children into the interior as slaves.

A letter received yesterlay from the Agent to Lloyd's at Smyrns, dated June 19, states, that "the city since our last has continued subject to disorder, but no injury has been sustained by Europeans.

At present the town is quiet." An embargo is luid on all vessels in BARBADOES, JUNE 12 .- A most dreadful fire took place at Bridge-town, June 10, supposed to have originated through the carelessness of a baker. The conflagration spread in all directions with a most alarming rapidity, and the town presented a scene of confusion had dismay. The inhabitants, so great was their terror, were unable to render the least assistance until the arrival of the 4th, or King's own regiment, who, with the utmost alacrity and sang froid, threw aside their arms and accourrements, ru-he flarmes, and at the hazard of their lives, saved many individuals from the devouring element, and preserved much valuable property. The exertions of the officers and men will leave a lasting impression on the inhabitants of this island. We have not yet been able to ascertain the amount of the property destroyed, but it must be very considerable, as upwards of sixty houses were consumed. We are much indebted to General Mainwaring for his exertions, and the promptussistance afforded by the Garrison, but for which, the greater Port of the town must have been burned.

Port o Brllo, April 25.—"We have nows from Lima in fifty days, by way of Gunyaquil, which is not bad. It seems that San Martin lad retrograded from his position, and sought to avoid any formal attack, or general battle. He however, had tost 400 men in one action. His army suffers from the vermin (bicho) and scurvy; he is in want of resources, and especially of money, and all the assistance which Torretagle de Valles has been able to send him, is 100.000 piastres."

We have received American papers to the end of June. They inform us that all the Spanish part of St. Domingo had been revo-lutionized. Commodore Aury's flag was left flying at Monte Christi, and the revolutionary troops had marched against Port Plate. This mighty change, winch makes the whole island of Hayti one undivided and independent State, is said to have been effected without any bloodshed, in consequence of the perfect harmony which prevailed in the operations of Commodore Aury and President Boyer.

Extract of a letter from the Agent to Lloyd's at Cape Haytien, Hati, dated June 17:—"The Dutch ship Harriet, Captain Erickson, left this on the 3d instant for Gonaives, and was boarded on the same day off Port du Paix by a schooner privateer, said to belong to the squadron-under the command of Aury. The Supercargo and Captain, together with a passenger, were treated with great cruelty: they had pistols presented to their heads, and were threatened with immediate death if they did not confess whether or no they had money on board, and if any, to state where it was hid. After keeping possession of the vessel for some time, and plundering a few ars, she was at last liberated, and arrived in safety at the port of destination.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT. OF COMMON PLEAS, TURSDAY.

Davis v. the Bank of England.—This action was brought to recover the price of 10,000l. 3 per Cent. Consois. and 75l. Long Annuity, the property of the plaintiff, which had stood in his name, and was transferred by a forged power of attorney, by his brother, Captain Davis, who escaped from Giltspur-street in the month of April, last year.

Lady Davis proved the forgery of the plaintiff's name to three different powers of attorney, given to Messrs. Drummond, bankers, to sell and transfer the stock in question.

Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet stated, for the Bank, that this matter had been in Chancery, and that the plaintiff, in answer to the Bill, admitted, while his brother was in custody on the charge of forgery on Messrs. Drummonds, viz. on the 5th of March, 1820, that he had said to him, "As you have been forging on a stranger, have you done any thing with my property?" In reply to which Capt. Davis said, "I have taken your 10,0001. 3 per Cents. and 751. Long Annuities." The Learned Sergeant contended, that as Capt. Davis remained in prison until the 7th of April, when he escaped he was bound, in the intermediate time, to have given the Bank notice of the forgery, who might have taken means to prevent his escape from prison, and have made him amenable to civil and criminal justice The Chief Justice observed, that whatever might be the result of this new and singular case, in his opinion, the Bank of England had exercised a sound discretion in bringing it before a Jury. With respect to the law of the case, if the plaintiff, after he had knowdedge of the frauduent transfer of his stock, concealed the fact from the Bank, it was sufficient that they had suffered injury from that concealment, to entitle them to a verdict. The Jury found a verdict for the defendants.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, TUESDAY.

The King v. Bere.—This was an information filed by the Attorney-General against the defendant for a seditious libel, published in The Republican on the 20th of October, 1820, printed by Jane Carlile.

The Solicitor-General stated this to be a gross libel on His Ma iesty. The defendant stood in the situation of a servant to Mrs. Carlile, and sold The Republican in which the libel was published, which was in the following words:—"There is not one vice that the King can put his hand on his heart and say I am innocent of. He has inherited the gross obstinacy of his father, the avarice and meanness of his mother, without any of their domestic qualities, and to this he has added all that time has taught or conjuctured?" and to this he has added all that vice has taught or conjectured."

Mr. Justice Best charged the Jury that a more gross or scand lous libel had never been published concerning the King, or their

The Jury immediately found the defendant Guilty.

The King v. Mary Ann Carlile.— The defendant, the sister of Richard Carlile, was indicted by the Society for the Suppression of Vice, for the publication of a blasphemous Libel on the Holy

At the request of the defendant, the Jury were asked if they were members of the Society for the Suppression of Vice? They all answered in the negative,

The libel spoke of the Bible as a book so full of wickedness that it could not be the word of God,

The defendant had no Counsel, and put in a written defence, which was read by the officer.

Mr. Justice Best interrupted a statement in the defence, which declared the common law to be a common abuse, and said he could not allow that part to be read.—The defendant would not expunge in

The Learned Judge charged the Jury, declaring the character of the libel to be scandalous and blasphemous, and, without besitation, they found the defendant—Guilly.

The defendant, in the course of the trial, was overcome by the ent, and fainted. She was taken out of Court to recover.

The King v. Mary Ann Carlile.— This was an indicument prebent, and fainted.

ferred by the Constitutional Association against the same defendant, for publishing a seditious libel on the Government.

The libellous matter was a pamphlet, purporting to be a letter by Sir F. Burdett to the Reformers of Manchester, in which they were told that the people of this country have no Constitution. There was some sense in the Spanish Constitution; but the British Constitution was all corruption. Our laws were corrupt and partial Reform would happen when the existing authorities of the kingdom cease to have power. The writer did not mean to say one word about insurrection; yet he added, there might be a time when insurrection would be necessary, &c.

After the libel had been rend, the publication was proved by two witnesses, one of whom was Horatio Orton. The pumphlet was en in the hand of the defendant.

Mr. H. Cooper, as Counsel for the defendant, read the libel, and contended that it was no more than a Constitutional Address to the People of England. He cited the arguments of Lord Erskine on the trial of Paine, to prove that the prosecution of articles of this description only brought them into notice. If suffered to pass unnoticed they would do no mischief. The Press from whence they emanated would correct the abuse. The Society for the Supression of Vice, on one occasion, undertook to suppress brothels by hanging lights at the doors. That stratagem, however, did no good. The public frequented them, and the lights guided country persons to the spot, where they were placed as beacons of danger. In the State of Virginia the Legislature had abolished the law applicable to libels, and the Press was wisely left to correct its own licentious ness. The Learned Gentleman contended that the unfostunate defendant had been decoyed into the publication of the work by the agents of the Constitutional Society, whose proceedings ought to receive no encouragement from a British Jury.

Judge Best, in his charge to the Jury, observed that the question they had to decide was, whether the publication was a libel or not. If the prosecution had been preferred by the lowest person in so-ciety, still, if it was a libel, they were bound by their onths to fine a verdict of guilty. The Learned Judge professed himself a friend to the liberty of the Press. Decent, reasonable discussion of the affairs of Government, with a view to instruct the lower classes of society, the law would allow; and if a few sparks were emitted where the intention was good, the law would not interfere; but no law, no country would permit its Government to be held up to public odium as wicked and tyrannical. That was not a publication within the liberty of the Press. They had nothing to do with the law in Virginia; it might be good there, but it was not the law of England. The Learned Judge rend the publication, and declared it to be a libel on the Government of the country. He left the Jury to say whether it was fair and reasonable discussion. If it was, he told them to find for the defendant. If, on the contrary, they considered it a libel, they were bound to find the defendant guilty.

The Jury retired to consider their verdict, and about an after sent a note to the Judge to say they had no hope of coming speedily to a decision.

The Judge then sent for the Jury, and on their appearance in Court asked if he could communicate any information upon the law - One of the Jurors said, in answer, they were on their oaths, and required no further communication from his Lordship.

They then withdrew again to the room they had left, and at eight communicated to the officer a wish that a note might be sent to their families not to expect them home before to-m morning, as there was not the least prospect of coming to a decision

The Jury continued out till twenty minutes past eleven on Tues day morning, (nineteen hours), when, each party consenting, a juro

FRIDAY .- The King v. Weaver .- This was a prosecution against the defendant for a libel on Lady Wrottesley, which appeared in the John Bull.

This case was called on twice, but none of the Special Jury empannelled were in attendance : when called on a third time, two appeared. The Chief Justice observed upon the non-attendance the Jurymen who had been summoned.—At length Mr. Scarlett

The Solicitor-General addressed the Jury as Counsel for the de fendant. He said it was not the intention of the defendant to deny the publication was libellous, and therefore he submitted to a verdict of guilty, reserving whathe might have to say in extenuation, for another time and place.

Mr. Scarlett, who appeared for the prosecution, observed that he could not object to a verdict of guilty being recorded, but he made no admissions or reservations in consequence thereof.

The Chief Justice said the defendant had permitted a verdict to pass against him, and the Jury would find the defendant guilty.

The Jury accordingly delivered a verdict of Guilty.

SHERIFF'S COURT, THURSDAY,

On this the defendant wrote a note to the plaintiff, desiring to see him on husiness; not suspecting any and there, instead of business, he assaulted foul play, he went the plaintiff, struck him several times with a whip, broke it into pleces upon him, and he received some violent contusions on the lence given by the medical attendant) his ead : and (from the ox life was considered to be in danger. - Verdict for the plaintiff, Damages 8001.

OLD BAILEY.

TUESDAY.—James M'Cartey, aged 22, James Joues, aged 27, Thomas Lee, aged 22, Richard Roebottom, aged 22, and William Hardy, aged 27, were indicted for the wilful murder of William Cogle, at Westminster, on Monday, the 18th of June last. In another count they were indicted for unhawfully and riotously assembling with divers persons unknown, and assaulting and beating several of His Majesty's subjects. All the prisoners are soldiers.

Thomas Ashton deposed, that he lodged at the bouse of the deceased Mr. Cogle. On the evening of the 18th of June, there was a disturbance, and several soldiers entered the house. A man, in the dress of a drummer, made a cut at him with his sword, which missed him, but struck the deceased, and felled him to the ground. Witness escaped through the back way, over some gardens. He could not swear to the persons of the prisoners; the drummer, M'Cartey, was in the bouse. Witness could not swear it was the same drummer that struck at him, Thomas Cha man, a private in the West Middlesex Militia, lodged at the house of the decensed, and was standing at the do saw a great mole coming up the street (Orchard-street) from the new way. Rocho ttom and M'Cassey were in the mob. The sol-diers came up to the house, and one of them said, "These are the bottom entered the house first, and three or four followed. He had a piece of paling in his hand; M'Carrey had a sword; most of the soldiers sticks. M'Cartey entered the house with his naked award, and stood in the passage; he runds a cut at Ashton, the last witness, but missed him, and cut Cogle's head. Ashton escaped; M'Cartey made another out at Cogle', but he could not tell whether it cut him The first blow felled the deceased to the ground, and the blood issued from the wound. Other soldiers rushed in; witness ran up stars and fainted on the bed from the effects of the beating he had received on the head, and saw nothing more.

Several witnesses were called in corroboration of some foregoing testimony.

Mr. Stevenson, House Surgeon to Westminster Hospital, stated that the deceased was brought in about nine o'clock. He examined him, and found a wound over the right eye-brow, two inches and a half in length, and about half an inch in breadth; the skull was fractured, and the broken part of the bone pressed upon the brain.

The wound or fracture was the cause of his death.

The prisoners put in a written defence, in which they that the mob were the aggressors. M'Carrey admitted in it that he krew his sword, threatening to strike the first one that attacked him, which be was obliged to do in his own defence.

Several witnesses were called to show that the mob were the

N. Dolbin, a private in the Coldstream Guards, deposed, that some men were playing at murbles at the Marquis of Granby; that Roebottom was tipsey, and kicked one of the murbles; the boys others then came up, and attacked him and witness, who were knocked down several times; in consequence of the beating he received witness fainted away, and was afterwards taken to the watch-house by some military men.

A number of witnesses, soldiers and others, confirmed the testimony for the degrees and attributed the whole futal consequences.

mony for the defence, and attributed the whole fatal consequences to the violent assault on the soldiers by the mob, who were described to be armed with various weapons. One witness swore that M'Cartey was not near the house of Cogle on that evening, and that a man armed with a pitchfork attacked the soldiers.

The Drum-major of the regiment to which M'Cartey belonged, stated, that he was at his quarters by nine o'clock. M'Cartey has a brother, who is also a drummer, and much like him in size and appearance.

At eight o'clock Mr. Justice Holroyd recapitulated the whole of At eight o'clock Mr. Justice Horroyd recapituated the whole of the evidence in an extremely perspicuous and able manner. At ten the Learned Judge finished, and the Jury retired; and at half-past ten the Jury returned into Court, and brought in a versict of— Guilty of Manslaughter against James M'Cartey, the drummer, and Richard Roebottom, and acquitted the other three.

WEDNESDAY.—Thomas Patmore was put to the bar, on an indictment, containing three counts, charging him with, in the first instance, cutting and stabbing, with intent to kill; in the second, with intent to disable; and in the third, with cutting and stabbing with a knife, on the 14th of June last, in the parish of St. George, Hanover-square, Lieut-Gen. Wm. Eden.

Lieutemant-General William Eden stated, that the prisoner had been servant to him for eight years, and left him in March, 1814; the prisoner married the servant of Mrs. Simpson, the sister of the General, and he thinking they would be more happy together than apart, the wife came to live with him. They left him about eight months afterwards, but not finding their expectations realised, Mrs. Pat-more again returned to live with Mrs. Simpson, about two years and a half ago. The General returned, on the 21st of May, from abroad, and on the 3d of June the prisoner came to his house and inquired for him; the conversation turned on the wife of Patmore and the General, seeing him to be very much intoxicated, ordered him to go away; he refused, and in order to get rid of him a constable was sent for; he did not see him again until the 14thof June, when the prisoner came to his sister's house, and asked to see him; he went into the hall, where he saw Wm. Hamilton, the servant of his (the General's) sister, in some measure opposing the intrusion. To a question of the General, "What do you want with trusion. To a question of the General, "What do you want with me?" the prisoner suid, "You have seduced my wife, and I have proof of it." Witness replied, "Upon my word and honour it is false, and if you have any proof of it, produce it." The prisoner was quite sober, but appeared very wild in his looks. The General stepped back about three paces, without turning his face from the prisoner, when he saw him have a large knife in his loft hand. Patmore ran at him, and thrust the knife about two inches and a half into his right breast. He also made several other stabs at him, which be parried, and in doing which his hands were severely cut.

Cross-examined.—The General described the wounds he had received, particularly that in the breast, which he uncovered to the Jury. He did not suffer any pain from them, otherwise than lying down the same afternoon, in consequence of the loss of blood, amounting to 30 or 40 oz. The prisoner, after the act was committed, said was sorry for it. He had not seen him for seven years, though be had given him a written character in 1818. The price not appear at the time to lahous under any extreme agitation or distress of mind. On the 3d of Jane he was beastly drunk, but on the 14th, the day of the outrage, he appeared perfectly sober. He, General Eden, did not use any coarse language, though he could not say that he might not have called him a drunken fellow.

[Here the weapon was produced. It was about six or seven inches in length, covered with blood, and had the appearance of a butcher's sticking knife.]

Sir Wm. Eden saw the General, Wm. Harniston, and the prisoner, struggling on the ground. William was in the act of pulling the prisoner off; he, Sir William, with the help of a servant, pulled the

W. Hamilton's evidence then went to corroborate the testimony of the General, with the addition that the prisoner said; "this has come to something at hist."

Mr. H. Hearne seposed as to the state in which he found the General. Had the blow on the breast been struck with the right hand, it would probably have proved fatal. The wounds on the hands would not of themselves have been particularly dangerous.

nands would not of themselves here been particularly uningerous. The General, he had no doubt, lost two pints of blood:

The General was again called, and devied, in the most pointed terms, any connexion either directly or indirectly with either Mrs. Patmore or her sister. He had in fact been out of England during the whole period since her return to his sister's service, until the 3d of time.

The prisoner made no defence, but left it to his Counsel. Charlotte Lewin remembered her sister going to the hospital to lie-in. She had once denied her brother coming into the house; the prisoner was never refused after her sister's return; she (the witness) had a child, but was not married. Three persons were called to character. The first, Mr. Turner, deposed to the prisoner being of a hasty temper. The second, Mr. Barber, sen, with whom the prisoner had lived, thought him latterly dejected more than usual; he could not account for the cause. The third, Mr. Barber, jun. thought him a very humane man; he was at times more dejected than others.

Mr. Justice Burroughs summed up, and the Jury having consulted for a short time, found the prisoner—Guilty.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We thank our " WESTMINSTER WELL-WISHER." CALBAR has not written the name of the person insulted plainly ough to be read; perhaps he will favour us again. The Queen's Man ocems to be wreng about Barber Beau-MONT, at least if our Coronation correspondent is right; we shall enquire further. When such people as Mr. Burber Beaumont declare, that "they must give her up," her case must be desperate indeed.

A SCHOLAR is mistaken in supposing that we over instanated that the Queen was well received on the Coronation day.

The "SILENT OBSERVER," and our correspondent from "YAR-MOUTH." shall not be everlooked.

The QUEST OF THE KNIGHT seems a little out of date, clever as it is; besides, what is the beginning without the end? We sld like to hear farther from our correspondent.

TAUROPHILUS will perceive that the OLD TIMES has been obliged to eat its own words on the subject of Safron Walden. We ne very thankful for his communication, which corroborates (were it necessary) the accounts we know received of the harmony and conviviality of the Coronation rejoicings at that place.

We are obliged to "A LOYAL MAN," at Chelsea, for his letter and good wishes.—Our Norfolk friend A. will accept our best

The song sent by a Constant Readen does great credit to its enthor's loyalty, and, "sung ofter dinner" had, no doubt, its proper affect; we doubt whether, in a month's time, the gentleman who wrote it would like to see it in print.

In answer to a "NEAR RELATION," we can only say, that we do not know who the proprietors and managers of the Adelphi Chapel are, nor who Mr. Hunt of Chichester is; but we will make proper enquiries, and have them up before the public next week, if we find them guilty of the conduct ascribed to them.

PHILOPATRIS must excuse our not noticing him last week. All the puffs inserted in this Paper are paidfor, and inserted avowed-ly as advertisements: in so far as that goes he charges us wrongly; but in his observation upon a particular advertisement, he is correct,—it was inserted thoughtlessly, in the absence of the Editor and Proprietor, and was the cause of as much mortification to them, when they saw it, as it could have been of disgust to Philo-PATRIS. Such a thing will never occur again. We hope PHILO-

PATRIE. Such a tring will never occur again. We hope Philo-PATRIE will send us what he mentioned as a peace-offering. We have not room for the letter to Doctor Randolph, who preached a most extraordinary sermon on the Coronation, at Bristol. We are surprised that our correspondent should have taken so much notice of it: the Doctor's talents are as well known as his politics, and the mischievous tendency of the latter is almays corrected by the meanners of the former

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, July 29

THE Times newspaper of yesterday publishes a long article, descriptive of an imposition which was practised upon it some months since. We will merely copy the beginning of the article; (the rest of it appears perfectly uninteresting to any body but the parties who have been deceived:) and just call the attention of our readers to the grounds and authorities upon which the Times newspaper, thinks itself justified in abusing and vilifying every thing like loyalty towards our beloved King.
" imposition practised on " the times."

"Nearly six months have now elapsed since His Majesty first visited the two national theatres; and it will be recollected, that on the second occasion we stated, on authority which we thought sefficient, THAT A PARTY HAD BEEN PREVIOUSLY INTRODUCED THE SAKE OF BESTOWING APPLACES AND THIS WE DID FROM NO DISRESPECT TO THE KING, but merely to show, that the measures pursued by his Ministers, in the great contest between himself and his Consort, were thought to stand in med of many laws to the contest between himself and his Consort, were thought to great contest between himself and his Consort, were thought to stand in need of venal support; whereas, if Ministers persued that course which was most conducive to their master's honour, His Majesty might always rely upon the unbought and disinterested applause of his subjects. On the promulgation of that statement we received a letter, of which the following is a copy:—

"Bedford-row, Thursday."

" TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

"Sig.—In corroboration of the statement in your paper to-day, I send you the names of some of the Ultrus who were engaged in heating up for loyalists to applaud the King at the theatres:

"Sir Chas. Flower, Mr. Nath. Gould,

"Sir Chas. Flower, Mr. Nath. Gould,
"Alderman Rothwell, Mr. Wm. H. Bodkin,

"Mr. John Hall, Mr. Tim. Courts.
"These, and a few such worthies, had a previous meeting at the Mendicity-office, on Tuesday, where the notable scheme was concocted. "A REAL BUT NOT AN ULTRA-LOYALIST." "The body of the letter was written in a fegued hand; whereas the initials in the corner appeared to be the undisguised and natu-ral autograph of the writer. The place of residence and initials together gave rise to a supposition, that the letter might have been written by Mr. William Tooke, the honorary solicitor to the Mendicity Society, in the office of which the meeting, previous to the going to the theatre, was said to have taken place. To that gentleman, therefore, we sent the following note:—

"The Editor of The Times presents his compliments to Mr. Tooke, and having received a letter with the initials 'W. T.' in the corner, wishes to know most confidentially whether the intelligence conveyed in it has the respectable authority of Mr. Tooke for its foundation."

"Mr. Tooke disavowing all knowledge of the matter, we next day inserted a notice to correspondents, requesting that the letter transmitted to us might be authenticated by the confidential communication of the writer's name. Upon the publication of this notice we received the following, marked in the corner 'private:'

"In confidence,

" WM. TOOKE."

"The words 'in confidence' were, as before, in the disguised hand, but 'William Tooke' was written in a more free and unconstrained manner. Here, therefore, we were certain that a for-gery of Mr. Tooke's initials and name had been committed; and in consequence we again sent to the gentleman whose hand writing was thus fraudulently imitated, and who again denied any knowledge of the writing, though the name and initials were the exact representation of his band."

Our readers will perceive by this statement, that the Times, with a very respectful feeling towards his Majesty, told a plump, bare-faced, and unqualified LIE—upon what they thought sufficient authority. Why do they not produce that authority?

It will be observed, that the hoaxing letter is only corroborative of that, which the Old Times, "MERELY to shew "that the measures of Ministers were thought to stand in " need of venal support," had previously inserted; and that when the Old Times received the cheering communication, which verified (anonymously) their statement of a fact, of which it is clear they knew nothing, the editor writes to Mr. Tooke, and "wishes to know most confidentially whether the intelligence conveyed in it has the respectable authority of Mr. Tooke for its foundation?"

Let us recollect that this question is put after the statement, that parties were introduced to applaud the King, had appeared in the Paper.

It is vastly amusing to observe the nature of the com-munications upon which the old Times dares to make statements; and we think, after this exposure, its readers will believe its assertions with a caution proportionate to its known malevolence, its flagrant falsehood, and its detected credulity.

THE QUEEN.

The old Times says, the Queen is certainly going to the north; for which reason we believe that she is going into the west; her Italian hangers-on and her boy Billy are in that quarter already; besides, a vessel may be freighted for Italy at one of the western ports with much greater facility than in Scotland.

The speculation in the public securities, during the past week, has been very extensive, but there have been a variety of causes by which the Funds have been much de-pressed; the apparent misunderstanding between Russia and Turkey has been one of the chief causes, added to which, we may notice the rise of one penny per ounce of silver on Friday, and the great exertions made by a very strong body of Jobbers to cause a decline in the public so-curities, in which they have succeeded, being aided by the different circumstances we have noticed. It was asserted yesterday that a Russian declaration of war against Turkey had been published. From the tenor of advices received in town yesterday from St. Petersburgh, as well as from the Turkish seat of Government, we are enabled to give a flat contradiction to it. The depression of the Foreign Exchanges, which in the beginning of the week operated against the Funds, no doubt still affects them, and will probably continue to do so until the French Loan shall have been contracted for. Yesterday afternoon the Funds were 2 per Cent. under what they were at the termination of the last Account. Consols opened yesterday morning at 75½ for Money, and 76½ for the Account, but they declined very fast, and finally closed at 75½ for Money, and 76½ for the Account. Advices from Paris, dated Wednesday, state the 5 per Cents. at 85: 85.

ALDERMAN WOOD.

There never was, perhaps, an instance of conduct so in-explicable as that of Alderman Wood on the day of the

We have a sovereign contempt for Wood's intellect, but we believe him, in his own circle, to be an hospitable good sort of man, and the association with any thing like a Queen, in any way, was likely enough to turn his silly head, and make him do ten thousand foolish things; but we confess we thought that his personal attachment to her was genuine.

It is notorious that the Moores, and the Wilsons, and the Hobhouses, and the Bennetts, and the Humes, and that class of men, only wanted to use her as an engine likely to be serviceable to their purposes. Old Lord Fitzwilliam, and that set, personally to annoy the King; while Tierney, and the regular Whigs, set her in their front rank to batter down the case of the enemy, and clear the road to office. That this is the fact it is evident. The divisions in the House shew how long the Whigs collectively supported her, and how suddenly and simultaneously they abandoned her. Wilson cannot now even endure her name; Hume disowns her; and the ladies have (we believe we may say universally) left her,-always excepting Lady Anne and Lady Hood.

These people all had their motives—it was evident from the first; but Wood—that smirking smiling bag-man, Wood, had no sinister views—he did not want to be Chancellor of the Exchequer, nor did he wish his wife to be created a Countess, nor his son to be made Grand Cross of Bergami's order. His was said to be true genuine affection for her Majesty, and we believed it.

But what are we to say when we find Alderman Wood joining in the King's procession to a ceremony, from the sight of which his great protegé had been excluded? What shall we say when we see him eating his dinner, and drinking his wine jollily, in the very Hall, the door of which had been shut in great Rusty-fusty's face in the morning? We know Wood is not rich; but while there was a "travellers' room' unoccupied in any second-rate inn in the country, where he could have eat his honest rasher of bacon and eggs, at his own proper charge, we could not have suspected even him of such consummate meanness as to have fed at the board of the KING he had uniformly insulted and outraged, and from which the avowed object of his esteem and veneration had been deservedly and ignominiously turned, amidst the hissings, hootings, and jeerings of the populace.

We thought—indeed were sure, when we saw him there, that even Wood had found out his error, and retracted his avowed opinions about the Queen; but we were mistaken; he has been with her since, and if he reported truly what he saw in Westminster-hall on the glorious 19th of July, we think her Majesty will not be pleased to find that he was present on any account.

A correspondent tells us, that Wood's brother, a fellow who dates every event of his life from the year of Matthew's mayoralty, laid a wager, to a considerable amount, that the Queen would go to the Hall on the day of the Coronation; and that Matthew went to Westminster to satisfy the party wagering that he did not influence her in making the visit. Of ing that he did not influence her in making the visit. this we know nothing, and should rather attribute such sporting propensities to the Alderman's son, whose memorable party at the Piazza Coffee House, and subsequent good luck with young Theliuson, stand recorded in the annals of gambling.

Whatever might be the motive, we can only judge by facts; and really, and dispassionately, we must say a more extraordinary piece of conduct never has fallen under our eye. The Queen's own behaviour is certainly of the most particular cast—claiming to be crowned, and then asking to have a box to see the Coronation; and then, being refused that, fulling back upon her former request, and desiring again to be crowned as last Monday. But then the Queen is a droff eccentric body, and loves hoaxes and fun, but that the grave addle-pated Matthew Wood should be led, either from a love of turtle, or from a curiosity not natural to such minds as his, to tuck his feet under the table at a Royal Banquet, and swell the numbers of the train in the King's triumph, is beyond us to understand.

Perhaps the Livery of London, who take an interest in such people as Aldermen, might like to be edified on this point.

MISS CARLILE.

The Times of Thursday displays its malevolence and stu-pidity with considerable effect, in discussing the very extra-ordinary occurrence, which took place at Guildhalt on the preceding day—the diamissal of the Jury in consequence of their not being able to agree upon a verdict, after having been shut up for eighteen hours.

The case was that of the wretched Mary Anne Carlile. The Times dismisses her " with pity." In this instance, we really believe, that "pity is akin to love;" nor is this unnatural; for it appears by the way in which the Editor characterizes her, that there is sufficient resemblance between them to excite at least a sympathetic feeling in his breast.

He says " a better education and more happy connexions might have rendered her an useful, rather than an injurious member of society." We are not quite so clear as to the utility of this Editor in any capacity; but at all events, if happier connexions had not kept him clear of so disgraceful a paper as the Times, a better education would have been of infinite service to him in the conduct of it.

The truth is, however, that even the Times is ashamed of advocating the cause of the Carlile Family. And it requires a good deal of trimming and shuffling to get a plausible pretence for attacking the "Constitutional Association." The Times alludes to the fact, that a true bill has been found against that Society, and maintains that, for that reason no Jury could be found to find a verdict against a person prosecuted by them.

The Times admits, with the greatest liberality, (because it is impossible not to admit)—that a man indicted for horsestealing may prosecute another for arson- of which sort of cross indictment we ourselves may probably give the Times and the public in general a very entertaining specimen ere long; but he will not allow that the "Constitutional Sohave any right to prosecute Mary Anne Carlile, because they, to answer some catchpenny purpose, have had a true bill found against them for an undefined crime.

Miss Carlile, (taking the tone of the Times-we mean the Times newspaper) said, that "no member of the Constitutional Society was fit to serve on a Jury that was to try her." Can such pert grovelling, and absurd insolence be vindicated by any man who can read and write—can the editor of a paper, once respectable, make up his mind to qualify or palliate such ridiculous bombast?

We confess, that we are not such violent admirers of the Constitutional Society as many of our neighbours, nor have we ever supported it with the warmth of those, with whom we generally agree in politics; but, can the Editor of the Times look at the list of subscribers to that association—a list comprising a host of all that is great and good, valourous and virtuous, noble and wealthy, honest and honourable; and then debase itself so far as to take the same line with the draggle-tailed daughter of Richard Carlile, and support her eping sneer at a body of persons, whose shoes about would be happy to brush, if any of them would suffer such a person to be in their service.

The Times says " at the moment we write, we know not the name of one Juryman empanuelled," for which rea we are inclined to believe that the Editor had the list of the whole twelve before him, on his table; indeed, interested as the Times was in the cause, it is highly improbable that he had not; at all events, the praises he bestows upon those gentlemen must be very limited, for by the report in his own paper, it appears, that in the outset, they divided two to one against the defendant, and the majority were beaten by the force of habit. Your Radicals are thin, cadaveraus, water-drinking, cold-blooded animals, addicted to fasting and foul lines, and by the mere dint of habitual abstinence, they were out the jolly John Bull stomachs of their opponents, who panted for the comforts of their loyal and happy homes.

We remember a case, (and we dare say the Morning Chronicle could give us the precise date of it,) of a newspaper, prosecuted for an infamous libel upon an illustriess lady, now dead, wherein the defendants were saved by ONE erson, on the Jury, who took the precaution of sending for his great coat into the Jury room, in the pockets of which was deposited, provender for two days; by this ingenious device he did—that which we believe to have been done on Wednesday-starved his adversaries into compliance.

We do not know what cause the Times may have to re joice at the present supposed defeat of the Constitutional Association, we know that in the case we allude to, there was no great credit given either to the defendants or their friend, for the mode in which their acquittal was accomplished.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

DIVESTING ourselves of all political feeling for the moment, we cannot but look at the conduct of the Old Times newspaper with wonder.

We remember the Old Times a well regulated and respectable paper; it evinced both talent and diligence; and a wide circulation and extensive sale, justly rewarded the exertions of those who conducted it.

Really, and seriously, we are astonished, when we con-semplate that paper now. We know that at a meeting of the proprietors it was carried by a majority of one voice, that it would be most profitable and advantageous to espouse the Queen's cause; and, as we believe, the Queen pays the Times very handsomely for its services, we should not be disposed to find fault with its zeal in her behalf, because it is its duty to make the best of the case it is hired to advocate; but we are lost in amazement when we find that this is done not by the refutation of assertions or statements made against the Queen, not by the production of any authenticated circum-stances favourable to her, but by the use of the grossest and most decided falsehoods that man in his ignorance or impudence ever put to paper-falsehoods not only detectable, but detected.

The most barefaced and impudent lie ever put forth in orint, was the history of the "cold thrill," in Westminster Hall, upon the proclamation of the King, as Duke of Brunswick. We have actually inquired of at least fifty persons, who were present at the ceremony, in various parts of the Hall, and they declare, not only that they felt no cold thrill but that neither they, nor their neighbours, right or left, knew that the King was proclaimed as Duke of Brunswick at all; which, considering the way in which the style was read, in the three languages, does not so much surprise us.

The next absurd lie which the Times told, is one about the -y, and the Highlander and the pistol. Every Countess Abody who knows anything about it, knows that the Peeresses sat, in Westminster Hall, where no man, Scottish or English, did sit, except four pages, and therefore, this Countess could not have made the exclamation the Times asserts she did, without a speaking trumpet, nor have seen this pistol without a telescope. In the next place, the Times knew, as well as we do now, that the Scotchman was Mr. Mac Naughton; and in the last place, if the Countess did not sit in the Peeresses' gallery, it must have been the Countess of Annesly, who according to their account, made this speech; and we most readily leave the Times and her Ladyship to settle the affair between them.

In their accounts of provincial rejoicings, the Old Times seems to have brought falsehood and misrepresentation to a point never excelled-if ever equalled by the public pro-

An elaborate account of Queenism at Satiron Walden with the detail of tearing an ox to pieces, is given in the Times with the greatest gravity and circumstantiality. "The whole of which (says Mr. Thomas Hall, the Town Clerk) is a PALPABLE FALSEHOOD." His letter the Times inserts, and gives the lie to all its own assertions.

Such contradictions will, doubtless, arrive in due time from the mere distant places which are made the subject of the misrepresentation of the Old Times.

In some parts the affected simplicity of the Old Times is amusing enough. In giving a description of the festival at Carlisle, it says—"In the afternoon some violent Radicals crowned an ass, but what object they could have in performing such a ridiculous act we cannot discover." This is downright stupidity; -is not the Times aware that these are the very people who would have crowned the Queen, and the having been denied her in town, in compliment to her Majesty they performed the caremony with her proxy

But that which surprises us more, if it does not disgust us so much, is the stickling of the Old Times for the popularity of the Queen, in the face of fact and truth.

The Queen went to the Abbey and Hall on the Coronation day, and was (as she was told she would be) refused admittance. This the old Times may say, and say truly, was the act of the Government!—but what part did the people take?—Cries of "Be off!" "Shame!" "Go Home!" "Go to your brandy and Bergami!" "Go to Como!" raog in the Queen's ears; —hisses assailed her; — groams were uttered round her; and laughter at the ridiculous appearance the discomfitted virago made filled the measure of her mortification. Can the old Times contradict as well as it can assert Can it contradict that, which thousands and tens of thousands

As to the Coronation itself, how is it that the old Times and the Chronicle disagree so widely upon the point?—the Times insists upon it that the Coronation went off coldly; the Chromicle tells us, that "wherever the King was seen shouts rent the air; that his reception was enthusiastic, and that amongst the thousands and tens of thousands of all classes assembled, nothing was heard but one general acclamation of esteem and veneration."

We can answer the question: - The Chronicle, violent and bitter as it is,—unjust as are its aspersions, and maticious as are its inuendos, has something like a character to support; and, therefore, though in a small way, and where there was no intr of detection, the Chronicle would lie as zealously as the chimes, yet the Chronicle is too shrewd and cunning to ak falsehoods, which half a million of people can controvert and refute from their own knowledge and experience; therefore as in this case honesty is mally the best policy, the politic Chromicle is honester than the Times.

But there is one thing which surprises us more than all, which is the obstinacy and weakness of the Old Times, in accepting the Queen's bounty, and still advocating her cause; for the plaim reason :- we know quite enough of the construction of that Paper to know, that the men who write or admit the praises of "Carolina-Columbina" into the columns of their journal, care no more about her than Whitbread or Wilson, or Hume or Wood, or any of these politicians, farther than she answers their purpose. We certainly do not know how many copies the Queen takes for circulation in places where the Old Times never was heard of before, but this we do know, that with all the force thus given to its dissemination, the sale of the Old Times has fallen nearly one half since it espoused her Majesty's cause.

This, independently of the decrease of profit, which must make her gracious countenance rather a disadvantage, must, we should think, convince the people of the Old Times, if not satisfactorily, at least pretty clearly, that the Queen's popularity (if she be popular) lies among those persons whose minds are not adequate to the enjoyment of reading.

The truth is, that with fishwomen and servants out of place, persons of the lowest character, the Queen is still popular; but it is also the truth, that a cause supported by misrepresentation never can prosper, and if the Times persists in its systematic falsehood down it must go; for upon a very simple principle, and barring the pun, it is evident that any thing which lies perpetually cannot stand at all.

THE QUEEN'S CORONATION.

A letter came to our office, directed "To the Editor." upon opening which we discovered it to be from a nobleman, (who shall be nameless) and intended for the " Old Times." it was evidently meant for publication, we do not see why we should not insert it, particularly as we give it a greater circulation than the Paper to which it was addressed.

We confess we doubt the authenticity of the document; first, because the name of the parish church, where the ceremony it records took place does not appear; and secondly, because it comes from a correspondent to the Old Times.

(CIRCULAR.) Her Majesty having gone to several doors of Westminster Abbey, and Westminster Hall, on Thursday, where her Majesty was, in an unmanly and unmannerly way, refused admittance, and treated very rudely by the civil power; her Majesty, having got up very early on Saturday morning, consulted her friends, and having taken all their opinions, (which were decidedly against it) determined to be crowned as last Monday, upon which her Majesty issued her orders by the twopenny-post to summon all persons who would come to the ceremony; upon which they assembled in their proper places, and the ceremony took place at twelve o'clock, several very respectable people having collected together, the pro-cession moved to the parish church in the following order: LADY ANNE HAMILTON

Fifteen PAGES (of Letter-Press) The Procession closed with another Party of THE QUEEN'S TRUMPETS.

Upon reaching the church, Lord Hood, as Lord Great Chamberlain, acting for Baron Bergami, marshalled those who walked; and the procession opening, her Majesty was conducted to her place near the altar. Some confusion arose at this part of the caremony, by the discovery that the Crown, which was of pure white earthenware, and of the shape of a high-crowned hat, with a very narrow rim, had been broken by the carelessness of Prince William of Brownlow-street, who excused himself by stating that his namesake the Prioce, who carried his traip, would insist upon looking at it, and putting his finger into it several times, as they walked along, by which silly conduct the thing had been cracked. Some demur arose as to what could be done, but the Curate furnished a temporary Crown, of another fashion, from the vestry-room, which was placed on her Majesty's head by the Rev. Mr. Fellowes, the organ playing Handel's Coronation

Her Majesty seemed to suffer a good deal in the early part of the ceremony; but by the careful attention of Doctor Bo-land, she supported berself till nearly two o'clock, when she became so overpowered as to require the aid of several persons to conduct her to her state ............................ Upon her retiring, the procession moved to the common, where her MAJESTY WAS DRUNK with enthusiasm. The mob afterwards separated quietly.

The account of the Banquet is not contained in this letter; but if our chance correspondent should favour us with a detail of the proceedings, we will give them a place in our next.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,-The following is an extract from a letter which I have received from a friend at Stockton-upon-Tees; if you choose to insert it in your valuable Paper, it is much at your service. ZELIA.

"I hope the Coronation of our excellent King passed off as well in town as it did here. I think the inhabitants of Stockton are truly loyal, and all His Majesty's subjects, except those who are misled by factious publications and Radical orators. Lord Stewart's corps of cavalry was here; and when they stood before the Town-hall, the band playing "God save the King," they were surrounded by the people, who joined heart and voice in the national hymnu-it was delightful to see and hear the upanimous loyalty. One solimiscreant endeavoured to create a riot; but not a creature seconded him; and a Ball in the evening, with a convivial party at the Red Lion, gave a convincing proof of the real loyalty which exists here. In short, if be proofs of loyalty, His Majesty has not a more loyal set of subjects than the inhabitants of this pretty neat town of Stockton. I have been reading an account of the Coronation in a vile Paper called the Traceller, and, however garbled the account may be, it is evident that loyalty was the prevailing feeling; notwithstanding the endeavours of the ble Queen and her hirelings to make the contrary appear; but what a lamentable thing it is, that a contemptible woman should have the power to set a nation in a ferment. And who but herself would have attempted to force their way into the presence of the Majesty and nobles of England after such a trial? Poor wretched woman! can she ever think of her death-bed?"

" Ringing of bells, and making a neise, " Firing of casnon, and shouting of boys"

THEATRES.

THE Haymarket continues open: we have received a very able letter on this subject, in which we are rated soundly for suggesting the propriety of playing three of the "light pieces peculiar to this theatre" in the course of the evening, instead of the classical Comedies which are at the present moment so admirably acted at Covent Garden. Our correspondent, who signs himself "DRAMATICUS," differs with us, and asks us, (and with good reason) "how the pieces peculiar to the Haymarket can be played without the actors peculiar to the Hay-market?" and instances such things as "Teazing made easy— Pigeons and Crows—and Exit by Mistake" in which he enquires, "who would endure that gogmagog actor, Mr. Tay-leure, or that lump of doughy dulness, Mr. Baker, in the place of the admirable Liston, or the vivacious Jones.

"DRAMATICUS" is certainly right, and we agree with him in believing, that none of these pieces could have held their ground one night, if the present "awkward squad" had originally performed them; and we are so far ready to retract that which we said on the subject in our last number but one, yet we maintain that there are pieces of a light cast, whose intrinsic merit would sustain them, even with bad acting, the performance of which, would not carry with it the air of rivalry with Covent Garden, and of bringing into competition, Mr. Rudd, and Mr. Charles Kemble, Mr. Tayleure, and Mr. Liston, or Mr. anybody they have in their company, with

Our ignorance of theatrical politics, and the definitions of the Thespia: Dictionary, has led us into another error. We, "poor silly souls," thought that "stage manager" meant, in the cant of the art, the man who managed the stage; but it seems we are mistaken.

"DRAMATICUS," (who appears to know a thing or two), vindicates Mr. Terry from our censure, and asks a certain number of questions, as if he were well found in answers. He inquires, who engaged the present company—who did this, and who did that; and concludes by the interrogatory— Was Mr. Terry employed, or consulted—and if we do not know that he was, what right we have to attack him for things in which he has no conceru?

We will answer "DRAMATICUS" very fairly; we know nothing about it—nor do we wish to know more than is merely necessary to secure, if possible, the best attainable amusement for the public. We certainly did imagine, when we saw by the bills, that Mr. Terry was stage manager, that it was his duty to try, engage, and bring forward actors and actresses, and indeed arrange the whole of the stage business; therefore, when we see the stage worse managed than stage ever was, we think ourselves justified in attributing the blame to him who is made responsible to the public, in the bills, for its direction; but as it appears we are wrong, we will thank "DRAMATICUS" to favour us again, and let us know if he can, who is to bear the onus. We confess we have our suspicions, and think, in the niggardly arrangements of the Theatre, we trace the hand of Mr. Winston, who is one of the proprietors, and, not improbably, the most active in the management, or rather mis-management of the concern.

In the operatic department, Guy MANNERING, and LOVE IN A VILLAGE, have been revived; in the former, Miss R. Corri appeared to much advantage-Mrs. H. Johnstone was inefficient in Meg Merrilles; it is not in her line—the naïvete, the archness, and the vivacity, for which she is eminent, can not be adapted to the terrific hag: it was painful to see her

In LOVE IN A VILLAGE we have little to praise; Mr. Williams was good enough in Justice Woodcock, and has taken (we are not vain enough to say our) the hint of subduing his voice, which makes him much more acceptable as an actor. Mr. Leoni Lee, is Braham spun out; his singing is a close imitation of Braham's, and not the worst we have heard; but to accommodate his own voice, he chose to leave out some of the best songs, and introduce the modern trash of "Is there a heart that never loved." Of Rosetta and Lucinda, enacted by Miss Carew and Mrs. Garrick, we will ("in mercy's sake") not speak; but we must notice the assurance and vulgarity of a Mr. Ward, who played Hawthorn. His Irish accent was totally out of place in the English Squire; its strong character surprised us, because, when we saw him play an Irish part in THE RIVALS, there was not the slightest brogne observable in his dialect.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Garrick did not perform the part. An apology was made for her by Mr. Younger, and a Mrs. Coveney was her substitute.

At Drury Lane, Mr. Kean has re-appeared. This performer, having shewn what he calls "his round unvarnished tale" to the Americans, seems to have made somewhat a precipitate retreat from their free and enlightened Republic.

His acting, in RICHARD THE THIRD has been so often criticised, that no remark upon it can have the air of novelty. because his friends and devotees have rung all the changes upon the "fine bits," and the impartial observer has detected all the varieties of faults with which his acting abounds.

We should s -- - (always, and from his first appearance to this hour, having held him very very cheap indeed) that his defects have most strikingly increased; his pauses are longerhis gruntings hoarser—his quackeries more glaring, and his whole style of performance changed for the worse; and we hardly thought this possible.

It appears very likely that Mr. Kean will discover, in England as well as America, that although Shakespeare does not diminish in value at particular seasons, he may. The season when his merits will be duly appreciated and rewarded, will be that, in which men think for themselves, and cease to be led by newspaper critics, (who, at the solicitation of the late Mr. Whitbread, wrote UP Mr. Kean, as an act of reconciliation, after Mr. Whitbread's apology to them); and when, with impartial eyes and ears, they choose independently to distinguish eloquence, grace, and talent, from vulgarity, de-formity, and ignorance. We believe such a golden age to be far distant, and think Mr. Kean may, therefore, carry on the great game of HUMBUG for some time to come, in perfect security.

If we wished to shew with what gravity that illustrious ieu is now conducted, we should merely observe, that a depuvenon, consisting of Messrs. Elliston, Russell, and Winston, to the theatre. The newspapers add, "the entrance to the theatre was surrounded by a crowd to witness his arrival!!!

The play of RICHARD THE THIRD was miserably acted, and the house was by no means full. Mrs. Egerton, who has before distinguished herself as a partisan of the Queen, seemed most energetically to emphasize any passages which occurred in her part, convertible to existing circumstances, and which might be construed favourably to her Majesty.

We really are surprised at this behaviour, in a person of respectability, such as Mrs. Egerton appears to be; were she an unprincipled woman, living in adultery with any man, whose name she assumed, while he had a wife living, we could account for such zeal in such a cause, but that a married lady, of correct conduct, and regular habits, should volunteer such an expression of her opinions upon politics and morality, seems quite miraculous.

Mr. Kean has been seized with a Boston fever. This complaint is said to have originated in a cold, contracted by playing in empty houses.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,-As a set-off against the defeat of her most gracious Majesty the Queen, in her late insolent claim to equality with the Sovereign, and to revive the spirits of the disconsolate Whigs, whose manifold disasters excite the most heartfelt compassion, the Burgesses of Berwick-upon-Tweed with their usual discrimination, voted, on Friday last, the freedom of their borough to that indefatigable Statesman, Joseph Hume, Esq. M. P. for Aberdeen. The following circumstances are truly of a very curious description:—
Some time ago, it seems that Joseph, receiving information from one of his emissaries, that the Barrack Master of Berwick, whose salary amounts to something less than the enor-mons sum of 2001. per annum—(will such extravagance never have an end?)—was so unprincipled as to attend to the management of his farm, about twelve miles distant from Berwick when his presence was not necessary at the stores, brought the matter, with many others of a similar nature, lately before Parliament; and some of the Barrack Master's "damn'd good natured friends," thinking it a fine opportunity of quizzing him, laid a train to present the Aberdonian with the freedom of the borough. Their intention, concealing the motives which gave rise to it, was first communicated to a superannuated cheesemonger, and after it had fermented for sundry days in his brain-pan, (brains, alas! he hath not) and the congenial skull-cap of an electioneering agent of Lord Ossulston, (on whose influence in the borough of Berwick, by the way, may be inscribed "fuit,") it was finally resolved upon that one of their satellites, whose light, at all times, is merely a reflection from his superior, should present a motion to that effect to the Guildry.

It was accordingly presented, the mover, seconder, cheesemonger, and the original contrivers of the plan, "trembling alive all over," for the fate of their motion, exerted all their influence to have it carried; and partly by persuasions and promises, but more effectually with divers tankards of ale, judiciously administered, they effected their purposc. This was no difficulty, with men who, Esau-like, would barter away their birthright for a mess of pottage! and to this class of beings the voting was almost exclusively confined; the more respectable and reflecting portion of the community standing aloof, conceiving it incredible that their brethren could be so purblind and gullable as to support the measure. Many rere indifferent as to its fate, and not a few forbore attending the Guildball, maliciously wishing, for the humour of the thing, that the hoax might be successful. Thus, what with the incredulity and indifference of the one party, and the anxiety and exertion of the other, the motion was carried by a sweeping majority. Of this number, it is perhaps possible, that one-tenth might have heard, by accident, of the Member's name, but it is certain that, of the remainder, not seveneighths ever dreamt of his existence. They would just as readily have voted for the Honourable Member's horse, (if he

It would have lighted up even the woe-begone countenance of her Majesty with a smile, to hear the various contradictory reasons given by the independents for supporting the motion; one, with the genuine guttural croak of Northumberland, the Shibbaleth of "our" good town," said, he voted for it because he "heard how the gentleman was a more better orwator as Lord Ossulston;" another, "because he was a Martinel." a bidd undertend the more would not come to the contraction. Wradical;" a third, understood the man would not come to the borough to take meadow and stint money;" and a fourth, drily observed, "he meant to vote a ticket next week to another scavenger." In short, most of their votes were given " they knew not why, and cared not wherefore."

The exultation of the Whigs, on their victory, such as it was, bordered on delirium. They could scarcely have expressed more delight had an earthquake swallowed up the Ministry, or a rebellion endangered the Government,-Nothing was to be seen but smiles—nothing heard but the song of victory. The peals from the belfry, (albeit at war with harmony) were lost amid their uproarious congratulations: a stranger, without being thought fanciful, might have taken them for a company of Bacchanals, led on by the genius of discord; or a troop of Bedlamites, broken loose from the salutary restraints of a dark cell, strait waistcoats, and a bread and water diet. The joke at length got wind, and the friends of the people retreated to their homes, dubious whether to rejoice at their success, or grieve at the hoax so successfully played off against them. A SUBSCRIBER. Berwick-upon-Tweed, July 14, 1821.

The burgesses of Berwick-upon-Tweed are, as it might naturally be expected, disgusted at the extraordinary and gratuitous avowal made by their present representative. Sir Francis Blake, in a published advertisement. The politics of Sir Francis Blake are not those of his constituents—he was brought to their notice by Whio party, and very many highly respectable men, as Whigs, supported him, but they now most sorely repent their choice, as either Sir Francis Blake has changed his politics since his election, or Whigs are become Radicals; in either of which cases, Sir Francis Blake will in time discover the mistake he has committed.

We have heard that a gentleman in the vicinity of Glasgow has received from his Britannic Majesty's Consul at Alexandria, in Egypt, letters which mention that a sloop of war had been daily, expected from Malta, with engineers to survey and report on the practicability of transporting immediately to London the famous needle of Cleopatra, which lies prostrate. In London it will be a off from London to receive Mr. Kean, and conduct him | truly noble monument, while at Alexandria it is useless.

TO JOHN BULL.

St. Omers, July 20, 1921. SIR, The day on which our august beloved Sovereign wasto affix the seal of compact with his people, by the ceremony of his coronation yesterday, was celebrated here by an elegant Ball, with every species of refreshment that could be wished or devised. Seven gentlemen were elected by the English inhabitants to act as stewards, in whose names invitations were sent to the authorities, and all the principal families of the town, and the officers of the garrison.

The rooms were crowded to excess with a galaxy of beauty of both nations, and "les belles Anglaises" had reason to be flattered by the preference shewn them in the quadrilles. The band of one of the regiments assisted in the orchestra, and played "God save the King"—"Vive Henri Quartre," and other pieces between the dances. The rooms had, in the morning, been decorated most elegantly by the ladies of the stewards, a large crown, with G. IV. R. on one side, and L. XVIII. R. on the other, in coloured lamps, were affixed at the top of the room. Dancing was kept up until an advanced hour in the morning, when the company separated.-lam, Q IN THE CORNER. dear John, your constant Reader,

The following contradiction to a statement in the Times of Wednesday we lay before our readers:

TO JOHN BULL. Bungay, July 24, 1821.
The Coronation of his most excellent Majesty, George the Fourth was celebrated here on the 19th inst. in the true old English style. A bullock, weighing upwards of fifty stone, was roasted whole, and together with about seventeen hundred lonves of bread, and ten barrels of beer, distributed to the poorer inhabitants of the town, and to others who were spectators of this novel and animating

The scene of this hospitable entertainment was a spacious com-mon belonging to the town, which afforded ample accommodation to some thousands of respectable and highly gratified spectators Every fortuitous circumstance conspired to give effect to this well-concerted fête in honour of our gracious King; the weather was uninterruptedly delightful; the arrangements were judiciously made; and the whole was executed with much propriety and good order.

A numerous company were assembled. At the remoter points of the A numerous company were assembled. At the remoter posts of the exhibition were seen groups of athletic rivals, reviving the olympic games—hurling the discus, wrestling, camping, cricket-playing, and enjoying many other manly sports. But the proudest demostration of the day was the general effusion of gratulation and loyally which pervaded the assembly, and which resounded in concert with ringing of bells and firing of guas, at the conclusion of "God sare the King," performed by a band of music in attendance.

In the evening nearly a hundred gentlemen, with the wineign.

In the evening nearly a hundred gentlemen, with the principal tradesmen of the town, had a dinner at the Tuns Inn, where levally, tracesines of the town, and a diract at the Tuns Inn, where levally, harmony, and convivality detained them to a late hour.

Thus ended (it may be almost said) the day of joy and harmony; but about the close of it, a few individuals, distinguished only by depravity of moral character, political disaffection, and adherence to a cause despicable like themselves, succeeded with a set of micreants of the very lowest class in inciting them to acts of outrage; creants of the very lowest class in inclung them to acts of ourse; assaulting many respectable inhabitants of the town, tearing down flags, gurlands, and laurels from the houses; plundering the materials of an immense bonfire; and frustrating the exhibition of some splendid fire-works provided for the evening. It is satisfaction. tory to add, that the instigators of these villainous outrages did not escape marked observation, while they dispensed to their mob, at a late hour, two or three barrels of beer, inscribed " to the Queen," with a placard mounted on a pole, and a sort of white flag. It is hoped the principals will soon be called to a just account for their noped the principals will stop be caused to a just account to the conduct; it will then appear that they are every way worthy of the cause in which they have enlisted, and that in Bungay the Queen has still a certain characteristic class of partisans and friends, if she chooses to own such miscreants. I am, Sir, &c.

BUNGAIENSIS. This letter, although thus signed here, is from a most respectable inhabitant, and authenticated with his name. We should add, that Bungay is the residence of Mr. Scraggs, the Radical, for whom a patriotic subscription was made some time since.

TO JOHN BULL.

-The present contest for the University of Oxford, affords some of those anomalies, which your paper has, in many instances, so successfully exposed.

You have a Candidate, who, after a canvass of eighteen years, is obliged to have recourse to his Oxford friends for a disclosure of his or of Divinity, is lubouring, in conjunction with the Prorest Oriel, to convince the University, that Mr. Heber is a decided enemy to Catholic Emancipation, when it is a well-known and repeatedly experienced fact, that he and his fellow-laboure, the Proposition of the Conference of vost, are its most strenuous advocates. The support which Mr. Heber receives, generally from the Whigs, especially those of warmer temperament, will no doubt furnish an argument to support the probability that he will, in the event of his success, be a firm Government man.

Now, it strikes me, Mr. Editor, that if the Lord of a Manor should wish for a game-keeper, for the sake of preserving his game, and the notorious poachers and marauders of his neighbourhood should, with one voice, recommend a particular individual, as most likely, by rigid measures, to effect this object, some slight suspicion would arise in the Lord's breast as to the propriety of listening to such doubtful testimony. I remain, yours,
A PLAIN REASONER.

KING's VISIT TO IRELAND .- Yesterday, (Friday the 20th inst.) at four o'clock, eight military waggons, laden with His Mejesty's plate, arrived in town, and proceeded directly to the Castle yard. Eleven of the Royal stud, two of which are His Majesty's favour chargers, arrived at the Pigeon-house yesterday also, on beard the Belfast steam packet, from Liverpool. An officer's guard of the 88th regiment came over with the waggons and houses, as a special and attended them to the Castle

His Majesty's proposed visit to Ireland has filled the capital of that kingdom with pleasure. All is bustle and preparation in Bublin for His Majesty's reception. It is most cheering to the inhabitants of the sister country to feel themselves personally remembered by the Sovereign, and they are naturally anxious to strain every nerve to show the King how warmly and ardently they love him; and how deer by and enthusiastically they feel the favour be confers upon them by soming into their hospitable land. We are quite sure that the gracious condescension, and fascinating manners of the King will wis erery Irish heart, and we have little doubt that the liberal hospitality and generous loyalty of the Irish will justify the high opinion His Majesty has ever had and expressed of that gallant and high-spirited people. The King embarks on Wednesday at Portamouth.

We have now some doubts as to the Queen's immediate retreat from this country, as we see it advertised that Mr. Sapio, jun. has returned to England under the highest patronage.

The Times (and we are really ashamed of mentioning the Paper rollen, even to expose its absurdines) says, in one of its numbers, that the people who cheered the King at the Coronation were a week-dressed mab; and all who could not afford to pay high prices for seats were excluded by barriers. A day or two afterwards, in riticising some mountehank trush about Buonaparte, at the Cobing Theatre (of which Mr. Glossop, just promoted to the band of Gentleman Pensioners, is the proprietor) the Times says, such was the depreciation of seats, that they were "occupied by servants, and other people of that condition, at half-a-crowa a head." The Times must know that it is amongst servants and other people of that Consen only is nounles. Nahely who has what condition that the Queen only is popular. Nobody who has any thing either of character or property to lose can advocate the Queen's cause, or do; and therefore, taking the Times upon its own ground, her most decided partisans were actually admitted in shocks into places which commanded the procession, the unmixed applause bestowed on the King is still the more satisfactory.

Mrs. Allsop, the daughter of Mrs. Jordan, died lately in America. This lady had contracted a habit of taking laudanum to great excess, and, it appears, at last swallowed too much, which occasioned ker death. Herhusband was on Lord Hastings stuff in India, and now holds some civil appointment in Calcutta.

THE KING'S BANQUET.—Thursday evening His Majesty had a numerous and gread dinner party, at his Palsace in Pall Mall, given principally to the Foreign Princes and others of distinction, on special missions from the different Sovereigns and Governments to be pro-sent at the King's Coronation.—All the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers were inwited, as were their Royal Highnesses the Dukes of York, Clarence, and Cambridge; the Marquis of Londonderry; & of York, Chrence, and Calward, the Analysis of School, and the Duke of Wellington. The Duke of Montrose was in attendance on the King. The State Reoms were opened on the occasion, in which the Royal Banquet was supplied. The Royal and distinguished party broke up a little before eleven o'clock, when his Majesty and his guests honoured Prince Esterhazy with their company at his splendid party.

The Grand Masical Festival in Westminster Abbey, under the Patronage of the King was celebrated on Tuesday, is aid of the Fund for to-building Westminster Hospital. The splendour and numerous extent of the company, the selection of music, and the superbutive excellence with which it was performed, produced a superintive excellence with which it was performed, produced a most felicitous effect. The opening of the Dettingen To Deum commenced the Festival, and was performed with a degree of effect that can scarcely be imagined. The selections of Handel took the lead, and several pieces were introduced from Haydu, Mozart, Beethoven, Guglielmi, and Marcello. The Coronation Anthem of Handel was the last piece, followed by "God save the King," which was sung with great force and effect by Mrs. Salmon, Mr. Nauchon, Mr. Ballange, Go.

Westminster Hall was sepend on Monday, and still continue elasses, were admitted from twelve to four o'clock, to view the above magnificent place, and John Bull seemed to be in all his glory; pleasant, good-tempered, and happy. Barriers are erected, and every thing done that can ensure the safety of the visitors.— The Abbey is open to the public (without tickets) to morrow Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Madame Catalani having been applied to to give her aid toward rebuilding the Westminster Hospital, has most liberally devoted the whole of the profits of her Concert of Wednesday last at the Argyll Rooms to the furtherance of that charitable object.

The Lord Chancellor, we are sorry to state, sprained his ancle at the Coronation. His Lordship sent a message on Monday morning to Lincoln's Inn Hall, stating that he should not be able to sit in the Court of Chancery for some days.

DUBLIN.—The day was observed in this city and its vicinity by all ranks and classes, with every demonstration of joy which a loyal and affectionate people could possibly manifest towards a merry peals of belts from the different steeples, which seemed to be the signal to say to the inhabitants of this great city—this is to be a day of happiness. The Reyal Standard was hoisted on Bed-Tower, at the Castle, at the Magazine in the Park, and at the Pigeon House Fort; flags were displayed on many of the steeples. Soon after ten o'clock the different regiments (cavalry and infantry) which form our garrison, moved from their respective barracks, and proceeded to the review ground in the Phornix Park, where, at a little after twelve o'clock, his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant arrived. He was received with his usual military honours. The troops then fired a few de joie, after which they marched past his Excellency in slow and quick time, and having again saluted him, marched to their respective quarters.

PECKHAM.—A liberal subscription was entered into by the inhabitants to celebrate the coronation. Two butts of porter were distributed, and a splendid display of fire-works took place on Peckham Rye, and an excellent band of music attended. The houses of the respectable inhabitants were handsomely illumi-nated; but what was very remarkable, the assessors and collectors of the King's and parochial taxes were totally dark.

ECCLES, NEAR MANCHESTER .- This long wished-for day celebrated here by all ranks with the utmost enthusiasm. At half past celebrated here by all ranks with the utmost enthusiasm. At half past eight o'clock, our worthy Vicar, the Rev. T. Blackburne, son of the M. P. for the county of Lancaster, gave the children of the school a medal each, which was suspended round their necks by a scatter ribbon; the singers, ringers, and artillery had medals also. A new standard was hoisted on the tower of the venerable steeple, the band playing "God save the King," which was cheered with four times four. The procession marched to the several places appointed for reasting of oxen, sheep, &c. at each of which four hearty cheers were given, and a Royal salute fired. On the return, the Eccles Sunday School children were led by Mrs. T. Blackburne into the lawn of the vicarage, and each child received from the hands of that amiable Lady an excellent ment-nic, together with a proper quanamiable Lady an excellent meat-ple, together with a proper quantity of beer. They sang "God save the King," gave four cheers, and departed highly delighted. The artillery now gave signal of the ment being ready, consisting of three oxen and seven sheep, which, with bread and beer, were distributed to every poor family, according to the number in it. At six o'clock, a large party dised at the Grapes Inn, the Vicar in the chair. Several loyal and appropriate toosis (particularly "The King," and "The Duke of Lancaster,") were drank with rapturous applause. The day passed in the greatest hilarity. the create-t hilarity.

BRIGHTON.-At day break cannons were discharged on the downs. Colours were soon after hoisted in the most conspleneus situations. At five o'clock at least three thousand persons had assembled on the Level. At the latter period the oxen were laid down to blazing fires. A coronation salute of thirty-six explosions from four carriage-mounted swivels, at the bottom of Middle-street, rattled in all parts of the town at nine. At mid-day the children of the Sunday and National Schools were marshalled on the Steyne, and cakes were distributed to them; during which a royal salute was discharged from the 42 pounders on the battery. At one o'clock the shipping in the roadstead, two revenue cutters, several packets, two collier brigs, and trading ships commenced firing, which was continued till two with discharges at quick returning intervals, as in answer from the land.—The venerable Phæbe Hussel, a pensioner of the King, at the age of 137, arrived at the dinner hour in time to say grace. Poor Phæbe had been confined to her room for some *say grace. Poor Phebe had been confined to her room for some weeks by filness. The bandstruck up "God save the King" soon after her approach, and the delighted old lady joined in the chorus. Woolwich, July 25.—The festivities of the Royal Regiment of Artiflery, at Woolwich, in celebration of His Majesty's Coronation, terminated only yesterday, when the officers gave a dinner in the Barrack-field to the whole of the men, women, and children of the regiment, amounting to three thousand eight hundred persons. Guns were fired as signals for sitting down, &c. &c. and a royal salute, when the King's health was drank. As a mark of respect to his Majesty, the guns on this accession were manned by officers. to his Majesty, the guns on this occasion were manned by officers. In the evening there were donkey races, foot races, wrestling, tootball, &c. &c. for prizes, and at night fire-works.

Heneroad.— In this city the day was ushered in by the ringing of bells. The Mayor and Corporation, the Staff of the Militia, and the Brethren of the Masonic Lodge, moved in procession to the Cathedral. At the Cathedral an appropriate Autheni, composed by Dr. C. Whitfield for the occasion, was performed, and an excellent sermon was delivered by the Rev. H. Morgan, who chose his text from 4th chap. Philippians, v. iv. After Service the procession returned to the Council Room, where a large party, with the Mayor W. Pateshall, Esq. partook of wine and cake, and drank with fervour long life and health to our Sovereign King. In the evening, nearly 300 persons, comprising the principal families of the county and city attended the Ball at the County Hall; the Great Room was tastefully decorated for the occasion, and the portrait of our late revered Sovereign, for the first time adorned the Assembly Room. The festive dance was kept up till the sun smiled on the sevelry, and all departed highly gratified. Upwards of 4200 indi-viduals were supplied with excellent beef and bread, by subscriptions from the corporation and inhabitants, an ox weighing 130 stone, and several fat beasts were slaughtered and distributed; and R. Williams, Esq. gave an excellent dinner in front of his house on Ailstone's Hill, to about 200 aged poor persons. At Garnons, the bospitable seat of Sir J. G. Cotterell, the day was celebrated with all the feeling which forms a prominent part in the character of its distinguished owner. A large assembly of private friends were sumptiously entertained, and the poor of the neighbourhood amply provided for—two sheep were roasted whole, and 500 of the poor sat down to a bounteons dinner, with vegetables, pudding, and plenty of native cider. After dinner music was produced, and kept up the merry dance till late in the evening, and separated after libations to the health of their Sovereign, and grateful pledges of -thankfulness and good wishes to their benovelent entertainer and his Richmond, Scars.—A subscription was raised here in honour of the Coronation, and dinner given on the green to 1000 poor parishioners, provided at 3s. 6d. a head; there were the best joints of meat roast and boiled, with vegetables, and abundance of plumpudding and porter. Afterwards a variety of prizes were given for burnl sports, donkey races, a jinging match, foot races, &c. &c. Bunds of music were on the green, with a platform for dancing. In the evening a splendid display of fire-works, with a general illumination terminated the happy day. All was harmony—all unaminity—a more interesting scene cannot be imagined, and the name of the wretched Queen did not pollute the lips of a single individual.

MACCLESPIELD.—The shops and factories were all closed in this town. A most liberal subscription had been set on foot, and severeal sheep were roasted, and distributed among the populace in different parts of the town. The Members of the King and Constitution Club direct at the Hotel. The children of several Sunday Schools walked in procession.

GEORGEHAM, NEAR BARNSTAPLE.—Capt. Cooke gave to his tenants and workpeople, a sheep, voasted whole, beef, &c. which, with the ringing of bells, the villagers testified their loyalty, and nothing was wanting to shew every respect to the day. (To be continued.)

The mails from London to Dover are in future to be conveyed in bours, and forwarded from Dover to Calais by steam-packets, which, it is calculated will cross in about two hours The Triennial Meeting of the three Choirs of Worcester, Glou-beter, and Hereford, is to take place this year at Worcester, in the third week in September.

At the close of the poll on Thursday, for Common Councilman of the ward of Bassishaw—for Mr. Hughes, 19—Mr. Lister, 17. Mr. Hughes was declared duly elected.

At a Court of Common Council on Thursday, on the motion of Mr. Oldham, a committee was appointed to consider of the best mode of expressing the congratulations and respect of the City of London to His Majesty, on the event of his Coronation. The Catholics of Ireland voted an Address to the King, at a specting on the 19th inst. at Dublin, to be presented to his Majesty on his arrival in Ireland. On Wednesday last the Lord Advocate received a warrant from his Majesty, declaring his Royal Pleasure to extend his grace and sporcy to 51 persons against whom true bills for high treason were found before the Courts of Oyer and Terminer, held in Scotland last year, but who were not brought to trial, owing to their having absoonded. Immediate orders were in consequence given, that such of these persons as have been taken into custody should be liberated in the course of this day (Thursday), being that fixed for his Majesty's Coronation, and all proceedings against the others have been onlered to be discharged.

Bow-Street.—On Tuesday an Irishman, named John Dunn, was brought up by Bishop, one of the principal officers, charged with the murder of W. Cruise, Esq. of Belgrade Castle, near Dublin, on the 3d of January. Carey, his accomplice, has been tried and executed. The prisoner was apprehended, after much resistance, at a public-house in Islington. Mr. Cruise was on a shooting party with some friends, from whom he got separated, and the spot being woody, he for some time did not descry them. At leagth, having perceived them, he was making towards them, when Carey and Dupn passed him, turned round, and seizing his gun, knocked him down with the butt end of it, and continued beating him with it until the skull was broken in pieces. In this dreadful state the deceased was found by his servants. The prisoner was sent over to

An Inquest was held on Monday evening, on the body of Sir Jo-nathun Miles (formerly keeper of a mad-house at Hoxton) who died suddenly on the preceding evening, when going to bed at his house at Ealing. Verdict—Died by the Visitation of God.

Another Inquest was held at the Middlesex Hospital, on the body of Wm. Board, 16 years old, who boarded and lodged in a house in John-street, Tottenham Court-road. The unfortunate youth was desperately in love with the servant-maid, of whom he became jealous, and having packed up his clothes to go away, he went down to the kitchen, and, after pacing up and down several times, shot himself with a pistol in the side. The door was broken open, and he was found lying on the floor, weltering in his blood, where he expired on Monday. Verdict—Shot himself in a moment of temporary derangement.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH, on an unprecedented principle.—Mr. ARTIFICIAL TEETH, on an unprecedented principle.—Mr. GRAY, Meu ber of the Royal College of Surgeons, in London, continues to supply the loss of Teeth, on the successful system introduced by himself in 1613, which has been found to answer all the purposes of the human Teeth, in mastleation, articulation, appearance, &c. and to remain perfectly secure in their places by the pressure of the a mosphere; thereby avoiding planning to stumps, tying, twisting wires, or fastening springs to the adj: ining Teeth, or any attachment whatever to the remaining Teeth; and consequently, instead of injuring, afford them support. These artificial Teeth may be takes out, and replaced by the wearer with the greatest facility. To those whe require while or half sets, Mr. Gray undertakes, at his own risk, to furnish pieces which shall answer all the purposes above described, without the incumbrance of the spiral springs, which are usually attached to such pieces.—48, Old Burington-street. -25, Old Burlington-street.

PATENT ECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMP. This Invention embraces every requisite to render it a domestic comfort in the more general use of Lamps instead of Candles, giving to the Public the choice of an improved light, in which there is perfect safety, athail the expense of Candles. The Chamber or Night Light being universally interesting to all families, and particularly to many professions, may be best appreciated by a fair comparison with others, which are most resorted to, viz, the Rush Light, an old servant, but it must be allowed, a drowsy one, and totally unfit for motion. The wax-wick, stuck upon cork, floating in oil upon water, of more modera date, but must be stationary, subject to the cork catching fire, braking the glass it floats in, causing a suffecating smell, consuming much oil, and a constant expense for the wicks. The Patent Economical Chamber Lamp: nosexpense but for oil, and that only at the rate of a halfrenny for eight or nine hours, giving a brilliant light, always ready at the moment it is wanted, bearing any motion, and can be regulated to burn the longest or shortest night, disappearing in the morning without smoke or smell. The price 18s. In japan stands, and 20s. in fancy broase and imperial metal. The same principle applies, with peculiar advantage, to the larger Lamps, for the diaing table and sideboard, upon a handsome scale, saited to the affluent, with elegant pedestals, 55s. to 30s. these are universally approved and patronised by Clerical and other Professional Gentlemen in every part of the kingdom, and for all minor uses they are equally desirable. The Greetian Glass Hanging Lamps for the Staircase, Passage, Conservatory, Hall, &c. are perfectly new in taste, and clegantly simple, from 30s. to 75s. the latter upon a lager scale. In all these Lamps the same perfection exists,—burning the whole evening without trimming, requiring to be replenished with cotton only once in two with the patentee by T. Pearce and Co. Commercial Report, From July 23 to July 28, includes Notwithstanding the immense importations which we are della receiving from all quarters, (but particularly the West ludies) the value of produce hus been but little, if any, affected thereby. Some partial sales have been made in Sugar at 1s. per Cwt. reduction; but generally the market remains firm. Browns are exessively abundant, but Good Scales, from 59s. to 63s. are scarce, and a request. A great number of Coffee Sales have taken place, and previous prices fully remixed; Domingos, 110s.; Dutch descriptions being in demand for the home trade, brought 130s. to 13ts. for middling quality. Runs are rather more sought after, but as alteration in price. Cottons have continued in demand; nearly 1000 Surnts sold at 6½ to 8; 700 Bengals, 5½ to 6; 400 Pernams, 12½ to 12½; 100 Bourbons, 12½, in Bond; 100 Smyrans, 7½ to 6½; and 50 Demerars, 1½, duty paid. The Liverpool Market rates rather higher, notwithsteading the arrival of about 40,000 bales in constant. less than 14 days. Other articles without alteration.

The BEST and CHEAPEST LAVENDER WATER in ENGLAND.
THE Nobility and Gentry are respectfully informed, that the LAVENDER WATER and ESPRIT DE ROSE Manufactory is REMOVED from beyond Church-lane to the KING'S BOAD, near SMITH-STREET, CHELSEA, where they will continue to be supplied with those Articles at about HALF the PRICE they pay for them in Town. All Persons who have used this Lavender Water, acknowledge the superiority of its strength and fragrance, and being little more than half the price of that of the first makers, the Manufacturer thinks himself warranted in calling it the best and cheapest Lavender Water in England. He has a few dozens only left of that made from the Flowers of the growth of the year 1818, which will be solk, without reserve, to the first applicants. Not less than a dozen pints at the exportation price.—The real Old Windsor Seap warranted genuine.

PATTERSON'S ICE PAIL, for cooling Wine, Butter, Cream PATTERSON'S ICR PAIL, for cooling Wine, Butter, Cream, &c.—An Ice Pail, on a perfectly new and philosophical principle, has been invented, by JOHN PATTERSON, Furnishing Ironsonger, No. 41, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, by means of which, wines, butter, cream, fruit, &c. may be cooled and kept cool by spring water alone, with a degree of efficacy and precision hitherto unknown. In situations where ice cannot be obtained, and where a greater cold than that of spring water is required, they are peculiarly useful, as by means of a Freezing Powder, which may be had with the Ice Pail, a temperature even lower than ice may be procured. Ice Buckets may also be had of J. Patterson, which will preserve ice for several days.—Patterson's Spare-bed Warmer, by which beds may be kept in a constantly well-aired and wholesome state, however seldom they may be slept in, are also now ready for delivery at his house, 41, New Bridge-street, the second house from Ludgate-hill.

THE NEW CHINTZ FURNITURE and MOREEN WARE-THE NEW CHINTZ FURNITURE and MORBEN WABE-HOUSE, No. 134, Oxford Street, nearly opposite Hanover Square, has been established in consequence of the recent extraordinary reduction in the Prices of manufactured Articles, for the express purpose of retailing to Families in suitable quantities for furnishing the BEST TOWN PRINTED CHINTZ FURNITURES, MORBENS, MERINO DAMASKS, &c. &c. Without wishing to delude the Public by misrepresentations, the Proprietors, MILES and EDWARDS, (from the corner of Great Turnstile, Holborn,) have only to request the favour of inspection, and they feel conduct the auperiority of their Patterns, and the immense reduction in the Prices, will ensure them the support of those Families to whom a Saving of full one-third in the furnishing of their honses is a consideration.

RIFICIAL TEETH, on an unprecedented principle.—Mr. GRAY, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, in London, cantinues to supply the loss of Teeth, on the successful system introduced by himself in 1613, which has been found to answer all the purposes of the human Teeth, in mastication, articulation, appearance, &c. and to remain perfectly secure in their places by the pressure of the atmosphere; thereby avaiding pluning to stumps, tying, twisting wires, or fastening aprings to the adjoining Teeth, or any attachment whatever to the remaining Teeth; and consequently, instead of injuring, afford them suppert. These artificial Teeth may be taken out, and replaced by the wearer with the greatest facility. To those whe require whole or half sets, Mr. Gray undertakes, at his own risk, to fursish picces which shall answer all the purposes above described, without the incumbrance of the spiral springs, which are usually attached to such pieces.—45, Old Barlington-street.

URLING'S LACE (of the real Point and Brussels fabric), 174, Strand, near Somerset House, removed from 392, Strand.—G. F. URLING and CO. beg to inform the Fashionable World, they have prepared for the Season a various and extensive Assortment of their PATENT LACE DRESSES, from Four Guineas to 100 Guineas each; some off whish, from recent improvments, they humbly presume to compare with the most perfect foreign productions. Also a great variety of Veils, Scarfs, Squares, Laces, Nets, &c. of every description. This peculiarly clear and transparent Article having, in the higher circles, superseded the use of comment Lace, which becomes rough and full of fibre on the first washing, the Patentees respectfully apprise the Public, that the latter is frequently starched to conceal its defects, and make it resemble Urling's Lace, which, therefore, can only be relied apon as genuine at their Wholesale and Retail Bestablishment in Landen, or of the Country Dealers supplied by them.—Every Article is distinguished by a Seal, with the Patentee's initials, "G. F. W. and Co." and the words, "by the (late) Queen's authority." Specimens, shewing the superiority of Urling's Lace over common Lace, may he seen in Ackermania's Repository, La Belle Assemblee, and other fashionable works, and may be had gratis, by application, peet-paid, to G. F. Urling's Ca. Canatty Dealers supplied upon the most therein.—Manufactory, Baseford, Nettinghamshire.

AMBROSIAL PASTILLES.

"See spicy clouds from lowly Sharen rise,
"And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies?"

THE Nobility are very respectfully informed these AROMATIC PASTILLES, are of an exeministicly fragmant and luxurious odoer, being composed of the most costly Oriental Gums, Spices, and rich Perfumes, which, from their Ambrosial Qualities, seem like "a thousand fragmant posies," and are therefore admirably calculated for diffusing "sweet smelling odours" in the Drawing Room, and Ball Room, trafy constituting "The perfumed chambers of the great," and considered highly delectable and exhilarating at Balls, Routs, and all Assemblies of Fashion, producing "sweets as from the myrile and citron

DATENTECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMP. This Invention embraces every requisite to render it a dementic comfort in the mero general use of Lamps instead of Candies, giving to the Public the choice of an improved light, in which there is perfect safety, at half the expense of Candies. The Chamber or Night Light being universally interesting to silf families, and particularly to many professions, may be best appreciated by a fair comparison with others, which are most resorted to, vist, the Rush Light, an eld nervant, but it must be allowed, a drowsy one, and totally unfit for motion. The wax-wick, stack upon cork facating in eil upon writer, of more medera date, but must be stationary, subject to the cork catching fire, breaking the glass it feats in, causing a sufferating smell, consuming much eil, and a constant expense for the wicks. The Patent Economical Chamber Lamp: no expense but for oil, and that only at the rate of a halfpenny for eight or nine hours, giving a brilliant light, always ready at the moment it is wanted, bearing any motion, and can be regulated to barn the longest or shortest night, disappearing in the morning without smoke or smell. The price led, in japan stands, and 20t. In fancy broase and imperial metal. The same principle upplies, with peculiar advantage, to the larger Lamps, for the dining table and sideboard, upon a handsome scale, suited to the affuent, with elegant pedestals, 55s. to 65s.; and for the study, to write or read by (sinambra) they are every thing that can be wished, at 35s. to 45s. and upon a smaller scale, 25s. to 30s. these are universally approved and patronised by Clerical and other Professional Gouldemes in every part of the kingdom, and for all minor uses they are equally desirable. The Oraclan Glass Hanging Lamps for the Staircase, Passage, Conservatory, Hall, &c. are perfectly new in taste, and elegantly simple, from 30s. to 75s. the latter upon a lager scale. Is all these Lamps the same perfection exists,—burning the whole evening without trimming, requiring to PATENT ECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMP. This Inven-

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JULY 30 .- Intelligence from St. Petersburgh, which we have received through an extraordinary channel, states, that the Emperor Alexander has given a categorical reply to the representations made by the Porte against Baron de Strogonoff. contents of this document are not yet knows; but it is asserted that the Emperor demands complete satisfaction from the Porte for the insults offered to his Ambassador, and that too in the space of eight days. If it be not given, the Ambassador has received or-ders to quit Constantinople; and the Russian troops, assembled on the Pruth, will enter Moldavia. It is said that all the Generals have received scaled orders, which they are not to open until a certain day. It is doubted whether the Grand Seignior Mahmud has sufficient power over the people, and the fanatical Janissaries, to give the required satisfaction; and, in this case, war appears in evitable. But the position of M. de Strogonoff may be perilous. The stast advices from Odessa will doubtless supply further information on this subject.—Journal des Debats.

Jamaica Papers to the 13th June state, that Lord Cochrane is sumble to enforce the blockade which he proclaimed, for a vessel sfrom Calcutta, belonging to the Phillippine Company, and richly freighted, had entered the port of Callao, in defiance of his squa-They confirm the capture of Coro. It was taken by Urdameta, and on the 11th May becissued a Proclamation, declaring that this troops were not to be considered as foes, but "as the protectors of the province of Coro;" and granting protection to all inhabitants, mhatever side they snight have esponsed heretofore, provided they did not henceforth conspire against the Government, " by forming by forming guerfila parties, or otherwise."

Vienna, July 18.—Great activity reigns in our Cabinet; dispartches arrive, and couriers are expedited daily. The principal Secretaries are overwhelmed with increased labours. It is understood that all these movements are concerned with the affairs of the Porte. A Special Commission, composed of Members from the Assic. Council of War, has been exclusively charged with all the besiness relative to the movements of the troops on the frontiers of Turkey. It appears certain that the representations transmitted by the Turkish Cabinet to the Court of St. Petersburgh, respecting Banon de Strogonoff, are accompanied with a proposition to fix the hasis of a new treaty which shall consolidate the peace between Russia and the Porte.

FRAMESORY, JULY 28 .- The sumours of an immediate declarazion of war between Russia and the Porte, which have been in circulation here during the last few days, are not fully confirmed.

July 25.—When intelligence of the death of Buonaparte reached

Baden, Prince Eugene and the Duchess Downger Stephania of Baden crassed the invitations, which they had issued for that day, to the countemanded, and immediately put on mourning. The King of Bayaria, who was at Baden at the time, observed the most nuod s.loue on the subject. We are anxious for dispatches from Vienna, to know what the Court of Austria has done under this stance - Courier Francais.

A letter from Naples announces, that there are some hands of A detter from magnes announces, that mere are some names of Carbonari under arms. The environs of Benevento, and the vallies of Borino, are in a state of disturbance. A curate, Blasio, carries off the convoys of provisions, and levies contributions; but, it is added, that even the Liberules do not reckon much upon his move-

They write from Strasburg, on the 20th ult. that the King of Bavarie has arrived these from the waters of Baden, with two of his daughtens, under the name of the Count de Haig: his Majesty observes the strictest incognito.

MADRID, SGLA 19.--The intelligence of Buomaparte's death has reached this capital; it caused no sensation.

GRENT, JULY 30. - Her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta, GRENT, JULY 30.—Her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta, of England, travelling under the name of Countess of Hoya, artived here yesterday, with her suite.

ODESSA, JULY B.—The reports of the day are now strongly in favour of a continued smity with Turkey. The Greek cause in Meldavia, and those paper, is, we understand, annihilated, and Ypsilanti himself runs every risk of heigh taken, particularly as it is said, that the neighbouring European States have refused to afford him protection.

him protection. We have been in great enziety here for some days past, under the Turkey; but we are happy now to state, that a courier, with dispatches from St. Petersburgh, arrived here yesterday. On his authority we derive intelligence that there will be no disagreement between Russin and Turkey.

A letter from Smyrna states that the Turkish Captain who fired apon the European Commodore has been beheaded by order of the Porte. The gunners have had their right hands cut off, Intelligence from Constantinople states, that the troops in that capital had been reinforced by several corps from Asia, which were so march for Macedonie and Thessaly. Impercitive orders had been sent to all the Pachas of Asia to send, under pain of death, all the disposable troops. It is reported that the Turks have put to death all the Greek seamen of the Isle of Rhodes.

Letters from Constant inople of the 22d July, state, that the head of the Grand Vizier, Benderly Ali Pacha, arrived at Constant Inople towards the end of the Ramedan, and was fixed up at the inner gate of the Seraglio. The table affixed to it described the deceased as a traitor to his country and to religion. Galib Pacha, formerly Reis Effendi, and Plenipotentiary at the negociations for peace at Bucharest, is deposed. He is accessed of having influenced by his advice the actions of the late Grand Vizier.

A CURE POR SURCEDE. - On Friday last some bestmen took out of the Seine a man who had precipitated himself into it from the Pontsucceeded in reculting him to dife. He had scarcely come to him self, when he very seriously assured the Commissary of Police that it was still his intention to drown himself as soon as he should be set at liberty. The Commissary asked him to sign a declaration of his intention to destroy himself, which the fellow readily consented to do. While all this was going on, a woman arrived, vociferating, "My bushand! let me see my husband!" When she perceived, however, that her better half was alive and well, she became instantly silent. The boatmen claimed to be rewarded for the good office they had just rendered her in saving her husband, but she angrily repulsed them, exclaiming, "Why did you not let him drown himself? why did you intermeddle?" At these words, the bushand, it is said, suddenly found himself cured of his folly, and swore he would make no more attempts to drown himself .- Gazette de France.

Letters were vesterday received from Nevis and St. Kitts, from the former place dated the 21st of June, and from the latter dated the 19th of the same month. By these arrivals we have received a confirmation of the former advices from South America, of re-capture of Caraceas and La Guayra by the Royalists, and the Insurgents are said to have lost a considerable number of men. The seas in the neighbourhood of the Leeward Islands swarm with small armed vessels, committing depredations to a very great extent; the ships of war on that station are very active in putting a stop to these depredations, and several of these pirates have been pytured and sent into St. Bartholomew's and St. Kitts.

Bxtract of a letter dated the 10th of June:—"I informed you, per the Jane and Lady Popham, that I was fearful as to the fate of three of Mount Hybla negroes. Their trials took place on the 17th of May, and it appeared so evidently that their intention was to kill all the white people in the mountain, that they were found guilty but as the evidence against them was not so strong as against Ned one of the Penn Hill negroes, they were sentenced to transporta-tion for life, and Ned was taken to Penn Hill, and hung the next morning. The Magistrates and Vestry are about to apply to the House of Assembly to purchase the freedom of the woman who gave information of their diabolical intention."

INDIA.—We have received a file of Bengal Papers to the middle of February. The advices from Balsorah state that place to be much disturbed by a party of Arabs of Zobeci, who were committing depredations without the city, while the soldiery within were plundering those who were unarmed. Some misunderstanding had arisen between the Government and the British resident, the latter was about to leave Bassorah and repair to Mahammereh, the place which General Malcolm's mission once retired from Persia. The accounts from Muscat are not of a later date than the 29th of December, previous to which time Lieut. Colonel Warren had arrived there and had an interview with the Innua. Our relations with that Prince continue on the best footing. To the northward of Muscat the Jossmess had attempted to destroy the Imaun, but they were repulsed, and quietness was restored. Our troops had ratired from Deristan to Kishme.

The Falkland Islands have been taken possession of by a naval force in the name of "the Supreme Government of the United Provinces of South America."

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, MONDAY.

Birch and Co. v. Crewe.—This was an action of Assumpsit upon 25 bills of exchange, amounting in the whole to 97501. alleged 10 he endorsed by the defendant. The plaintiffs are bunkers at Starford, the defendant (the Rev. O. Crewe) is a clergyman, of large fortune, residing at Muton. A person named Wm. Birkes, carrying on business as a cheese-merchant and maltster at Charnes Old Hall, near Eccles Hall, had been in the habit of discounting bills with them, accepted by G. C. Wright, of London; but at length having some doubts of the solvency of the latter person, they declined discounting any more of his bills, unless they were indorsed by some persons of known credit in the county of Stafford. In cons persons of known credit in the county of Stafford. In consequence of this, Birkes, as was alleged, procured the indorsement of the Reverend defendant, a gentleman supposed to be worth 7,000l. per annum, to Wright's bills, and the plaintiffs actually discounted bills to the amount of 9 or 10,000l. for Birkes, all of them being drawn, accepted, and supposed to be indursed by the defendant between the latter end of August and the latter end of December, 1820-Birkes had discounted bills to a large amount similarly m tured with Messrs. Sparrow and Co. bankers at Newcastle; and with Messrs. Broughton and Co. bankers of Nantwich. It was supposed that the whole number of bills so put in circulation amounted to near 40,000l. Several of the bills discounted by the plaintiff had been regularly paid, but some being dishonoured, notice was given to the defendant. This led to a disclaimer on the part of the defendant as to his indorsement upon them, and a de-claration that they were forgeries. In the beginning of January last Birkes absconded to France, and from thence to America.

The defence set up was, that the indorsements were forgeries that Mr. Crewe was of the most honourable character and upright integrity, and incapable of making this defence if the indorsements were genuine; that the only transactions he had ever had with Birkes, was in dealing with him for malt for domestic purposes that the promissory note alluded to was given by him to Birkes for malt so purchased. To prove this defence, Mr. William Holt Davison, Sir John Chetwood, Mr. Crewe, the defendant's son, the Rev. L. D. H. Cockburne, and Samuel Lovett, the defendant's butler, were examined. The first four witnesses proved that the indorsements, though extremely good innitations of the defendant's hand-writing, were, upon a close inspection, manifest forgeries. Mr. Crewe deposed, that his father never wrote his name twice alike; that he was remarkable for using bad pens and ink, and that he generally mended his pens with a pair of scissors. His father never had had any dealings of any sort with Birkes, but in buying malt of him. The butler was called to prove that he had never witnessed two promissory notes, which Birkes had nego-ciated, as the genuine notes of the defendant, and supposed to be ha Lonett. witnesses's na that he was unable to write

Mr. Broderick (with whom was Mr. Abraham), stated the plaintiff's case with considerable ability. Mr. Marryatt was for the defendant. It appeared from the evidence of the daughter of the plaintiff, a young woman of prepossessing appearance, but whose demeanour under examination was perfectly degage; that her father was a bricklayer in respectable circumstances, residing at Wheathampstead, in this county. She was about 23 years of age. About three years since, the defendant, a young man of the same age, by business a journeyman baker, in the same village, pad honourable addresses to her; but an improper intercourse place, and in the mouth of April last, she was delivered of a child. AIR BALLOON.

On Wednesday Mr. Green ascended with the balloon from the Belvidere tea-gardens, Pentouville. One o'clock was generally understood as the hour at which the hatloon would be let off; and long before that hour, the road in front of the gardens was liferelly choked up with barouches, glass and hackney-conches, waggons, and carts, whose owners profited very considerably by the anrion desire of hundreds to witness the ascent, without danger of pre-sure from the crowd. The filling of the balloon began at an early hour, and it was sufficiently inflated by a little after two. The gas used on this occasion was the common carburetted hydrogen, the used in lighting the streets. Before the filling was complete, a small pilot balloon was le, off: it took a direction east by north, and was soon out of sight. Sc on after this, two carrier pigeons were thrown up, each with a paper tastened to it. They we ent off in nearly the same direction as the pin'st balloon; but their particular destination we did not learn. About talf an hour before Mr. Green got into the car, a second pilot bulle On was sent up. It took a direction a the car, a second pilot bulk Wa was sent up. It took a direction it little more to the east than the former. About half past three, the car being fixed, and every thing ready, Mr. Green stepped into it, apparently in excellent spirits, and with the manifest confidence of a man who perfectly understood the management of the precanos vehicle to which it was appended. As soon as Mr. Green had a ranged himself in the car, the cords we've cut away, and the balloon rose in a grand and majestic manner, an. dist the shouts of the multitude. The accent was not rapid nor acco. titude. The ascent was not rapid, nor acco. wanted by such a swinging motion of the car as on the last occasion. Mr. Green stood is the car as it rose, and kept waving his flag f. a very considerable time. The rapidity of its motion increased con. Merably as it rose, until it came to a height in which its apparent siz was diminished about two-thirds. It then appeare I quite stationa. y for some teconds. The aeronaut, however, soon accelerated us motion by throwing out two bags of sand. The descent of the sa. d was quite visible, and appeared in the rays of the sun like white st. 'oke. The balloon continued to ascend rapidly for a few seconds lone er, when its motion became suddenly altered, and it seemed as if it . ad got into a current of air, driving from east to west. We were ! vented from ascertaining correctly whether this was the fact, by the entrance of the balloon into a dense cloud, which completely a sourced it from our riow. scured it from our view, nor was it again seen by any who rema in the vicinity from which it ascended. The following is Mr. Green's account of his journey. Having taken his station in the car, he says:-The balloon took at first a easterly direction. It passed over Hoxton, Hackney, and made towards the Essex coast. Precisely seven minutes after the balloon left the Belvidere Gardens it entered a very dense cloud, and immediately the earth was obscured completely from my view, righ I still Leard the shouts of the populace at Hackbers the neighbourhood. On the balloon entering the cloud it was 23 minutes to four o'clock, and the barometer stoud at 24 2-10ths. I understand that the balloon remained in the sight of the special at the Belvidere precisely seven minutes. On passing through the clouds I felt very chilly, and was covered with due or mist precisely the same as if I was in a very thick fog, except that it did not in any manner affect the stomach, as fogs generally do. When the balloon was at its greatest altitude, the thermoneter stood at 65. The density of the clouds was so very extraordinary, that at one pe riod I could scarcely distinguish the flag that was on the opposite side of the car. At a quarter to four, having risen very rapidly after going through the cloud, the glass stood at 21-10ths. This was the utmost height the balloon reached, and the light and heatwere quite oppressive to me, the former more than the latter; and although the clouds were rolling beneath me, representing to my view a sea of white down, yet above me the sun shone with extreme brilliancy. At afteen minutes before four o'clock I opened the valve to its utmost extremity, and I descended most rapidly; having passed through the clouds I heard the shouts of persons on the earth, and saw some riding, and others running, in the direction which the balloc taking. At ten minutes before four the balloon descended (having been twenty minutes precisely on its voyage, in which period of time it had travelled about fourteen miles) is a six acre field belonging to Mr. Grout, a farmer, at Tan Yard Farm, Barking side, two miles from liford, in Essex. A number of the peasantry assisted in securing the balloon; but while in the hurry of detaching it from the net that covered the balloon, the wind blew strong, and it escaped from their group, and again ascended to the atmosphere, to the height of several thousand feet, but fortunately the valve was opes I and it descended again within about a mile and a half from where it rose, without sustaining any injury.

Mr. Green took a carrier pigeon with him, and the moment he descended he wrote on a paper—" ten minutes to four, descended quite safe near Barking, Essex." This note he tied to the foot of the bird, and it arrived in the City-road before six o'clock, and the gratifying intelligence was communicated to Mr. Green's wife, family, and friends. A number of gentlemen paid Mr. Green the most polite attention on his descent, and, in particular, Robert Wesley Hall, Esq. the Sheriff took him to his house and treated bin in the most hospitable manner. After dinner Mr. Green place his balloon in a post-chaise at Ilford, and the car on the roof, and safely arrived at the Belvidere between nine and ten o'clock.

We regret to state, a number of persons of both sexes, who had assembled to witness the ascension of the balloon, climbed on a low wall, topped with iron railing, surrounding the lawn in froat of a gentleman's house, when the railing, not being sufficient to resist the heavy weight of those attached to it, about twenty yards of it gave way, together with part of the wall, bearing all before it into or an arm broken; but the most serious case of all, was that of a very fine boy, about eight years of age, who was killed on the spot, by a large portion of the stone pillar of the gate falling on his head, which crushed it to a mummy.

THE KING.

On Tuesday morning, at half-past eleven o'clock, the King lest his Palace, in Pall-mull, to pursue his intended route to Ireland. On this occasion His Majesty in his plain travelling carriage, attended by Lord Graves, as Lord in Waiting, and escorted by a party of the 14th Light Dragoons, arrived at Kingston, in Surrey, at half-past twelve o'clock. The distinguished cavalcade, being very private, was not for some time recognised; but, when it was ascertained to be His Majesty, vast crowds flocked round the carriages, shouting "God save the King!" "God save King George the Fourth," and other expressions of loyalty and attachment, which were acknowledged by His Majesty with his usual gracious condescension. The horses having been changed, the Royal party set forward amidst the affectionate greetings of the populace, who followed the carriage of His Majesty to the extremity of the town. His Majesty arrived at the Barrier-gute of Portsmouth at half-past five o'clock in the evening, amidst the huzzas of an immense concourse of people who lined the rouds for miles to the beach. concourse of people who fined the roads for miles to the beach. The keys of the garrison were delivered to His Majesty by the Lieut.-Governor, and instantly returned. The royal barouche then proceeded along the High-street, escorted by a body of Dragoous. The footmen and coachman were in their undress livery, and the expedition with which His Majesty was driven along—and indeed every circumstance attending his entrance, showed that he was more than usually anxious to avoid all appearance of state. The Royal Marine Artillery, under Lieutenant-General Williams, K.C.B.; the Marine Battalions, under Lieutenant-General Williams. Arthury, under Lieutenant-General Williams, R.C.E.; the Marine Battalions, under Lieutenant-General Williams; and the Royal Engineers, 10th and 15th regiments of foot, under Lieut.-General Sir George Cooke, K.C.B., lived the streets. All the shops were shut, and His Majesty was most enthusiastically greeted. He looked extremely well, and instantly embarked on board his yacht, lying off the besch in the harbour, which lies within hail of the shore. When the barouche arrived at the Sallyport, his Majesty descended and Mr. Watson, his Majesty's Private Secretary. Upon descending, he was immediately attended by Sir Wm. Keppel, Sir Hilgrore Turner, and Sir Edmund Nagle, who had arrived the evening before. His Majesty was met at the Sallyport by the Admiral, and upon his appearance on the platform, a loud and most enthusiastic huzza burst from the spectators who crowded the beach on the right, the burst from the spectators who crowded the beach on the right, the boats and yachts in front and around, the large platform and the noof of the storehouse on the left. The King was uncovered, and when the magnificent, animated, and diversified prospect before him struck upon his eye, he appeared filled with admiration of the scene. His Majesty was dressed in a plain naval uniform, and looked exceedingly well. The Admiral offered his arm, but the King held the hand-rail of the stairs, and those descended the first flight. When he got to the second flight be took the Admiral sight arm, and walked steadily down to the venter's edge. Here he right arm, and walked steadily down to the venter's edge. Here he was received by Commodore Paget. Min P dajesty, on stepping into the barge, shook the Commodore cordinally by the hand. The battery then fired a second salute, which was r nawered by Fort Monckton, a battery far on the right near Spinly and. The men of war and the ships in the harbour next tor ik up the salute, and both the harbour and Spithead were berry it beneath a volume of smoke. The Portsdown Cavalry, wader Calonel Lindergen, received His The Portsdown Cavalry, under Colonel Lindegren, received His Majesty on the road. His Majesty was likewise escorted by a party of the Royal Hussans. The long and reiterated cheering of the warreness assemblage of Ladies and Gentlerated cheering of the we merous assemblage of Ladies and Gentlemen, was condessed dingly answered by our beloved Monarch's coming on dook, and politely bowing to the assembled multitude, all of whose stood up, uncovered, and again heartily cheered him. The roy al squadron had a very gay appenrance, every ship, public as a private, had her colours flying from every possible point. Sir / mass Hawkins Whitshed, the Port Admiral, in company with Sir George Cooke, received His Majesty. His Majesty instantly ordered some soup and cold-meat for dinner. After dinner the aw sings were put over the deck, and the dock turned into a draw merooms, where His Majesty took coffee, surrounded by his draw' ag-room, where His Majesty took coffee, surrounded by his Off oers, the Commodore, and several Captains of the squadron. The Royal Marine band were on board, and played, during the evening, many fine pieces of Italian and martial music. His Majesty elept on board the yacht in the harbour. From the dinner hour till morning the water was covered with boats, containing anxious and enquiring persons of both sexes. The darkness of anxious and enquiring persons of both sexes. The darkness of the evening was relieved by the reflection on the water of the lights which filluminated the houses on shore, particularly the Star and Garter, immediately abreast of which the Royal yacht lay. The Reyal Marine band was on board nearly the whole of the night. The Wednesday morning early, merry peals from the bells, with the Meitrity of the yacht party, gave tokens of a busy day for the aquatics. The Royal squadron, at Spithead, dressed in colours, with their topsails loose, the numerous yachts hovering round the Royal George, the Royal Standard floating at every point, the busy hum of the assembled multitude, formed a grand and pleasing sight. At sight the signal was thrown out, and the Royal yacht got under At eight the signal was thrown out, and the Royal yacht got under weigh; she passed the platform under a salute from every gun, standing out towards St. Helen's, where she tacked and run through Spitthead. As she passed along, the respective ships forming the corpul escort unmoored, and the spectacle became grand beyond iconception; the sea for miles was covered with craft of every description. The superb appearance of the Royal yacht was particularly striking: the whole stood away towards Cowes, consisting of st; Royal Scare the Royal George yasht, Commodore Sir C. Paget; Royal Sovereign yasht, Capt. Adam; Diffey frigate, Hon: Capt. Mr. Pelham's; with numerous others belonging to the Yacht Club, forming a gay summer squadron. Two new-built travelling carriages have been shipped at the dock-yard, to be placed on board the Active frigate. Majesty is accompanied by a suite, consisting of Admiral Sir B. Nagle, General Sir Hilgrove Turner, Sir Wm. Keppel, Colonel Thornton, Mr. Douglas, Sir Andrew Barnard, &c. General Sir W. Houston accompanied his Majesty to Portsmouth.—The following Officers took leave of his Majesty on board the yacht: Admiral Size J. Whitshed, Lieut.-General Sir G. Cooke, Capt. Hay, R. N., and Capt. Cuyler. His Majesty arrived at West Cowes about balf-past six on Wednesday evening, and dined on board his yacht, a large party were honoured with an invitation to the table. On Thursday party were honoured with an invitation to the table. On Thursday morning at half-past two the signal was made, and the royal squadron got under weigh for Ireland. An immense number of yachts accompanied the squadron. The whole were soon out of sight.—The wind having come round to the eastward, the royal squadron will make good way, and be advanced considerably on their voyage. It is not known whether His Majesty will remain any time in the neighbourhood of Plymouth to view the Breakwater, or proceed immediately on his voyage to Ireland. It is probable that the state of the wind and weather will influence His Majesty.-When the Royal yacht passed through Spithead, immediately on coming abreast of the Camel store-ship, on board of which were the suite of the late Ex-Emperor Napoleon, His Majesty, with the usual urbanity that ever marks his noble character, condescendingly sent Sir Wm. Keppel, and others of his suite, on board, to inquire after the health of Madame Bertrand and her family, as also the health of others, the attendants of Napoleon. They fully appreciated the high honor done them.

The preparations for His Majesty's reception in Ireland, are oing on. His Majesty who is not expected before to-morrow in going on. Dublin, will remain in Anglesea two days; the dinner to be given by the University will be most splendid. Dr. Hodgkinson, Dr. Lloyd and Dr. Wilson, are the Fellows who have the command o*l* it.

These ships proceeded nearly in the track of our great circumnavi-gator Cook, and got as far as 70 S. having ascertained (which is the principal thing discovered) that the land discovered is the North Pacific by Cook, and called by him Sandwich Land, is an island, or islands

Thursday, the Lord Mayor held a Wardmote for the election of an Alderman for the Ward of Cheap, in the room of the late Alderman Rothwell, when William Thompson, Esq. of Thames-street, was unanimously elected.

In the Court of Common Council, on Monday, some conversations relative to London Bridge arose, in consequence of a petition pre-sented from several proprietors of corn and coal cruft, in which they stated, that two additional arches would be sufficient to satisfy the stated, that two additional arches would be sufficient to satisfy the petitioners, and that an attempt to impose a tax or toll of 2d. in the ton, would be unequal and oppressive. Mr. Alderman Garant was of opinion that a new bridge was preferable to patching up the old one. Mr. Alderman Venables thought that widening the apples would answer every purpose. At length, it was carried by a larger majority, that the old bridge should be repaired and altered.

On Wednesday, being the 1st day in August, Dogget's coat and badge was rowed for, according to the annual custom, by six young waterman, just out of their apprenticeships. Thomas Cole, of Chelsea, was declared the winner of the livery and badge; William Meckliffe, of Bank side, came in second, he received 41. 7s. 61.; Joshua Judge, of Rotherhithe, was third, and received 21. k2s. 6d.

The general trade of the West of Scotland is going invariably on. The cotton mills are brisker just now than they have been for a considerable time. The manufactures carried on in the country towns are doing well; the wool manufacturers in Segwarton and Kilmarnock are in good spirits, and the work people are at present. more comfortable in circumstances than they have been since 1812.

MIDDLESEX JURIES.—The Shorlf of Middlesex has addressed an official notice to the constables of the several districts in the unty, warning them that if Jurors are not returned according to the provision of the Acts, the possities will be strictly enforced.—
The persons qualified to serve on Juries are—All persons having The persons quantied to serve on Juries are—all persons having; 101, by the year of freehold, or copyhold, or ancient demesse, or in rent, fee simple, fee tail, or for life. All leasehelders on leases where the imposed rents shall amount to 501, or upwards perleases where the imposed rents again amount to but, or upwards per-annum over and above all ground rents, or other reservations pay-able by virtue of the said leases. The proper officers are particu-larly warned against omitting to add the title of Esq. where it is dee, and of adding it where it does not properly appertain, with a clear to fair selections in cases of Special Juries.

COURT MARTIAL .- The Court Martial ordered to try Liout. I. Fletcher, first Lieut. of His Majesty's ship Tees, on charges of "cruel, oppressive, and unconver-like conduct towards several of the crew of that ship during the time he has belonged to her," is of opinion that the charge of cruelty has not been proved against or opinion that the charge of cruelty has not been proved against Lieut. Fletcher, but the remaining part of the charge has been proved against him, by his having inflicted punishment on some of the crew contrary to the regulations and instructions relating to His Majesty's service at sea, and to the customs of the Navy; and as the offence falls within the 33d article of the acts and orders for the regulation and better government of His Majesty's Navy and Shius of War and forces by sea doth adultas him to be dismissed Ships of War, and forces by sea, doth adjudge him to be dismissed from His Majesty's service accordingly; but in consideration of the very excellent character given to him by several Officers, and as his offence appears to have arisen from the bad system of punishment which existed on board His Majesty's ship Tees, the Court strongly recommends him to the favourable consideration of the Lords Commissioners of the Ampiralty. Capt. J. B. Hay, of the Queen Character President.

THE ARMY .- The 29th regiment of foot, stationed in Manchester and its neighbourhood, is about to exchange quarters with the 80th regiment, now at Chester and Liverpool. The 77th regiment is more from Rockdale, &c. to Sunderland.

The following regiments are in the Mediterremean :-- 8th, or late King's Own; 18th, Royal Irish; 28th, 86th, 51st, King's Own Light Regiment; 73th, 65th, King's Light Intentry; 90th Light Infantry—eight regiments; 26th, 27th, 64th, and 80th, at Gibraltar.

Lieut.-Col. Stareley, and one company of the Royal Staff Corps, are under orders to embark for the Mauritius.

Col. Sir A. Christie took the command of Chatham Garrison last eek, vice Major Desherough, promoted to be Lieut.-General,-Col. Burgoyne, of the Royal Engineers, has taken the command of the Royal Engineers' Establishment of that garrison—On Tuesday two companies of the 66th regiment arrived at Chatham, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Gildie, from St. Helena; the remainder of the regiment is expected to arrive shortly.—Four troops of the Sta Royal Lancers passed through Chatham on their route to Canterbury, where the head-quarters of the regiment are to be established: two troops passed by way of Maidstone on the same route.

The Royal South Gloucester Militia having completed the period of 21 days' training and exercise, were dismissed on Friday se'nnight, and returned to their homes.

In consequence of the Military Brevet, the command of the 13th Light Dragoons, 1st Foot (1st Battalion), 9th, 14th, 18th, 38th, 58th, 64th, 67th, 72d, 75th, and 69th, will become vacant, the Colonels being appointed to the rank of Major-General.—The Brevet includes the promotion of Col. Bourke, to the rank of Major-General. otion of Col. Bourke, C.B. of Thornville, near Limerick.

Our present military establishment at Portsmouth consists of 80,000 men. There are 108 bettalions of Infantry (Foot Guards included) and 28 of Home. Fifteen regiments of the Infantry and four of the Cavalry are in the service of the India Company. This establishment, it is said, is to be diminished to 66,000, by the redaction of 14,000 on the 24th of September. This reduction will be effected, not by the disbandment of any battalion whatever, but by that of two troops and two companies in each regiment through-out the army. The reducible officers, it is said, will be permitted to continue doing duty with their corps, though in the receipt of half-pay only, and will fall into vacancies as they occur in their tive regiments. This is an arrangement which, while the general measure is important to the country, cannot but prove ex-tremely satisfactory to officers juniors of their rank, very many of whom, in order to return to the service, have purchased the regulated difference, which, in several instances, is no inconsiderable sum. Should the country hereafter call for further curtailment, the unnumbered regiments and the second battalions of the Royals, of the 60th, and of the Rifle Brigade, would afford a reduction of near six thousand men; but the diminution of our force to an establishment so small, is a measure that should be undertaken with caution, when the wide extent of the British empire is considered, together with what is due to its safety and dignity. Before the King leaves Ireland, the four gallant regiments that retain the "Garb of Old Gaul," namely, the 42d, 78th, 79th, and 93d, will be brigaded in Dublin. The 92d, which completes the five regiments that continue the old Roman costume, is in Jamaica; but, though absent, its services will be no less called to mind by a Sovereign who well remembers that in every quarter of the globe the Gordon Highlanders have covered themselves with glery. the Gordon Highlanders have covered themselves with glery. The 93d, or Sutherland Highlanders, is at present the junior regiment of the line; they are in an admirable state of discipline. The flunk companies of the 66th regiment came home in the Camel, under Colonel Nicol. Lieutenants Morris and Usher, and Surgeon Henry, of the 66th, and the colours of the regiment, also ROMAN BRIDGE IN HOLLAND.—Grontages.—The Roman brigde, which was discovered in Holland in 1818, is now wholly cleared from the turf with which it was surrounded. It is three miles long, and twelve feet broad. It was laid by the fifteenth cohort of Germanicus, over the marshes, in which deep beds of turf have since been formed, and, in all probability, gradually sunk into the marsh by its own weight. The resinous particles which are in the marshy soil have probably contributed to preserve the bridge, which is entirely of wood. Every six feet there were posts to support the railing, as may be judged by the holes in which they were fixed. This great work, which consists of a judicious number of beams, appears to have been wrought with very large axes; the work managing is admirable. ship is admirable.

VOLCANO IN THE ISLE OF BOURBON

[Account of a late Explanton by an eye witness.]
On the 27th of February, at ten o'clock in the morning, the veather being cloudy, a frightful noise was heard, like that of a loud clap of thander, produced by the explosion of a column of fire and smoke from the crater of the volcano. The clearness of the rest of the day prevented a full enjoyment of this brilliant horror; but on the arrival of night a pillar was perceived, formed of masses of fire and inflamed matter, shooting majestically to a prodigious height, and falling with a crash which inspired ter The brightness which it diffused was such, that over all the extent of this quarter a letter could be read by the light of this prodigy. Towards the middle of the night three rivers of fire were discovered opening a passage near the summit of the mountain, a little below the crater, and taking a direction perpendicular to the high road. On the 9th of March one of them had passed it, leaving a line of lava six feet high by twenty feet broad, and rolled to the sea over an extent of 30 poles, throwing up the water to such a height that it fell down in the shape of

At the moment of the eruption, a shower composed of blackish ashes, of gold coloured glass, sulphurous particles, fell in the vicinity of the volcano. It rained thus for two hours. On the 9th of March, we experienced an earthquake, which was of so short a duration, that we could not determine its direction. From the first moment of the eruption to the day on which I write, the volcano as not ceased to burn.

On the first of this month it threw out such a quantity of smoke, that the higher parts of the island was covered by it. On the 2d the rain was so shundant, that the arm of the lava reaching to the see was extinguished, and on the 4th it could be passed without

An observer, whom I placed in such a manner as to seize the most ninute circumstances which the volcano in activity might present, tells me that at this moment the second arm of the lava has reached the high road on a base double the breadth of the farmer, or 60 poles. and that the third is 200.

Having long resided in Naples and Sicily, I have ascertained that the lava produced by the volcano of Bourbon does not at all resem-ble that produced by Vesuvius and Ætna; the lava of the two latter volcanos is compact, hard and not porous: trinkets and snuff-boxes are made of it, which takes a polish finer than marble. The pavement of Naples is made of square blocks from Mount Vessvius, and it is so slippery that in time of rain we might slait upon it as on ice. The lave of Bourbon is a species of scoria, of a black colons, and presents the aspect of iron dross.

(Signed)
The Mayor of St. Rose, PREYNE DE BALLERGUE. St. Roze, April 9.

An article from Naples dated 14th uit. in a French Journal, says Last Friday, Vesurius was covered during the whole day, not with volcanic lava, but with snow, which fell in great absudance and covered the whole summit of the mountain. This is a phenomenor rarely witnessed here, even in winter."

AGRICULTURAL BEPORT FOR JULY .- There is little of novelty to present to the public, at this time, as an agricultural report. The different crops upon the ground have improved since our last, from a favourable change in the weather, whilst yet there has been a considerable want of solar heat. Late high winds also may have had some degree of ill effect on the wheats under the flowering process. Nevertheless, all the crops appear in a prosperous and thriving state, and very probable at harvest, to afford a considerable sugmentation of the material tools of communication of the material tools of the material augmentation of the national stock of corn, pulse, and roots collectively. The stocks of roots was great, and the late rains will draw up a large aftermark. The hops are much mended, and will probably be a far greater crop than was expected. The growth of seeds this year has not been so successful. Tares will be a good crop. Fruit is in far greater abundance than the early senson promised, apples being the chief exception. The late rains have drawn up the turnip plants to a size and substance to defy the fly. Live stock, both fat and lean, has declined in price still farther since our last, with a change to encounter the usual autumnal fall. Wool has experienced a triffing amendment in price. The crops generally, in Ireland and upon the Continent, are reported to be of good

HOWARD AND GIBBS BANKRUPTCY .- On Wednesday there was another meeting of the creditors of the bankrupts, who stated that their accounts were not balanced and adjusted sufficiently correct; there were upwards of eight hundred accounts. The Accountant stated that it would take two months to correct the account fit for the creditors' inspection. The commissioners accordingly adjourned for that period.

IMPORTANT TO MERCHANTS HAVING ANY TRANSACTIONS WITH HAMBURGH.—Intelligence was received on Friday, of the fallure of a commercial house in which many of the German houses in this city are deeply involved. On inspecting the list of creditors, the wife of the insolvent appears as a principal creditor—and whose claims will probably absorb all the assets. It seems there is a law in Hamburgh which cannot be made too public, that the wife's property has a prior claim upon the whole estate for the first five years of her marriage. The bankrupt, in this case, has only been married four years and three quarters—it is therefore expedient in estimating a man's property by what he had with his wife to ascertain how long he has been married! We quite agree with " LOYABTY" in his suggestion, that in the reduction of clerks, fo. in public offices, those of radical politics should be first removed. We are quite ours that if heads of femishould be use removed. ## JOHN BULL.

LONDON, AUGUST 5.

WE have throughout the whole of our career, supported to the best of our abilities, the cause of LOYALTY, RELI-GION, and MORALITY; and in the execution of our selfimposed duty, we have deemed it right at all hazards to speak truths. We are aware that many of those truths must have caused the parties implicated, much pain; nor were we exempt from a painful feeting while laying them before the public. In attacking faction and radicalism, the Queen (who most ill-advisedly chose to accept the office of leader of the mob) came more frequently before us than almost any other individual; and we have never flinched from speaking what we thought just, or narrating that which we believed authentic; but now that GoD, in his inscrutable wisdom, has been pleased to visit Her Majesty with a painful and dangerous illness-GoD forbid that we should say another word. Our readers, therefore, if they find this Number of JOHN BULL more than ordinarily dull, will attribute its inefficiency to its right

Saturday, six o'clock, P. M.

We understand, by a Gentleman who has this moment arrived from Brandenburgh House, that the Queen is better, but no bulletin will be issued till half-past ten o'clock this

During the past week there has been much fluctuation in the Funds, occasioned by the conflicting accounts which have been received from Turkey relative to its rupture with Russia, and the public securities have been agitated in proportion. On Monday the Money Market presented an unfavourable aspect, as was the case on Tuesday; on both of which days 'Consols had considerably declined, having been done as low as 741 for Money, and 74 f for the Account; but on Wednesday afternoon a favourable alteration was visible, as advices had been received both from Russia and from the Turkish coast. which tended to show that the differences between Russia and the Porte might be amicably arranged: since that day nothing has transpired to remove the credit which that intelligence had received. Consols immediately rose, and within a few days have advanced nearly 13 per cent. Consols opened yesterday morning at 75% for Money, and 75% for the Account, and after some fluctuating closed at 75# for Money, and 75 for the Account. There has been an improvement also in the continental securities within the last few days; the French 5 per Cents. are as high as 86:60, and the Exchange 25:45. The Russian 5 per Cent. Bonds are at 814. American 6 per Cents. 1001, and the Spanish 5 per Cents. 56.

MESSRS. BODKIN, BROCK, & OLD TIMES.

A DISPUTE, very interesting to the parties, but not to the public, has taken place between the people belonging to the Old Times and a Mr. Bodkin, who stands charged with the heinous crime of hoaxing that incomparable paper.

We really do not know what the legal punishment for hoaxing the Old Times is, but if the proprietors were to prosecute every correspondent who humbugs them, their lawyers would have a rare time of it.

It seems that Mr. Bodkin has incurred the anger of these people, by writing a severe official letter, reprimanding them for their insolence in daring to alter an advertisement sent to their shop; this, and the fact that the society from whom the advertisement came immediately ceased to take in their paper, has entailed upon him the ire of the cockney journal.

We should add, in justice to Mr. Bodkin, that upon an investigation before a Committee of the Mendicity Society, of which he is Secretary, he was acquitted of the crime by a majority of sixteen to two,-the minority being radicals, and friends of the people who do the Timer.

One of these gentlemen is MR. W. WILLIAMS, and the other a Mn. TOOKE; whether he be a son of the late Horne Tooke or not, we cannot say; if he be, he is a living proof that talent is not hereditary, if jacobinism is.

On Thursday the 26th ult. embarked at Donaghadee, for Porton a nursuay the zoth uit. embarked at Donaghadee, for Portpattick, the Marchieness Dowager of Londonderry and suite, Lady Elizabeth Pratt, Lady Emily James, John Turnly, of Rockport, Req. and Dr. Neilson. The Marchioness seemed much agitated, and evident symptoms of grief were discovered as her agitated, evident symptoms of grief were discovered on her taking her leave of this country. Never was a Lady's departure from this or any other country more regretted by all classes of the community. The Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry intend leaving town on Monday next for Ireland.

Three natives of the interior of the Brazils, about 600 miles up the country, (a man and woman, and their child), have recently arrived in London: they are cannibals, but exceedingly timid. They wear car and mouth ornaments. COPYER SHOPE.—Thursday bills were issued from the Police Offices, in order to be distributed to various proprietors of shops or fooms for the sale of, or under the pretence of selling, ready made coffee, with a copy of the 18th section of the Act of Parliament, passed in the late session, intituled, an Act for the more effectual administration of the office of a Justice of the Peace, in or near the metropolis, &c. which requires that shops or rooms of the above description shall not be kept open after eleven o'clock at night during any part of the year, nor opened before the hour of four in the morning between Lady-day and Michaelmas, or before six in the morning between Michaelmas and Lady-day, and if shut up with persons inside during these hours, except persons dwelling therein, the owners will be fined 191. on conviction, and in default of paysecut sent so hard labour for three mostly.

MR. THOMAS MOORE.

"One of the French papers calls the poet, Thomas Moore, Sir Thomas Moore. We are ready to allow that Mr. Moore, both on the score of talents and high character, has a better claim to such n title than many a name in the catalogue of knights; but we believe there is a staunch inflexibility about his principles which has no very natural tendency to such an honour, unless Apollo were to institute an order of knighthood, and then he would be a Grand Cross."-OLD TIMES, Aug. 1, 1821.

We quite agree (for once) with the Old Times, that on the score of talent, MR. MOORE stands much higher than Sir Charles Aldis, Sir Henry Bunbury, Sir Colum-BINE DANIELS, or Sir RONALD FERGUSSON, or even than the last Knight of all, SIR J. B. POCOCK; nay, in spite of his appalling politics and loose morals, we are ready to place this warm and glowing songster high in the ranks of talentfor who could be so blinded by political feeling, as to deny to so sweet a poet all the distinction due to his merit.

But, when we hear of "staunch inflexibility of princiwe laugh outright-not at TOM MOORE-because he would not talk such trash—but at the ignorance of the wretched TIMES, for touching on a subject of which they evidently know nothing.

MR. THOMAS MOORE, the poet in question, holds at this moment the SINECURE OFFICE of Registrar of the Admiralty Court, at Bermuda, obtained for him by the SPECIAL FAVOUR OF HIS PRESENT MAJESTY.

It is equally true, however, that THOMAS MOORE, is not likely to fall in the way of knighthood, as he is obliged to live out of England, being PUBLIC DEPAULTER IN HIS OFFICE to a large amount.—Stupid, assish, Times.

FAVELL, WADDINGTON, WILLIAM SOAMES, THELWALL, HONE, BUTTON, and SLADE are created Baronets, and that His Royal Highness the PRINCE OF SCILLY has been elected Grand Cross of the illustrious order of ST. CAROLINE, as was also MR. GEORGE SKEGGS, the watchman, of Hammersmith, he having previously received the honour of knighthood from her Majesty's hands.

TO JOHN BULL.

MR. EDITOR,—I beg to add a twig of birch to the rod with which JOHN BULL whips his naughty children. The chastisement he has given to the disloyal and radical part of his family has evidently had a salutary effect, and I hope he will still continue to observe the old adage, " spare the birch and spoil the boy." I am, Mr. Editor, very truly yours,
A LOYAL SUBJECT.

THE QUEEN'S TRIAL.

When caps were toss'd up for the Queen, And needy Whigs were smiling seen To hug their darling wishes, SIR FERGUSSON Was heard to say To Rosslyn's Lord, "What game d'ye play?"
Quoth Rosslyn, "loaves and fishes." Then down to Pifeshire straight they went, And both their lungs and labour spent In CAROLINE-sedition; But every true-born Scotsman kenn'd The wily cheat too well to lend His name to their petition.

THE KING'S CORONATION. When "Live the Sovereign" rent the nir, And needy Whigs were forced to bear Their disappointed wishes, Then usuappointed wisnes,
Sir Fergusson was heard to say
To Rosslyn's Lord, "What game d'ye play?"
Quoth Rosslyn, "lick the dishes."
Then veering round, the patriot Lord, And he, the knight of bloodless sword, At length began to waver :-- Good! first afflict your Sovereign's heart, Then failing, act the counter-part, And court his Royal favour.

TO JOHN BULL.

MY TRULY DEAR JOHNNY,—With all your assiduity, I fear you will not know, unless I tell you, that Mr. Elliston, in order to welcome your beloved Queen, on Monday night, gave double orders to one hundred and fifty East India porters who were rehearsing for the Coronation. This caused a mighty rush from the two-shilling gallery into the empty boxes, into which these men were ushered. Your faithful sister, PATTIE BULL.

Should this be an incorrect statement, it is open to Mr. Elliston to contradict it either in this or any other Paper.

I, Robert Thomas Weaver, of Johnson's Court, Fleetstreet, London, Printer, Publisher, and sole Proprietor of the weekly newspaper called "JOHN BULL," make oath, that the number printed and sold of each publication for four weeks of the month of July of the said Newspaper is as follows -_

ROBERT THOMAS WEAVER.

Sworn at the Mansion-House this 3d day of Aug. 1821, before me,

WM. VENABLES, Alderman.

GEORGE THE THIRD, HIS COURT, AND FAMILY .- We have been reading, with considerable interest, a work under this title, recently published—an interest created by the force of truth. The book is shost unostentationally made, and professes to record "those national events in which our revered Sovereign was personally, or rather individually engaged," and we have before us, accordingly, a marrative of one of the most regular lives ever led by Momarch or shan.

It is curious to observe, in looking back upon the long and exemplary reign of the estimable George the Third, to see how unpopular he was as King—to how much peril, and to what frequent assassinations he was liable. The letter of Lord Onslow, who was with His Majesty, in his coach, on the way to the House of Lords; in 1795, gives a most awful and interesting detail of His Majesty's

Having given an account of the shot which was fired into the carriage, on its way down to the House, his Lordship continues—

"On our return home to St. James's, the mob was increased in " Parliament-street, and Whitehall, and when we came into the "Park, still greater; it was said, there were not less than an hun-"dred thousand persons there, and all the worst and lowest sort; the scene opened, and the insulting abuse offered to His Majesty, was what I can never think of but with horror, nor ever forget what I felt when they proceeded to throw stones into the coach, several of which hit the King, which he bore with signal pati-" ence, but not without sensible marks of indignation and resentment, at the indignities offered to his person and office. The glasses were all broken to pieces; and in this situation we were, during our passage through the Park. The King took one of the "stones out of the cuff of his cont, where it had lodged, and gave it "to me, saying, 'I make you a present of this, as a mark of the civilities we have met with on our journey to-day."

"civilities we have met with on our journey to-day."

This picture is terribly effective, and shews us, in plain and forcible colours, the angry movement of a turbulent and disaffected people, and what a moral lesson does it convey.

The name of George the Third is held sacred; his life quoted as an example of excellence—his reign as a model for Kings to study—nay, such is the veneration for his character, that the "Good old Kings" is cited even by the Radicals of the present day, as something of more than human excellence, which has passed away from us: and vet this good, this worthy, this anniable, virtuous, mild, and us; and yet this good, this worthy, this anniable, virtuous, mild, and unaffected King, was hooted, hunted, pelted, outraged, and assassinated by the moh.

Who, and what was the mob composed of?—Revolutionists and Jacobins. What is the mob composed of now?—RADICALS. The name, but not the nature, is changed.

There must be, in all communities, a number of disaffected persons. In proportion to so large a population as that of England, that number must naturally be great, and the cause wherein they can distinguish thermelves is the last object of their consideration.

When we recollect that George the Third was trented as Lord Onslow describes—when we recollect that over and over again his life was menaced; that twice in one day he was shot at; and then recollect, that Mr. Henry Hunt had a triumphal entry into London, we shall begin to see of what value the censures or praises of the mob really are.

The only fault to be found with the publication before us, is a degree of repetition, which, however, is necessarily attendant upon accuracy so minute as that which the editor has evinced in his collec-

Towards the latter end of the book, there are some descriptions of the close of His Majesty's life, and of his feelings and avocations, which we do not remember to have seen in print before, and which are very interesting. In short, upon the whole it is a desirable acquirition to a library, and hereafter will form a very pleasing record of the private life and virtues of an excellent Monarch.

THE WHIGS.

THE OLD TIMES has for the last week been floundering about, and wriggling and twitching its tail (as Brougham twitches his nose,) with pleasure and delight at having found out-such a thing!

They have found out-that the Whigs were twice offered place pending the proceedings against the Queen, and they have found this out from "almost official authority." The almost official authority, is the authority of the son-in-law of a man who has no office. Mr. Lambton, the Racical, writer an article in the Durham Chronicle, and tells them that his father-in-law, Earl Grey, was twice offered place last year, on condition of his carrying on the prosecution against the

We might be inclined to enquire if the prosecution were to be continued, and no change of measures intended, what was the proposed object to be attained by a change of men? and we might also feel disposed to ask, supposing such a proposition to have been made to the Earl Grey, why he should have refused to accede to it?

To such questioning, Lambton anticipates an answer, and by way of a flourish at Durham, says-

"Does he (the OLD TIMES) not know, (and every individual moving in the political circles of the metropolis knew the fact), that at the commencement and middle of the proceedings against the Queen, the Government was twice offered to the bender of "that party thus accused of such contemptible meanness, with but one condition—that he would carry on the presecution than pend-"one condition—that he would carry on the presecution that pending? Whatever temptation might have assaided Lord Grey, when
"thus offered the power of repealing the "six acts"—of introducing economy and reform—of uniting all classes of His Ma"jexty's subjects—in short, of enforcing all those great principles "which the Whigs have so long and so consistently advocated; he "felt himself bound to resist it when fettered by that condition, "which would have obliged him to continue proceedings which in
"his conscience he believed to be subversive of the sucred gainciples
"of justice, and at variance with the spirit of our constitution.
"No offers, however flattering to his ambition, however opening "No offers, however flattering to his ambition, however opening "to him the glorious prospect of improving the condition of his countrymen, could induce him to consent to the sacriate of an " unprotected female."

Now, Earl Grey's tempting hope of improving the condition of his countrymen, we conclude to have been founded on his Lordsh ap's exertions, and those of his colleagues when in place before, which, as far as finance is concerned, went to increase the Income Tax from five to ten per cents and as far as the r ational honour and prosperity were involved dictated the : florious expedition to South America, unden General

These burthens, these disgraces entailed on us by a WHIG Ministry are overcome and forgotten. The TORRES abolished the In come and Property Tax, and WELLINGTON, under a TORY Administration, has wiped off the stain which had fallen upon our arms—to look back to these is, therefore, useless; but to tickle the Durhamites, Earl Grey is made to shudder at the idea of "sacrificing an unprotected femals."

We believe THE EARL GRBY to be in private life one of the mildest, most unaffected, unassuming persons in England; we can, therefore, perfectly appreciate his Lordship's delicate sensibility with respect to the QUEEN; but we are, we-confess, somewhat surprised at the lateness of its ap-was it not under the Administration of which his Lord ship formed a part, that the "Delicate Investigation" into the conduct of the Princess of Wales took place?—Was it not EARL GREY who actually wrote the letter or message to her Royal Highness, in the late King's name, dated Jan. 28, 1807?-and was it not EARL GREY who then suggested her being tried for high treason? - and did his Lordship not take the opinion of the Judges upon the case?

We ask these questions as a matter of justice to the EARL GREY, because we look upon Lambton's Letter in the Dur. .' hum Chronicle more in the light of an election puff for himself than any thing else.

We quite agree with Lambton, however, that the appoint ment of the children of Whig Lords to be HIS MAJESTY'S Train-hearers at the Coronation has nothing to do with politics. We see, on every occasion, men, holding the most discordant opinions upon political matters, associating with each other on the most amicable terms,-always excepting radicals, who (as they ought to do) hang together, and are seen nowhere. Why, then, should THE KING be the only partyman in his dominions?

We are intimately acquainted with many lawyers in whose hands we would not trust a brief; and know flity physicians in London, who are mighty pleasant fellows in society, to whose care we would not of our free-will entrust the health of our lady's lap-dog;—but why should we deny ourselves the pleasure of their society, because we had rather not employ them professionally?

There is one part of this affair, however, more satisfactory than the rest of it, which exposes the bareness and emptiness of the Old Times most pleasantly.

Last week they tock the pains to shew how they had been hoaxed into the assertion (not the belief) that parties were sent into the theatres to applaud THE KING; now they have an obscure provincial print, with got hold of an article which they are highly delighted, and in the midst of their rapture at having a communication from LAMBTON, even at second-hand, insert it altogether, without stopping to observe upon it-either, that the whole story of the two offers to the whigs is a hoax, or that, by Lambton's own shewing, they ought to have known of them a year ago; for he asks, he not (The Times) know (and every individual moving in the political circles of the metropolis knew the fact) that at the commencement and middle of the proceedings against the Queen, the Government was twice offered to Earl Grey?"

We think, and we think our readers will admit, that this is rather a severe body blow to poor Otd Times, who, it appears, rather a severe body blow to poor Old Limes, who it appears is either HOAXED again into telling a deliberate LIE, and then arguing upon it, or into shewing that it gets its most important information (known to every individual moving in the political circles of the metropolis) twelve manths after date, from a COUNTRY NEWSPAPER.

This wont do-OLD TIMES.

THEATRES.

WE are not vain, and yet it really appears as if our advice with respect to the Haymarket Theatre had been taken. The change of system is most evident: and if we really have been the primary cause of the alteration, we cannot but rejoice, for the sake of the proprietors, as well as of the public, at the success of our efforts.

No critic, who had not an innate savageness in his disposition, could treat with severity the endeavours of the Haymarket proprietors to procure new actors, who being independent of the winter houses, might give their services regularly throughout the season, without "let or hindrance" from other masters. It was not this attempt which called forth our anger, but the apparent obstinacy which pertinaciously kept the new adventurers before our eyes, after their decided and unqualified failure.

A MELTAYLBURE made his appearance at the opening of the season; so did a MR. FAULKNER; so did a MR. WAND. Anybody who had seen a play once; and who saw those persons the first time they performed, must have been quite sure that a London audience would not endure them in the places

MR. F. WILKNER, by far the best of them, speaks sensibly, and like a scholar and a gentleman, but neither his figure, nor his age, nor his general qualifications, could justify a manager in putting him into the part of Falkland.

MR. WARD, who was then sober, and had not outraged descency, by appearing before the public disgustingly drunk, as he has since done; played, or rather went through Sin LECTUS O'TRIGGER, so as to shew himself unable either to lcek, or speak the character; and Mr. TAYLEUR B, whose great, clamsy, awlward, over-grown, ill-shaped figure, made him sufficiently ridiculcus in ACRES, to laugh AT, entirely exposed his bad acting, and his worse singing, and disgusted every bady in the house by his madelicate mode of dressing, and conducting himself throughout a new Farce, which, being of the true Haymarket breest, depended entirely on the performers, and was accordingly damued in company with MR. TAYLEURE'S reportation.

Still, these persons were suffered to annoy us; night after night, Mr. TAYLEURE and Mr. WARD, and Mr. FARLK-NER, and Mr. BAKER, and Mr. HAMMOND, and Mr. J. Rus-SELL, were thrust upon us in principal characters, headed by a fantastizal person, of the name of Rund, who with the deplorable coxcombry of such persons as PETBR. PROCTOR, alias Bearry Cornwall, has re-christened himself with the romantic name of EENRY AUGUSTUS CONWAY!

Let is be quite understood by our readers, that we would by no means banish these worthies from the stage—assuredly not; io very many parts Mr. FAULKNER would be highly respectable; MR. TAYLEURE might advantageously appear in countrymen, provided he dressed decently; Mr. RUSSELL be very tolerable in bailiffs and rustic servants, or as double to DECAMP, in Frenchmen, and MR. WARD, highly effective in landing his aid to bring on the sedan chair, in High Life below Stairs. It was the mis-application of their efforts that we complained of; the seeming want of consideration in appropriating the business of the theatre; and a spirit of selfwilfulness in keeping men in such business, after they had shown their utter incapacity to do it dezently or creditably.

We do not know (in his line) a more respectable performer than the very MR. BAKER we have mentioned; and there is a great deal of talent about the MR. HAMMOND, whom, we ave also noticed. But all their pretensions become ridiculous, if they are compelled to take parts, in which we have been accustomed to see the very best actors, and the greatest favourites of the day, and which are not at all suited to their

The proprietors and managers at length, thanks to their good sense, the good advice of their friends, or the bad houses which their first system drew, have made the amende hororable; they have done all that in them lies, to conciliate and improve; they have engaged Jones, of Covent Garden and we are assured from good authority, would have procured LISTON, had his health permitted his acting; failing in this, they have obtained the aid of MR. OXBERRY, who is a great favourite, and in many parts, (even of Liston's) very de servedly so.

More the proprietors and managers could not do, and they have done much,—there is a smartness in Mr. Jones's acting -a knowledge of the stage-a pointedness in his delivery-a vivacious gaiety in his manner, and a scrupulous neatness in his dress and appearance, which really cheer and animate one; and, in the study of his part he shews a minute attention highly creditable to him, which never fails of keeping him going, and very often tends to set others right, who with very good talents are not quite so correct in this particular. He is a tower of strength.

In the female department, the Haymarket is in uncommon force. We miss unwillingly our favourite GIBBS, whose sweet laughing countenance seems identified with that temple of mirth, but the ladies muster bravely, notwithstanding. MRS. H. JOHNSTONE and MISS BOYCE, are established favourites. MRS. PEARCE, is a very able substitute for MRS. DAVENPORT. MRS. JONES, a shart clever actress, and a very pretty ballad singer, (although, we must find fault with her selection of a horridly vulgar song in BOMBASTES FURIOSO,) and MRS. TAYLEURE, a very effective and vivacious chambermaid.

In the singing department, Miss R. Corri, and Mi RICK, are very respectable, and MISS CAREW gets through her songs as well as need be. But besides these we have a MRS. CHATTERLY, whose face reminds us of MRS. ESTEN, in her best days, (we beg pardon for remembering any thing so far back,) and whose acting is original, extremely pleasant, and particularly lady-like.

We have been told that this lady is French, and her arch and sparkling eye, and gay and easy manner corroborate the report, but it is hardly credible whatever may have been her aptness and application, to imagine a native of France to have attained so perfect a knowledge of the English language, and such a graceful facility in speaking it, as this very interesting person possesses.

In short, with the powerful addition made to the Haymar-ket corps, there can be no doubt that this pretty theatre will speedily resume its place in public favour; and we are most happy to be able thus pointedly to call attention to the mea- the inhabitants of these truly loyal towns, sures taken by the proprietors, who, by their exertions for the amusement of the town, have done better even than command success-they have deserved it.

At Drury-lane, on Monday, KEAN played Richard before the Queen: we never saw an actor and an audience beffet

The CORONATION has been brought forward by ELLISTON at considerable expense, and with very minute attention. The air to which the Bishops move is rather too lively, and we think it the Judges made their entré to the tune of "Since laws were made for every degree," it would be more effective than their marching to "Barney, leave the girls alone," which, however characteristic as an accompaniment for the progress of magistrates to quarter sessions, sounds rather too light for their jordships of the coif.

The equestrian part is cleverly and well managed, and the solitary Knight of the Gaster, though he does not look so well, calls down as much applause, in proportion to the number of spectators, as the original did on the day of the Coronation.

It is said that ELLISTON has been thus particularly correct in getting up this piece to gratify the Queen, who, not having been admitted to see the real ceremony, has prevailed upon him to gratify her insatiable curiosity by as good an imitation as possible, in a place where, as money levels all distinctions, she must be let in.

WARWICK.—Two oxen were roested in the Market-place, and tributed to the popu playing God save the King, and other loyal airs, and in the even an illumination took place in every principal street; the front of the House of Correction, the Gaol, and the County Hall were illuminated. At Learnington Spa, the Regent, Redford, and Royal Hotels, several boarding houses, and the frent of the Theatre, were illuminated, with lamps, &c.

HBMEL-HEMPSTEAD.—The church was decorated with flags and boughs, the bells rung, and about 2500 persons were regaled with beef, bread and beer. The children of the National School and School of Industry, had roast beef and plum-pudding. The principal inhabitants dined together the Ray. J. H. Moustain in the chair. The town was brilliantly illuminated.

KNUTSFORD, NORTHWIGH, MIDDLEWICH, NANTWICH.—The Coronation of His Majesty was celebrated in these towns in the most marked and joyous manner: the day was observed as a day of rejoicing: the Yeomany and Volunteers were assembled, bands of music paraded the streets, and the most lively demosstrations of days and attachment to the Throne ware exhibited by all classes of the inhabitants of these than tank lively demosstrations of POOLE.—The Mayor and Admiral, accompanied by the Cornoration, Jury, and many respectable persons, formed a precession from the Galidhall to the Quay, preceded by a hand of music, colours, &c. The ships in the harbour were decorated with volours, numberless boats, filled chiefly with well-dressed females, were on the water; added to which, the firing of cannon, the ringing of bells, and the acclamations of the populace, formed a grand and interesting scene. A party of 300 gentlemen, sat down to a sumptuous entertainment, provided for them in a spacious booth erected on the shore. The Mayor presided on the occasion. In the evening there was a grand display of fare-works.

TAUNTON.—The morning was ushered in by the ringing of bells, and the town bore the appearance of a holiday. The Taunton Troop of Yeomanry, assembled for a field-day, and on their return to the parade, fired three vollies, as did also the staff of the First Somerset Militia. In the afternoon, the poor inhabitants were regaled with several hogsheads of strong beer and cider, to drink the health of his Majesty. At half past four o'clock, a party of nearly 70 sat down to an excellent dinner, in the great dining-room at the Castle Tavern. The ladies, much to their housur, entertained the children of the several Charity Schools, with a liberal feast of roast beef and plum-pudding, in the Crescent Field, and good humour regulated the amusements of the day.

PERTH.—A very sumptuous party sat down to dinner in the George Inn, in honour of His Majesty's Coronation; the Lord Prowast in the chair, supported by Sir A. M. Mackenzie, and Sir D.

Moncrieffe, barts.

Wincanton.—Throughout the day the merry peal was heard, and the yeomanry cavalry had a field day, after which, being joined by some of the principal inhabitants, they partock of an elegant dinner, given by their loyal Captain on the occasion. Towards the evening several hogsheads of strong beer, with a plentiful supply of bread and cheese, were distributed at the Town Hall to the multitude to deals the Kinz's health.

Bridgemater.—The bells rung through the day, and cannon were fired during the intervals. The poor inhabitants of the town were regaled under an awning on the Quay, with beef, mutton, and pork, and several hogsheads of cider were distributed at different parts of the town. Public dinners took place at the principal inns, and there was a ball in the evening, at the assembly-rooms, which was numerously attended. The illumination was general.

WEEDON.—An excellent dinner was provided by the respective officers and men employed under the civil branch of His Majesty's ordance, three tents were pitched and decorated with laurel and flowers in the arsenal; at half past one thirty-three sat down to partake of roast beef and plum-pudding, and strong ale, &c. After dinner a number of loyal and appropriate toasts were drank. A royal salute was fired with twelve-pounder carromades planted on the hatteries, and salutes of four guns each were fixed at interval.

the batteries, and salutes of four guns each were fired at intervals.

Monatouth.—Extract of a letter, dated July 20:—"I know it will give you pleasure to bear that some of the Members of the True Blue Club made a collection for the purpose of gladdening the hearts of the poor on the day of the Coronation, and gathered sufficient from a liberal public, to give to upwards of 600 persons, a plentiful dinner of beef, bread, cider, ale, &c. About 70 gentlemen dined on the Kymin Hill, the guns of which were fired at intervals during the day, and rockets, &c. let off at night. Every one was in perfect good humour, and appeared determined to enjoy themselves as the members of the Old Kymin Club were wont to do. The Duke of Beaufort presented a very fine buck, and subscribed liberally for the poor. A gentleman of the town sent the prisoners in the County Gaol a dinner of beef, bacon, and potatoes, and a quart of ale to each; and his lady gave the children of the National School, two hundred in number, a three-penny plum-cake, with a crown stamped on it, and a glass of wine to each. They went in procession to their house, and after drinking to the health and long life of His Majesty George the Fourth, they sang very prettily, the Anthem of "God save the King," I must do our Radical type the justice to say, they contributed their mite on this occasion, though they would neither eat nor drink with the club, although invited, preferring rather to dine with his Grace Duke Humphrey.

Edinburgh.—It is a curious fact, and which we mention from the best authority, that on the morning subsequent to the celebratien of His Majesty's Coronation, it was found, that, during the night, not a single delinquent had been committed to the Police Office in Edinburgh. Such an occurrence was altogether unprecedented, and affords the strongest proof of the loyalty and peaceable conduct of the population of the metropolis of Scotland on this occasion.

NORTHAMPTON.—At an early hour, the bells of the respective churches commenced their merry peals, and bands of music paraded the streets, performing several favourite national airs, which were continued at intervals throughout the day. At twelve o'clock, part of the 19th regiment, the troop of Volunteer Cavalry (dismounted), and the staff of the Regular Militia, assembled in the Market-square, and fired some excellent vollies, &c.; afterwards, the staff of the Militia dined in a booth on the Market-hill, and great numbers of the population, together with the boys and girls of the Corporation and Blue Schools, sat down at aineteen tables, arranged in the Market-square, to partake of plum-pudding and beef, and drank the health of His Majesty in good ale, provided by public subscription; towards which the Corporation contributed 1001, and our two Bepresentatives in Parliament 501, each.

WARMINSTEE.—Two roasted oxen, and two sheep, with ten hogsheads of beer, and 4000 loaves were distributed indiscriminately to all the poor, men, women, and children. An excellent dimer was served up at the Bath Arms, to the Gentlemen of the town, and a fat buck (a present from the Marquess of Bath) was among the dishes. In the evening, there was a display of fireworks.

COGGESHABL.—On the day of the Coronation, 1622 persons were supplied with roast-beef and plum-pudding, and several hogsheads

SUNDERLAND.—The morning was ushered in by ringing of bells, the ships in harbour were decorated with colours. A subscription was raised, which afforded a comfortable direct to about 2000 poor people, each having a ticket, for which they got two pounds of beef, a threepenny loaf, and threepence in money.

FROME.—The loyalty and spirit of this town, (celebrated for its attachment to the King and Constitution,) was manifested throughout the week. A procession of the principal friendly societies with their splendid flags took place from Spring Gardens on the morning of the Coronation, attended by three excellent bands of music, each individual was decorated with purple ribbons. On their return to the Market-place, God save the King and other loyal tanes were performed. An excellent dinner was provided at the George Inn, (for which the Marquess of Bath provided a buck,) at which the principal inhabitants were present. Colonel Wickham presided, and was supported by the Rev. H. Sainsbury, and Captain Edgell.

A variety of lojal and constitutional toasts were drank.

Exmouth.—The Coronation was celebrated here commensurate with the occasion. About 700 poor families sat down to a plentiful supply of roast beef and plum-pudding, and als; grace having first been said by the Rev. R. Pratt, Pastor of the Parish. After dinner the "health of our patriotic King" was drank with enthusiasm by the kappy dinner party, with nine times nine, when a royal salute was fired. The vessels lying in the Port were decorated with flags. Then whole of the arrangements were under the direction of John Sweetland, Eq. An excellent dinner was given at the Globe Tavern, Sir Digory Forest in the Chair. In the evening there was a most brilliant display of fire-works, BOGNOR.—Nearly 200 of the children belonging to the schools in this neighbourhood were regaled with roast beef, veal, mutton, plum-pudding, &c. and ale, by the Earl of Arran, in the Lawn before his house, in honour of the Coronation.

DONCASTER.—The morning was ushered in by the ringing of bells, and an extensive procession paraded the streets. On arriving at the Mansion-house, Gad save the King was sung with the greatest effect. The Corporation joined the procession in their robes, and the whole proceeded to the south entrance, when a few de joie was fired by the West York Militia. Upwards of 2000 persons were regaled with roast heef and plum-pudding in the Parsonage-yard, and a plentiful supply of ale, to drink the health of our beloved Sovereigy. In the evening a ball and supper was given by the Mayor and Corporation at the Mansion-house, which was beautifully illuminated in various devices. Upwards of 500 tickets were issued.

CHELMSFORD.— A subscription of 3001. having been collected, a Committee was formed, and the money was devoted to the purposes of making every humble heart rejoice in the observance of the Coronation. On the preceding evening a fat ox was put down to roast, and tables were erected in the High-street, reaching from the Black Boy to the Saracen's Head. In the morning of Thursday, the discharge of cannon and the ringing of belis announced the commencement of the glorious ceremony, at one o'clock the bugles summoned the guests to the hospitable board; as soon as they were seated, the Rev. J. G. Ward, Rector, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Hutchinson, the Curate, pronounced a blessing from two chairs elevated for the occasion. Alout four o'clock, nearly 100 gentlemen sut down to an excellent dinner at the Shire Hall, John Crabb, Esq. in the chair. In the evening the town exhibited some excellent fire-works and was brilliantly illuminated.

TROWBRIDGE.— The Coronation day was celebrated in this town in a very appropriate manner. A procession to church, consisting of the Benefit Societies (about 1200 persons,) and the Charity Schools (about 1000 children,) took place. The Sermon was preached by the Rev. G. Crabbe. Dinners were provided for the poor, and a party of Gentlemen dined at the George, where many loyal toosts were drank. In the evening illuminations and fireworks concluded the hilarity of the day.

CHIPPENHAM.—Upwards of 2000 of the inhabitants with the children of the Sunday Schools were regaled on the Coronation day, in the open streets, with an excellent dinner to celebrate the event. A number of Gentlemen and the principal inhabitants afterwards dined together at the White Hart Inn. Many excellent toasts and sentiments were given. Fire-works were played off in the evening, and a boafare was lit up in the centre of the town.

**Unity and Lovelty?** was the motto of the day.

"Unity and Loyalty" was the motto of the day.

WISHEACH.—About 4000 persons dired together, in the Marketplace, on the day of the Coronation, and at six o'clock the rustic sports commenced. The Coronation bull, at the Rose and Crown lnn, was numerously and respectably attended.

HUNTING BON.—A liberal subscription was entered into, to provide a dinner for the poor, and every family who chose to accept it, in order to celebrate the day on which the Crown of Great Britain was placed on the head of George the Fourth.

PREBAGOROUGH.—The Clergy, Magistrates, and principal tradesmen, dined together at the Talbot Inn; and in order that the poor might participate in the rejoicings, a subscription was made amounting to 1601. of which sum Earl Fitzwilliam gave 201. Lord Milton 101. and the Bishop of Peterborough 101. and a good dinner was provided for them, and afterwards, such as chose, were supplied with the ABINGDON.—Upwards of 1800 persons were supplied by subscription with a dinner, and plenty of excellent beer. The women and children dired in the County Hall, and the men in the Market-place. The Corporation and principal inhabitants acting as cavers at the various tables, and others supplying the beer. The Corporation and a large party afterwards dired in the Council Chamber. At seven o'clock, according to ancient custom, 1000 cakes were thrown from the Market House, and several burrels of beer given thrown from the Market House, and several burrels of beer given to the populace by the Corporation.

Romary.—The day was observed with the ringing of bells, the shops were all shat. At four o'clock, a party of Gentlemen sat down to an excellent dinner at the Swan Inn, at which the Mayor presided, supported by the Recorder and Archdeacon of Gloucester. His Majesty's health was drank with enthusiasm. One loyal and constitutional spirit appeared to pervade the whole party. There was a fine display of ornamental fire-works in the evening. Brondland's Park, the seat of the Right Hon. Viscount Palmerston, also presented a scene of great festivity; two fine sheep were roasted whole in the Park, and cut up in the presence of several thousand spectators; after which, about 100 of his Lordship's Jabourers with their wives and families, sat down to excellent fare provided for them.

SHERBORNE.—The houses in this town were decked with oak and laurel. Five oxen and three sheep were roasted, and given away, together with a liberal supply of strong beer. An excellent dinner was provided in the Town Mall, where the health of the King was drank, and after circulating the glass freely, the gentlemen adjourned to a field in Cold Harbour, where tea and coffee were provided, which was served up by all the beauty in the town. In the evening, brilliant fire-works were exhibited.

COLCHESTER.—A public dinner was given at the Three Cups Inn, to celebrate the Coronation, at which Sir G. H. Smyth presided. The Mayor and Corporation attended divine service, at St. Peter's Church. A subscription had been collected, amounting nearly to 3001. which was expended among the poorer inhabitants, to provide a comfortable dinner at their own houses, and bread and meat, and money for beer, were supplied to 6000 persons for this purpose. The town was decorated with flags and boughs, and the shops were shut. The bells rang during the day, and a display of fire-works took place in the evening.

CARLISER.—At sun rise, the flag was hoisted at the castle; we have, unfortunately, no bells to ring on such occasions, though we can boast of a cathedral and two parish churches. At one o'clock, the artillery of the castle fired n royal salute; the infantry on the castle walls, and the cavalry in the New-road, near the castle, firing a few de joie every seventh gun. As soon as this ceremony was over, 36 harrels of ale, and $500 two-penny loaves were distributed to the people. At four, about ninety gentlemen sat down to clinner, in the Coffee-house Assembly Room; Sir Joseph D. A. Gilpin, our Mayor, in the chair; William Hodgson, Esq. of Houghton House, officiated as vice-chairman.

BUSTON-UPON-TRENT.—The morning was ushered in by the musical peal of bells, which continued at intervals until midnight. At ten o'clock, a procession was formed, consisting of the Ladies and Gentlemen, the Bailiff, Sir J. D. Fowler; the Burton troop of Yeomanry Cavalry, the Clergymen, the children of the Sunday Schools, (about 800) &c. &c. after parading the streets, they proceeded to church, where an excellent sermon was preached by the Rev. H. Jones. 1000 men were afterwards regaled at the different public houses, with roast-beef and plum-pudding, and two quarts of strong ale each. At four o'clock, 100 gentlemen dined at the Town Hall, Sir J. D. Powler in the chair, where the greatest and most unanimous loyalty provailed until a late hour. The Sunday School children were treated with dinner & tea, and 800 poor women received one shilling each for tea, by the ladies of Burton. The populace were treated in the evening with some hundred gallons of ale. On the following day, a ball took place in the Town Hall; several sheep were rousted, and with a syitable quantity of ale, given away.

EXETER. The morning was ushered in by the ringing of bells, and the firing of cannon. The Mayor, Recorder, and Corporation, attended by the corps of constables, and the incorporated trades, with their banners, were met at St. John's Hospital by the Forty Guardians of the Poor, and a highly respectable and numerous body of gentlemen of the county of Devon and city of Exeter, and officers of the army and Navy, accompanied by the children of the Blue School, went in procession to the Cathedral, when on entering, God sace the King was played by the organ. The Anthem—"The King shall rejoice," was sung by the choir, and Mr. Archdeacon Jones preached an excellent sermon. At welve o'clock, the East Devon Mittian fixed four vollies, in the Barrick-square. About half past five, 230 gentlemen sat down to dinner. The new hall-room was thrown open at aine o'clock, and it soon filled with a brilliant assemblage of the rank, fashion, and beauty of Exeter and its SAPPRON WALDEN.—The morning was ushered in with the ringing of bells, the hoisting of flags from the towers of our church and custle, and at the Town Hall, and with every other demonstration of rejoicing. A noble ox was roasted whele, in honour of the day. At twelve o'clock, it was deposited upon a table in the centre of a ring-fence, 300 feet in circumference, and there distributed in the most quiet and orderly manner, amongst the crowd without the ring. A plentiful supply of good old beer was apportioned to their poorer neighbours, superintended by several gentlemen of the town. A band was stationed upon a platform erected above the table, (over which was flying the white ensign of Old England), and in the mean time, cheered the spectators with various national airs, and other appropriate times. Between two and three o'clock, the flag was lowered amidst the huzzas of the multitude, and borne before the hand, to the Rose and Crown Inn, where it was again hoisted, the band playing "God save the King." At four o'clock, the inhabitants of the town and its vicinity resorted to the several ions, and there partook of dinners prepared for the occasion. The company at the Rose and Crown Inc were gratified by the national and other dirs which were admirably performed by the band, well selected, and peculiarly appropriate to the several loyal toasts which were given from the chair, by our respected Mayor, and among them the following: "The chip of the old block," with four times four, and was followed by "God save the King," played in a most spirited style, the company standing, and heartily joining in the chores. In the course of the evening, it was proposed from the chair, that the anniversary of the day should be observed, and the proposal appeared to meet the wishes of the party; nor do we hesitate to add, that the nineteenth day of July will be annually welcomed by our loyal townsmen.

PORTSMOUTH.—The morning was ushered in with merry peals of bells, colours displayed on the churches, the shipping, and at all the public, and many of the private buildings; the interests of which was increased at noon by the assembling of the military around the lines of the garrison, who fired, in succession with salutes from the batteries, a few de jote, as did the ships of war a royal salute of twenty-one guns each; and they being deesed with their colours, presented a most lively and picturesque sight. Amongst the numerous festivities on the joyful occasion was a meeting of the Captains of the Navy affoat and on half-pay, to dine at the George Inn in this town, Commodore the Honourable Sir Charles Paget in the Chair, and J. R. Glover, Esq. Vice. 500 of the children of the National School, were regaled with a dinner of roast beef and plum-pud ling, the children sang "God save the King."

BIRMINGHAM.—The morning was whered in with the ringing of bells, and joy and good humour appeared in the countenance of every one. The churches and chapels of the Establishment were opened, and sermons suitable to the great occasion were preached to the different congregations, which were numerous. At one o'blook upon the firing of a royal salute by some six-pounders, upon Bennett's Hill, the dinners commenced. The children of the Blue Coat, National, and Sunday Schools, were regaled at the expence of the different congregations. A number of the manufacturers the test workmen. The aged and infirm, full 1600, male and female, were regaled with roast and boiled beef, and plum-pudding, and ale, the old folks heartily singing, after dinner, "God save the King." At half past five o'clock, 175 of the principal inhabitants dined at the Royal Hotel, Isanc Spooner, Esq. in the chair, supported by Captain Pickard, (R. N.) Captain Owen, Captain Devey, Hyla. Holden, Esq. &c.; the chairman gave "the King.—God bless him," which was enthusiastically drank with three times three, and "God save the King," was sang by all the company standing, the cannon on Bennett's Hill firing at the same time a royal salute. The chairman afterwards gave "the Royal Family," and other customary patriotic and loyal toasts; amongst which, "Lord Liverpool and His Majesty's Ministers," was received with long and continued peals of applause. "The wooden walls, and the hearts of oak who man them." A fete was given by Mr. Boulton and Mr. Watt, to all the workmen employed at Soho manufactory and foundry, to celebrate his Majesty's Coronation, by dining together, each on their respective premises, and amounting altogether to upwards of 500 persons.

DURHAM.—The bells of the churches rang many a merry peal. A subscription was entered into for the purpose of presenting meat, bread, and ale, to such persons as might apply for it, and an immense number of families received the gift. An ox was roasted at the head of Old Elver, and was, together with a quantity of ale and bread, attempted to be distributed, but owing to the pressure of the crowd, the greater part of it was wasted. In this instance, Lord Stewart was the donor. In the afternoon, nearly forty gentlemen sat down to an excellent dinner at the Waterloo-hotel, Major General Seddon in the Chair. There were public dinners at some of the other inns; and the day passed over amidst general hilarity.

BRURRLEY.—There was a procession; and a subscription was opened for the poor; to which G. L. Fox, Esq. M. P. for the borough, contributed 50 guineas.

PONTEFRACT.—The mayer, corporation, gentlemen of the town, and military, formed a procession which passed through the principal streets in the town. The poor, to the number of 900 or more, had an excellent dinner given to them in the market-place.

SCARBOROUGH.—A public dinner was provided by the corporation, who also gave 501, to the poor, in tickets of its each.

SHEFFIELD.—The day was celebrated by a grand procession, by laying the foundation stone of St. George's Church, and by public dinners.

LEEDS.—The morning was ushered in by the ringing of bells, and the display of flags from the steeples of the charches and from private houses. The shops and warehouses, with a very few exceptions, were shut up, and it was, in every sense of the word, a holiday. The Leeds volunteers, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Hardy, joined by the 15th Royal Hussars, and the Leeds squadron of the Yorkshire Hussars, proceeded to Woodhouse-moor. Soon after five o'clock, the Mayor went to the Music Hall to receive his brother magistrates, the members of the common council, the clergy, the hussar, staff, yeomanry, and volunteer officers, and the gentlemen who had been invited to the corporation dinner, about 115 in number. The following toasts were drauk:—"The King,' with four times four; which was drank with thunders of applaus." The Duke of York, the heir presumptive to the throne," the times three. "The Duke of Clarence, and the other branches the Royal Family," three times three. "The Navy Army," three times three. "The Navy Army," three times three. "The memory of our good old K George III,"—In the evening there was an elegant Ball.

DEVIZES .- The celebration of the Coronation was manifested by a general subscription for the poor, who were plentifully and liberally regaled. Each of our members gave 50l. to add to the charitable fund. The inhabitants generally testified their happiness by every species of loyalty.

Bosoughbridgs and Aldborough.—From an early hour these loyal little boroughs presented an unusual some of gaiety. The belis began a merry peal as early as five o'clock, and continued at intervals during the day, which was extremely favourable. The streets were througed with people, participating in one general display of loyally, and all party feelings were laid aside in the en-joyment of a common festival. The National School children were all treated with tea and cakes, and other children had a similar donation from Mrs. Lawson at the Hall, and after a merry dance donation from Mrs. Lawson at the Hall, and after a merry dance all drank His Majesty's health in bumpers of wine. In the evening, bands of music, with flags, paraded the streets, and played many loyal and national airs. At the Crown Inn, about forty gentlemen of Boroughbridge and the neighbourhood sat down to a sumptuous dinner, containing all the delicacies of the season, Andrew Lawson, Esq. brother to the late M. P. in the Chair, and Mr. Middleton, the Borough Bailiff, Vice-president. An excellent band of music attended, and the conviviality of the evening was kept up to a late hour. His Majesty's health was drank with four times four, and "God save the King" was sung by the whole of kept up to a late hour. His Majesty's health was drank with four times four, and "God save the King" was sung by the whole of the company at the proposal of the president. Besides the usual toasts from the Chair, we particularly noticed—"The late Queen, and may her example always influence the female society of Great Britain." There were parties at the various inns, and a merrier evening was never known within that ancient borough.

St. Mary Fraatford, Bow.—A fund was raised by subscriptions for the property of the strength of the besides of the strength of the besides of the strength of the strengt from the principal inhabitants, to provide a public dinner, so that all classes might partake of the general joy. Among the subscribers, Frederick Hodgson, Esq. to a liberal donation added a butt of porter. Upwards of 800 inhabitants were freely entertained with a prime English dinner, namely rosst-beef, plum-pudding, and a copious supply of strong beer. At the Coburne's School, Oldford, after dinner the health of his Majesty was drank with continued cheers; a bend of music played "God save the King," which was sung by the company; favourite national airs were played by the band; and merry peals of bells increased the happiness and exulta-tion of the day.

WELLS.—The Cathedral and St. Cuthbert's hells, with the firing of cannon, ushered in the day. The Mayor and Corporation, with a procession of 800 persons consisting of many respectable gentle-men of the city and neighbourhood, the Cavalry, City Companies, Friendly Societies, Children of the Blue and Diocesan Schools, &c. &c. attended the Cathedral, where an appropriate sermon dcc. attended the Cathedral, where an appropriate sermon was preached by the Rev. #### POLICE.

Bow-street.—On Thursday, Henry Tuck, William Carpenter, and Stephen Dando, were charged with robbing John Boseley, and attempting to murder him. Boseley is a travelling pedlur, and was on his return from Cherisey, (where he had disposed of the principal part of his merchandize), when on Wimbledon Common, about half past ten o'clock, he passed two men, who wished him good right. He had not proceeded above 50 yards, when he felt a cloth drawn over his eyes, and a strenuous grasp by some persons who came softly behind him, at the same time they cut him sewho came softly behind him; at the same time they cut him severely over the face; the cuts were repeated five times; exhausted by the loss of blood, he fell to the ground, and they then rified his pockets of a small box containing four 11. notes, 29s. 6d. in silver, and some trinkets, and left him for dead. In this state, he was found by the Horse Patrole, and two of the prisoners were apprehended on the Kingston road, and the other (Dando) on the Wimbledon-road. Dando, who is a sheemaker, and lives at Wimbledon, gave a satisfactory account of himself, and stated, that he fell in with the two other prisoners, and had parted with them some time before the Patrole apprehended him. He was discharged, and the other prisoners committed for further examination.

the other prisoners committed for further examination.

Friday four men underwent a short examination before G. R.
Minshull, Esq. the Sitting Magistrate, and were remanded, charged with being concerned in robbing the Dover Waggon, belonging to Messrs. Hanbury, of property to the amount of £3,855.

George Suckling, a genteel looking young man, was charged by Mrs. Mary Ann Stump, of James-street, Buckingham-gate, with stealing from her person her reticule, containing a watch, silver, &c.—Mrs. Stump was proceeding along the Strand, and the prisoner came running along on the same side of the way; as he passed her, he snatched the reticule out of her hand, and was making off, when he was secured by a person who had observed the transaction.—He was fully committed for trial.

Marlborough-street.—On Thursday a person named Goulston, a jaweller, of High-street, Shadwell, and Newman, a printer, of Bishapsgate-street, were charged with forgery on the Prussian Government Bank. The enquiry extended to some length. It appeared that forged notes, of the value of three shillings each, have been circulated in Berlin and other parts of Prussia to the amount of many thousand pounds in value. A foreigner was arrested by the Police of Berlin, and he confessed that he was in league with a banker of that country, and that the forged notes league with a banker of that country, and that the forged notes were manufactured in England, and that he received them from Goulston. He further stated that he and a person named Ludd (in prison at Berlin) were great traffickers. That they, a short time since, received 5000 of these notes from the prisoner Goulston, for which they paid him 101, a thousand, and circulated them through the Prusian banker. He cause over with the Police, and procured first, 12,000 and afterwards 21,000, which he delivered to Foy, the Bank Inspector. Foy went to the house of Newman, where he found the men at work on them. Both the prisoners were remanded. g took place on Friday, when the Bank _further_bearin tisfied that Mr. Newman had not participated in any guilty know-ledge of the transaction, he was liberated on bail. Goulston was HATTON-GARDEN.—Priday ten of the persons apprehended at the Belvidere on Wednesday, at the time of the ascent of the Balloon, charged by the constables with picking pockets, were again brought up, five of them were discharged; and the following five— James Brugg, Geo. Watts, Michael Daly, Wm. Rorsley, and Sam. Buett, were remainded for a week.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—Lee, Hardy, and Jones, the three soldiers who were acquitted at the Old Bailey last Sessions, of the murder of Wm. Cogle, were brought up, charged on an indictment found at the last Westminster Sessions against them, for being concerned in the riot in which Cogle was killed on the 10th of June. Captain Drummond attended, and begged to know whether the prisoners would be admitted to bail. The magistrates told him it was certashly a bailable offence, and if proper ball were produced at any time before the Sessions, they would be discharged. Capt. Drummond infimated that he would liberate the prisoners, but for the present they were committed to prison.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

A few days since, some fishermen found, drowned in the Clyde, the bodies of a man and woman, both young persons; they were tied together with a silk handkerchief, the woman reclining with one arm on the shoulder of the man, and the other round his waist.

On Monday last, a vessel arrived at Sandwich, purporting to have a cargo of eggs and butter, when some suspicion arising, she was immediately minutely examined by the Revenue Officers, and found to have two false linings, in which were found a large quantity of snuff, tobacco, and spirits, most curiously concealed, which, with the vessel, were of course seized.

Mr. Bishop, the musical composer, was on Friday se'nnight thrown from his chaise and severely hurt; the accident was occasioned by his horse falling, owing to a dog crossing the road, at which he took fright.

On Tuesday night an Inquest was held before C. Jemmett, Esq. Coroner for Surrey, at the Wellington Arms, Kent-road, on the body of William Rose, carter to Mr. Richard Edmeed, market-gardener, New Cross, Deptford, when it appeared that on Saturday morning last, about ten o'clock, as the wag on was returning home from Covent garden. the driver was so much fatigued that he from Covent-garden, the driver was so much fatigued that he placed himself on the front ladder of the waggon, and falling asbeep, fell under the near forewheel, and had his head crushed to pieces in the most shocking manner, which caused his instant death. Verdict—" Accidental Death."

At Manchester Sessions, last week, a person named Samuel Waller, one of the sect called Ranters, was indicted for causing a nuisance and annoyance in the public street, at Ashton-under-Lyne, by frequently preaching there, and attracting a numerous assemblage of hearers. The defendant was convicted, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the New Bailey, at Manchester; and, on the expiration of that term, to give securities, himself in 501. and two sureties in 251. each, for his good behaviour, for three

Yesterday morning a large stone fell from the top of the Royal Exchange. In its passage it broke various thick planks: many of the men clung to the poles, and one jumped from a ladder a considerable height. Fortunately no person was hurt.

COMMERCIAL REPORT, FROM JULY 29 TO AUGUST 4, INCLUSIVE.

The demand for B. P. Sugars for home consumption continues good; the middling and low qualities, under 59s. to 61s. still press heavily, whilst better sorts are much sought after, and command the extreme rates of the praceding week. The discouraging accounts from the continent for refused Goods (which are unusually depressed) operates most sensibly in curtailing the deliveries to the signature of the continued theory, and we may state generally a depreciation of 3s, per Cwt.; St. Domingos 113s, to 114s, 6d.; Havannahs 112s, 6d. to 113s. The unprecedentedly low prices of Rums have attracted the notice of shippers and speculator; yesterday 300 puncheons of Leewards, nearly Proof, sold at 1s, 2d. yesterday 300 puncheons of Leewards, nearly Proof, sold at 1s. 2d., which is an advance of 1d. per gallon; Jamaicas are also held equally firm, but they have not experienced a proportionate demand.

—Rice has been influenced by the Grain Market, and good White Bengalat 11s. to 12s. established an improvement of 1s. to 1s. 6d. per cwt. but this being contingent upon the state of the weather, much doubt must necessarily attach to its being maintainable. The sales of Cotton have been extensive, though it were difficult to sales of Cotton have been extensive, though it were difficult to announce any augmentation in the currency of last week; Surats have taken the lead, about 3400 bales disposed of at 6 to 5; 2000 Bengals 5½ to 6½; 300 Pernams 12½ to 12½, in boad; and a few Demeraras 11½ to 12; St. Vincent's 10½; Snyrmas 7½ to 6½, duy paid. We are advised from Liverpool of a steady market at previous rates, a large sale of Sea Islands, Orleans and Bowek, announced for yesterday, was contemplated with interest.

PATENT ECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMP.—The Chamber Lamp, increasing in interest as the days shorten, the Patentee is induced to present this to the Public as a source of comfort superior to any in this country, or perhaps the world. It embraces brilliancy, perfect safety, and certainty for any length of time required, will bear any motion, can be regulated to burn the longest or shortest night, disappearing in the morning without smake or smell. The same principle applies, and the Lumps equally pertable, on elegant pedestals, for the dining table, sideboard, study, manticipiere, &c.; and also for the Glass Greeina Hanging Lamp for the half, conservatory, passages, spaircase, drawing-room lustres, &c. elegantly simple and much admired. It is a most essential acquisition in all these Lamps, that they will burn fice whole evening without trimming, requiring to be replenished with cotto only once in two or three months, and so simple that a child can turn them. The annual expense of light burning every night in the year, proportion to with candles, is, for the chamber as above described, 10s.; for the kitch — equal to a candle eight to the pound, 12s.; parlour or mould sives, 15s.; — d to fours, 17s.; suposes a dome lamp for the dining table, equal to four mould fours, 68s.; or hall, three mould sives, 45s. Thus the degrees of light more or less, can be regulated at pleasure suited to the occasion. By this statement Gentiemen may ascertain the great saving in proportion to their establishment, bearing in mind, that these Lamps burn as sweet as wax.—Sold for the Patentee, by Thomas Pearce and Co. No. 268, facing the 1 st of St. Clement's Church, Strandi who, to secure the reputation of this invention from the effects of a cultierated oil, are bost at to sell none but pure and genuine Spermaceti. Letters addressed, post paid, from any part of the Kingdom, will meet with prompt attention.

BY THE KING'S PATENT.

CHANGE of RESIDENCE induces the Patentee to acquaint the Nobility and Gentry, that in consequence of the counterfeits under the same name, he has confined the sale to such respectable houses (only) who deal in genuine articles. The PATENT VIOLET 90.24 having a decided preference, both as a washing and shaving Soap, fordts cleansing, beautifying, softening, and balsamic proparties on the skin, that it was in consequence of these inestimable qualities His Majesty granted his Letters Patent. It should invariably be asked for as "Ball's Patent Violet Soap." It is sold in squares at 2-6 d. and in Boxes countaining trelve squares, at 25-or twelve small, at 15s.; the shaving cakes, at 2s. 6d. cook, or in boxes, 4s. 6d. which are re-filled, at 2s 6d. and it is forwarded to all parts of town or country, warranted to arrive safe, by addressing a line by post to the Patentee. Observe his name and signature is on the outside of the wrapper.—J. B. HALL, Np. 26, Madlow-street, Burton Crescent, London.

URLING'S LACE (of the real Point and Brussels fabric), 174,
Strand, near Somerset House, removed from 392, Strand.—G. F. URLING and Co. beg to inform the Fashionable World, they have prepared for the Season a verious and catendric Assortment of their PATBN'T LACE DRHSSES, from Four Guineas to 100 Ginineas each; some of whitch, from recent improvanents, they huably presume to compare with the most perfect foreign productions. Also a great variety of Veils. Scarfs, Squares, Laces, Nets, &c. of every description. This peculiarly clear and transparent Article having, in the higher circles, superseded the use of common Lace, which becomes rough and full of three on the first washing, the Patentees respectfully apprise the Public, that the latter is frequently starched to conceal its defects, and make it resemble Urling's Lace, which, therefore, can-only be relied upon as genume at their Wholesale and Retail Establishment in London, or of the Country Dealers amplied by thum.—Every Article is distinguished by a Seai, with the Patentee's Initials, "G. F. U. and Co." and the words, "by the (late) Queen's authority." Specimens, shewing the superiority of Urling's Lace over common Lace, may be seen in Ackermann's Reponitory, La Belle Assembles, and other fashionable works, and may be had gratis, by application, post-paid, to G. F. Urling& Co.

Country Declars supplied upon the most liberal terms.—Manufactory, Basford, Nettinghamshire.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH, on an unprecedented principle.—Mr. AGRAY, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, in London, continues to supply the loss of Teeth, on the successful system introduced by himself in 1813, which has been found to answer all the purpose of the human Teeth, in mastication, articulation, appearance, &c. and to remain perfectly secure in their places by the pressure of the a mosphere; thereby avoiding pinning testumps, tying, twisting wires, or featening springs to the adjoining Teeth, or any attachment whatever to the remaining Teeth; and consequently, instead of injuring, afford them support. These artificial Teeth may be taken out, and replaced by the weaver with the greatest facility. To those whereunire whole or half sets, Mr. Gray undertakes, at his own risk, to furnish pleces which shall answer all the purposes above described, without the incambrance of the spiral springs, which are usually attached to such pieces.—25, 6ld Burlington-street.

BURGESS's NEW SAUCE for general purposes, having given such great approlation, and the demand for it continuing to increase, JOHN BURGESS and SON beg most respectfully to offer this their best acknowledgments to the Public for their liberal patronage of the same: its utility and great convenience in all climates, has recommended it to the most distinguished foreign connexions, who have all spoken highly in its recommendation.—It is prepared by them 9NLY: and for preventing disappointments to families, all possible care has been resorted to, by each bobble being sealed upon the cork with their firm and address, as well as each label having their signature, without which it cannot be genuine.

JOHN BURGESS and SON'S long established and much-esteemed ESSENGE of ANCHOVIES, continues to be prepared by them after the same manner that has gires the greatest asitefaction for many years.—Warabonase, 197, Strand, corner of the Savoy-steps, Lundan.—The original Fish-Sauce.

THE only Article that REALLY PREVENTS the HAIR FALLING OFF, or TURNING GREY, produces a luxuriant Growth on the baldest places, and beautiful flowing Curls, is ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL,

The Original and Genuine, which for many years has been universally admired, and is acknowledged the best and cheapest article for producing a beautiful Head of Hair, and produces WHISKERB, BYE-BROWS, &c. Its pre-enjinest virtues have gained it the patronage of Royalty and the Noblity, and is attested by an immense multitude of witnesses. Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d.; and One Guinea per Bottle.

Also, ROWLAND'S BRENCE BOF TYRE.—By merely wotting the Hair with this Preparation, the Proprietors warrant to produce immediately a perfect change in RED or GREY HAIR, WHISKERS, BYE-BROWS, &c. to a beautiful glossy and permasent Brown or Black, initiating the exact natural colour. Washing makes this Dye the more durable. Ladies or Gentlemen may dye their Hair with ease and secresy. Price 4s.; 7s. 6d.; and 10s 6d.

Rold, Wholeslae, Retail, and for Exportation, by the Sole Proprietors, A. ROWLAND and SON, corner of Kirby-street, the first turning on the right in Hatton-garden, Holborn, Loedon; and by appointment, by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders throughout Europe.

A. ROWLAND and SON respectfully caution the Public against spurious Articles. Under their Names Impostors have signed their limitations. A. Rowlandson, which deception renders it necessary to observe the true signature, A. ROWLAND and SON, in Red Ink, wrote on each Bottle.

A Rowlandson, which deception renders it necessary to observe the true signature, A. ROWLAND and SON, in Red Ink, wrate on each Bottle.

ALDNESS or GREY HAIRS will not be seen, although there are Articles daily brought out for the Hair, and paded in the Newspapera, with pretence of Queens, Emperors, &c. having given their leave to it, which is a folly, as persons of consequence do not like to have their names, published in Newspapers or Hand-bills when they buy a bottle of Oil. If the Proprietor of the following Article were to publish persons of distinction who make use of his Oil, it would dil a volunce. In short, Thousands of Ladies and Gentlemen have a good Head of Hair, without being the least shaded or Grey, by using Prince's celebrated Russia Oil only. But some Ladies being persuaded by their Hair-dreasers to use other Oils, or sold them constructed Russia Oil, they soon found the difference, as their Hair began to fall off, becoming shaded or getting Grey. In short, Erince's Russia Oil is the best Oil for dressing, preserving, and prometing the growth of Hair, and if used constantly, not a Hair will fall off or turn grey; even if the Hair has begun to tarn grey, it is such a nourisher, that by use it will restore it to its natural colour, which several Ludies of distinction have experienced clears the Searf, and keeps the Head and Hair clean, and by using it recutarly for a few months, will restore the Hair on the baid part, if the least signs of roots are remainings, which has been proved by hundreds. But to produce the desired effect, it must be used regularly.

Ladies will find Prince's Russia Oil preferable to any other Oil for dressing their own, or false Hair, as it gives it a natural gloss, softens and curls it. Gentlemen wearing powder ought to use it in-tead of pomatum—promotes eve-brows, whiskers, &c. The Original Preprietor has now so improved the Russia Oil that it will always be sweet and pleasant, and will keep in all climates; and good allowance to Mercin the Lord has or a hottle, contain reus to their customers.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil, and observe "Prince" on the wrapper and seals of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.

6 2 Ladies and Gentlemen will be particular, as there are several Hairdessers and others in town and country who sell counterfeits, and say they are geomius. As there has been so much impection of late, and counterfeit Russia Oil sold in almost every street; and impostors lave made the covers of the counterfeit Russia Oil sold in almost every street; and impostors lave made the covers of the counterfeit Russia Oil so much like the genuine; and even instituted the Original Proprietor's Name, therefore purchasers should be cautious, and have it of the Proprietor, or of a respectable Perfemer or Medicine Vender. As several Ladies and Gentlemen in the country have complained that they have been taken in by unprincipled persons seiling them counterfeit Russia Oil, therefore Ladies and Gentlemen will be sure to have the genuine by enclosing the money in a letter for the Russia Oil, &c. disceede to Mr. Prince, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London, when Mr. P. will send them by return of reach to any part of the kingdom.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Aug. 4.— The following is the most recent intelligence which has been received respecting Russia. It was because the Imperial Guard evinced the most eager impatience to march against the Turks, that that corps has been wholly removed from St. Petersburgh. Numerous reinforcements continue to be dispatched to the division under Wittgenstein, and that under Michel Orloff. The former of these two Generals has advanced upon the Pruth, and the other occupies Bessarabia. Both complain of the desertion of their soldiers, to the prevention of which, even the severe discipline of Russia is not effectual. All these deserters pass over to the Greek troops. The Emperor himself will shortly depart for the frontiers bordering Turkey and Greece, to review his army. It is thought that his presence will be the signal for hostilities; for it is very certain that, instead of blaming the inflexible and even rigid conduct of Baron Strogonoff towards the Porte, he has expressed his unreserved and entire approbation. When we endeavour to calculate the probable chances of a war like that which may hourly break out, we lose ourselves in a series of calculations and probabilities; and if there be one thing still more difficult to foresee than the issue of a war, it is to know what sort of a peace it may end in. It is not possible to believe that the Sovereigns are desirous of re-establishing the Greek Empire; and between the Greeks and the Mussulmen all pacification has become impossible. Is it thought to frighten the Grand Seignior by burning his capital? The burning of Constantinople would not be attended with greater results than those which followed the bombardment of Algiers by Louis XIV and Lord Exmouth. Besides, what Power of Europe would con-sent to let Russia establish herself along the shores of the Bosphorus, and extend herself as far as the Mediterranean, by the po of Turkey and the fine Greek provinces? Even should England be come, in consequence, mistress of Egypt and of some Greek Islands could she consider them as a sufficient indemnification? Should we some succession and a state of the continuous should we not thus see the little equilibrium which still exists between the States of the Continent suddenly destroyed; an equilibrium which was shaken by Buonaparte, and which owes its preservation to the perseverance of Great Britain alone? The late wars accustomed both Sovereigns and subjects to too great results, for them now to believe in the possibility of one of those wars of observation and of protracted marches, that brought on a battle or a siege; and besides, if it has ever been necessary to strike a great blow, it is more particularly so as it respects Turkey, because it is beyond all doubt, that the commencement of hostilities will be the signal of increased cruelty towards the ill-fated Greeks. They would not the less perish; and if the war become general, as it may be feared it will, after six years of peace and the ferment of so many excited minds, will humanity have made a judicious calculation in behalf of berself, in following that impulse which dictates the wrestling of the Greeks from the yoke of the Mussulment He would be very sagacious who could penetrate this labyrinth of obscurity.

A letter from Croustadt, dated the 15th of July, in the Consti-tutionnel, states the occurrence of a dreadful earthquake at Bucharest, accompanied by a strong hurricane, by which 1,400 houses were destroyed, together with a great number of the inhabitants. To add to the misfortune, a storm of hail succeeded which destroyed the fruit trees and the harvest in the neighbourhood and killed several peasants in the fields.—The Paper above quoted states, that all the Italian Journals have received orders to publish no other intelligence from Greece than what is given in The Austrian Observer.—A letter from Trieste, of July 15, says:—
"There does really exist a Government of the Greek islands, the seat of which is at Hydra, anisland to the east of the Peloponnesus but the authority of this Government is not recognized by the whole of those, which are more or less under the dominion of the Turks. There are jeniousies between the inhabitants of the different islands, and each governs itself in its own way. However, all the inhabitants make all possible sacrifices to relieve themselves from the domination of the Porte. There was an idea of establishing a general Government at Tripoliza; but this plan cannot be realised unless the Turks evacuate the whole of the Morea. The Greeks are employed in building forts in the several islands, and in repairing and extending the works which have been neglected by the Turks.

August 5 .- We are informed, that the Austrian Ambassador is personally guarded at Constantinople the same as the Rusn representative. -The official Gazette of  $St. \ Petersburgh says$ "Information has been received that the Porte will immediately close the Dardanelles."—They write from Trieste, July 10: that the Bussian army had begun to advance; and that part of the treeps had already traversed Moldavia. Adrianople, the second town is Buropean Turkey, situated 65 leagues from Constantinople, to advance; and that part of the is said to have fallen into the power of the Greeks after a bloody -Intelligence from Vienna dated July 26, states, the force of the Turks in Moldavio amounts at this moment to 60,000 men and 100 pieces of cannon. It is calculated that by means of the reinforcements, the Ottoman army will be augmented to 150,000 men: Jussuf Pueha commands in chief. The Cossacks have assembled their vessels near the right bank of the Pruth. Four Russian divisions have skeendy arrived at Bessarabia. The other Russian divisions have skeendy arrived at Bessarabia. sian troops which were to have gone to Italy, will soon arrive in Resarabia. This army is estimated at 125,000 men. Letters from Constantinople announce, that another Turkish fleet of nine ships of war has sailed for the Dardanelles.—Frankfort, July 31: Letters from the North say, that there is a very active correspondence be-suges the Russian and Prussian Courts on the affairs of Turkey.

An alliance between the two Powers is spoken of, in case England should not declare in favour of the Greek Insurgents. It is still believed that Austria will take a part, more or less active, in the approaching events.

The Brussells Papers received yesterday, has the following intelligence in an article from Lille, dated Aug. 1, which states, that all the comes which comprise the army are successively completing, and France will be able to shew it with confidence both to her friends and her enemies. The Royal Guard, 20,000 strong, is one of the finest corps in Europe; its discipline is perfect, and the spirit which animates it excellent. The regiments of antillery on foot and on bors back are at this moment complete, and the corps of cavalry receive by degrees the men and the horses which they want. A third of the regiments of infantry are complete, and the others will be so in the month of October. The Swiss regiments in the pay of France have received the men necessary to bring them to their full complement, according to treaty.

It is announced in the Gazette de Turin, that the Archiuchess Maria Louisa and her Court are to go into mourning for three months on account of Buonaparte's decease.

The Court Martial of Ulteria Calabria has convicted several ex-Carbonari of resisting the public force. The malefactors were hanged ten hours after they were found guilty.—An English ship of war has taken in the Adriatic, a Greek pirate, after a sharp action. All the crew of the Corsair were condemned to death, and hanged at the yard-arm.— Gazette de France.

The Augsburg Universal Gazette gives the following estimation of the amount and condition of several branches of the military

The Janissaries amount to the number of 240,000, according to the nominal lists, but these are in a great part composed of peaceful citizens, merchants, and artizans, who have inscribed their names in the corps, in order to share its privileges. The Jenissaries in pay do not amount to more than 40,000, of whom 20,000 are in the capital. There are others who receive rations, but who do not receive pay. All of them are obliged to march when the Grand seignior repairs to the army in person. The cavalry may amount to 134,000 men, but it is a cavalry like that of the middle ages, or like the pospolite of Poland. The Sophis are a good light cavalry force, but little formidable in regular warfare. The Turkish artillery, although improved by French Officers (who have constructed several Turkish fortresses,) still presents many defects both in the material and in the personal. Instead of 22,000, there are only 12,000 men. The cannons are badly equipped."

Extract of a letter from Augsburg, dated July 31:—" War between Russia and the Porte appears inevitable. The army of Gen. Yermoloff must by this time be on the frontiers of Moldavia. The army under Gen. Wittgenstein is advancing by forced marche Bessarabia. The Greek corps which was stationed in Upper Mol-davia, has retreated into the Russian territory, where it was well received. This circumstance seems to leave no doubt of the disposition of the Court of St. Petersburgh. After the retreat of the Greeks, the Turks advanced to the extreme frontier, where they have posted a corps of 10 or 12,000 men. The Turkish corp left Albania for Thessaly had no sooner arrived in that province than it was vigorously attacked by the Greek troops commanded by General Odusseus (Ulysses), and completely defeated. News has been received from Vienna, that the Greeks have taken Salonica (after three weeks blockade), by capitulation; the terms were not known. The fleet sent by the Barbary States to the Archipelago, met with a check, some of the vessels having been taken by one of the Greek squadrons."

In Turkey in Europe, the Greek population amounts to 5,288,000

while that of the Turks is only 1,592,000.

An article from Genoa quotes letters from Rome, stating, that 105 individuals, charged with being members of the sect of Car-bonari, had been arrested in different quarters, and conveyed prisoners to Bologna.

In the South of France and in Italy, the corn harvest, which has been very abundant, is completely gathered. In the neighbourhood of Calais and Bologne neither the wheat nor the oats are so forward as in this country. The country of Kent, especially the Isle of Thanet, with the exception of the corn being here and there a little laid by the recent heavy rains, promises very fine crops.

VIENNA, JULY 22.—It is said that the Cabinet of London, in giving to our Court the notification of the death of Buonaparte, made some communications of an important nature relative to the last wishes of the defunct, and relative to considerable sums which belonged to him, in the hands of several bankers of Europe. It is added, that the London courier was the bearer of an autograph letter from the prisoner of St. Helena, in which he leaves his great funds to his nearest relations. The Duke of Reichstadt has put on mourning for six months. Among the papers brought to England after the death of Buonaparte, there was a large packet, addressed in the hand-writing of Buonaparte himself to the Emperor Austria. It is said that General Bertrand entrusted the packet to an English officer, after requiring him to give his word of honour not to deliver it to any one except the Austrian Ambussador. Immediately after the arrival of the ship, the Murquis of Londonderry proposed to Prince Esternazy, the Austrian Ambassador, that he should either receive himself those dispatches on board the ship, or send a person on board invested with proper authority to do so; but the Prince declared that he considered it useless to go through such formalities, adding, that after the intimate relations of amity sub-sisting between the two Cubinets, he would with pleasure receive those papers from the Marquis himself. They have since been brought to this city. It is thought that they contain the last legacy of Buonaparte to his son.

A remonstrance has been presented by the Spanish Ambassador at Vienna to Count Metternich, complaining of the language applied by Austria to the Spanish Constitution.

LEIPSIC, JULY 26 .- It is affirmed that the Porte has received from Great Britain very encouraging assurances in the event of a war.—The last advices from St. Petersburgh formally contradic the rumour which had been spread, that a misunderstanding existed between the Cabinet of Russia, relatively to the affair of Turkey.

Lisnon, July 18 .- In the sitting of the Cortes, on the 14th inst. Deputy M. Borges Carneiro denounced the Count de Barbacena as being opposed to the Constitutional system, and as not possessing the confidence of the nation. He added, that the office of Minister of Foreign Affairs was one of the highest importance under ent circumstances. and that its duties were not discharge they ought to be, and instanced, that since the time at which his Majesty solemnly swore to recognise the bases of the Constitution this Minister and not in a legal manner communicated the bappy event to the Ministers or Agents of Spain, France, England an Germany .- In the sitting of the 17th instant, a motion was made by the Deputy Sarmento, tending to anticipate the pecuniary wants of General Pepe, who is banished from the country he wished to serve. It stated that the Patriots of Spain had already discharged this duty towards General Pepe; that the Patriots of England have already a subscription on foot to the same effect and that the Portuguese would do honour to their nation by imitating so generous an example.—The accounts from the Spanish Main confirmed the previous reports as to the retaking of the Caraccas by the Spaniards under Gen. Morales. The event is said to have taken place on the 26th of May, after an action, in which the Independents sustained a loss of 300 in killed and wounded. Some of the accounts state that the Spaniards found in the place none but women and children, whom they put to denth. A body of $00 Patriots, who had occupied La Guayra, evacuated that place upon the recupture of the Caraccas, and were retreating to the interior, pursued by 600 Spaniards.

ANTINOPLE, JUNE 28 .- The Ottoman Porte has received from all the great Powers of Europe most energetic remonstrances on its cruel conduct towards the Greeks, and on the attitude which on its cruei conduct towards the orders, and on the attitude which is in strict alliance with Austria, Prussia, England, and France. The Reis Effondi explained himself on these remonstrances with the greatest composure and apparent impartiality to all the Ministers, and with peculiar frankness and friendship to the English Ambasador.—With regard to Lord Strangford, the Reis Effendi assures that the Porte endeavoured to avoid any thing that could lead to a war with Russia, because she well knew that, not being able to quell her rebellious subjects, she was not in a situation to combat that power single handed; and because she also knew, considering the perfect unanimity of sentiments which prevailed in the Cabinets of Europe, not a single power would draw a sword in her favour.

During a violent storm, which visited the neighbourhood of the town of Biberach, in Prussia, on the evening of Monday, the 10th of July, four young peasants, engaged on an eminence, in some agricultural labours, had recourse to the expedient of sustaining a bundle of clover over their heads with a pitchfork, in order to shelbundle of clover over their areas. While a provide the pitchfork, passed along the breast and shoulders of one of the young men, afterwards over the lower part of the belly of the one who stood afterwards over the lower part of the belly of the one who stood next him, ran down his right leg till it reached his toes, and there caused a burn, about the diameter of a twelve Kreutzer piece, without having left any trace of its passage on the outside boots, which were carefully examined. The direction taken by the lightning was marked by a burnt bue both on his skin and on his clothes. Although these two young men were much injured, hopes were entertained of saving their lives. The two others were not The most remarkable circumstance in this event is, that the young man who suffered the most, and who was a little deaf, has been properly restored to his sense of hearing since the accident.

By the brig Harriet, from Cape Haytien, we learn that the account of a revolution having taken place in the Spanish pert of the island of St. Domingo, as received last week by the schooner Flying Fish, is premature. At the time the Harriet sailed no such event had taken place, though the temper and disposition of the people warranted the belief that it might occur.

THE KING'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

His Majesty's yacht, and the rest of the Royal squadron, passed by Plymouth at 11 o'clock on Saturday night, Falmouth at about two on Sunday morning, and were visible from Penzance at as o'clock, steering for Dublin with a fine breeze. At one in the day, the fleet was seen about three leagues north-west from the Land's End, when many persons witnessed a sight which had not been observed for many generations- the standard of England floating between Scilly and the Main. We believe it is not generally known, that on the first night of His Majesty's embark ation, he declined having a guard stationed at his cabin-door, feeling perfectly secure in the affections of his gallant seamen.

HOLYHEAD, TUBSDAY .-- " At 12 o'clock last night, the Royal racht anchored in the harbour. The glad tidings were conveyed with the speed of lightning through the town. At one o'clock, every house in the town was lighted with candles. At two o'clock, P. M. the announcement was made, that His Majesty would land. The beach and all the avenues leading to it were thronged with spectators. At five o'clock His Majesty landed on the pier, amid a Royal salute from two pieces of ordnance planted before the Custom-house, and the ships of the squadron. Immediately upon his landing on the pier, Sir John Stanley, accompanied by a deputation of the inhabitants, presented His Majesty with an address of congratulation on his arrival, to which His Majesty answered :-

" That he received with peculiar pleasure this affectionate and loyal address of a Principality, the title of which he had borne dering so long a pertion of his life."

"The spectators cheered His Majesty in the most enthusiastic manner. The carriage of the Marquis of Anglesen was in attendance, and His Majesty set off for the Marquis's seat, followed by several other carriages, and by a procession of the people at least a mile long. The Marquis's seat is 27 miles hence. His Majesty is in perfect health and spirits."

A letter received in town yesterday from Holyhead, dated six o'clock on Thursday evening states, that a Messenger had just then brought the intelligence of the death of the Queen; and that Lord Liverpool had jus arrived, and had a private interview with the King. His Majesty's yacht was at the writing of the letter preparing for sea. The wind continued westerly, and the agitation of the sea, which had been great, had subsided. It was understood that his Majesty meant to sail with the first fair wind for Dublin; but to land privately, and to repair to the Phoenix Park-there to remain until after the Queen's interment.

PREPARATIONS FOR HIS MAJESTY'S RECEPTION IN IRELAND.

The Lord Lieutenant and Mr. Secretary Gregory, attended by several gentlemen, proceeded this morning (Thursday, the 2d into) to Dunleary Pier, for the purpose of seeing the arrangements making there for his Majesty's reception, and to mark the spot most suitable for the landing-place. At Calais, we recollect, the stone upon which the King of France first trod, on his reaching the French shore, in 1814, has an impression of his foot cut, as a memorial of the circumstance; and we trust that something similar will be adopted to mark the spot on which the King will place his foot for the first time in Ireland. Sir Benjamin and Lady Bloom-field have, since their arrival, been visited by every person of rank in the city and vicivity. Couriers and King's Messengers wiregularly dispatched each day, during the residence of His Mes in Ireland, one from London to the King, and His Majesty's Ministers here, and another from the King or his Ministers to London. It is understood that Alderman Cash has offered the use of his very fine mansion in Rutland-square, to the Eurl of Liverpool, during the King's stay in Ireland, and that his Lordship has been pleased to accept it. Mr. Hawthorn has requested Lord Sidmouth to ecupy his residence in the Custom-house; but the Noble House Section 1. cretary will be the guest of Mr. Grant, at his Lodge in the Park, while in this country. The whole expense of the outilt for His Majesty's reception at the Castle and Park Lodge, is to be defrayed out of His Majesty's privy purse:—The Turf Club are to pay 3000k for the erection of a Royal stand-house, for the reception and entertainment of His Mujesty when he visits the Curragh. Dubin is rapidly filling: the assembled rank, forume, and loyalty of the country, will present, in that favoured capital, as proud cheering a test of national feeling, as ever yet was offered to the good and gracious Monarch of these Realms. It is quite impossible to describe the enthusiasm that prevails in this country from one end to the other. Joy is pictured in every countenance; and every tongue gives utterance to the most fervent expressions of attachment to His Majesty. From the peculiar character of the people, some extraordinary and distinct munifestation of their feelings might naturally be expected, and the one which it is understood they are to give, will astonish not only their English fel-low-subjects, but all Europe. It is reported as a fact, that they intend, on the arrival of His Majesty, to draw his carriage with silken ropes; they are to run in one uninterrupted line from the Castle of Dublin down to Dunleary, where His Majesty is expected to land. Persons are to be stationed at convenient distances to support and pall these costly traces, and the distance over which they will pass, is not less than seven Irish miles. The Turf Club of Ireland are to give a splendid fete at the Curragh of Kildare, which is, perhaps, the finest race-ground in the world; and to perpetuate the recollection of His Majesty's visit, the place of running, on the day he attends, will then, and for evermore, be called the "Royal Dublin, August 7 .- The expectation of the King's arrival throughout the whole of Tuesday created an interesting anxiety before the usual hour at which the mail arrives, a vast crowd assembled round the Post-office; the mail did not arrive till eight o'cleck, having been delayed by His Majesty at Holyhead, for the purpose of sending off a dispatch to Lord Sidmouth.—The Correspondent was not published before nine, and then announced, to the great joy of the inhabitants, the following intelligence:— "We have received by the mail, letters from Holyhead, which inform us that the Royal Squadron anchored in the bay at an early hour this

Some judgment may be formed of the importance that is attached by all ranks to the getting a sight of his Majesty, and still more to the approaching his Koyal Person, from the following short sketch of a kind of negociation that has been going on for these few days past, between the Householders of Dublin and the Government Authorities, with a view to obtaining for a deputation of the former a place in the procession. Sir W. Betham, Ulster King at Arms, has been officially consulted, and had drawn up a Ceremonial which has appeared in the papers. The Householders in their respective Vestries entered into a resolution appointing 165 Deputies, to a sist at the ceremony of receiving his Majesty on his landing, and conducting him into the city. A Committee of Householders accordingly waited on the Right Hon. C. Grant, Secretary of State, who, after communicating with the Lord Lieutenant, stated that the Ceremonial could not be departed from.

nial could not be departed from.

A special meeting of the Committee of Churchwardens and Depaties was afterwards held, at which it was agreed (as in the first instance it was proposed) that the entire householders are to line the road to receive His Majesty on his landing.

The Lord Lieutenant gave audience at the Castle to-day. His Excellency arrived at one o'clock from the Phonix Park, accompanied by Lord Sidmouth. The Marquisses of Winchester, Londonderry, and Headfort arrived at the Castle this moraing. It is understood that His Majesty intends to hold a Levee at the Castle the day after his arrival, and a Drawing-room in a few days afterwards and certainly they will be at once the most sulendid and wards, and certainly they will be at once the most splendid and most gratifying exhibitions of the kind ever known in Irish bistory. The King will go in state to Christchurch on Sunday.—It is now expected that his Majesty will land on Thursday.

DEATH OF THE QUEEN.

From the bulletins of her Majesty's physicians on Sunday and Monday, great hopes were entertained of her recovery, and even on Tuesday morning her Majesty's friends were impressed with a full conviction of her speedy convalescence. It would appear, however, that the expectations of the Queen herself were not so sanguine; for when Mr. Wilde requested leave to attend his professional duties on the western circuit, the royal patient intimated her wish that he should remain. About noon unfavourable symptoms began to manifest themselves, and her Majesty endured considerable pain.

Opinios were administered, and for some time they had a consoling effect; but at two o'clock increased inflammation was visible to one, and the post-haste attendance of the physicians was de-Drs. Baillie, Maton, and Holland first arrived, and, under their direction, the following bulletin, dated four o'clock, was put forth. Dr. Ainslie and Dr. Warren presented themselves immediately after.

" Brandenburgh House, Aug. 7, four o'clock. "In the course of the morning her Majesty has suddenly become such worse. (Signed) "M. BAILLIE, "W. G. MATON

" H. HOLLAND.

From this period her Majesty's end rapidly approached. To inquiries at a later hour no other answer was given than that there was no new bulletin, and that none would be issued unless some

At four o'clock Mr. Wilde was summoned to her Majesty's chamber. At that time a marked alteration—un alteration which could scarcely be mistaken, had taken place in her appearance. The Queen herself seemed perfectly aware of the change. Her Majesty adverted to some highly important and interesting facts. From four until seven o'clock the Queen continued gradually to grow worse. Just before eight she sunk for a short time into a doze. Soon after the eye became fixed, the muscle graw rigid, and a stupor ensued, from which her Majesty never awoke. At transfer minutes, and the property of the twenty-five minutes past ten o'clock (after an entire absence of sense and faculty for more than two hours) nature gave up the contest; and, almost without a struggle, the Queen expired. In a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes afterwards, a servant brought to the gate the following bulletin, which was read aloud by a gentleman to the individuals present, who, at that time, were not more than twelve or fourteen :-

"Her Majesty departed this life at twenty-five minutes past ten as night. "M. BAILLIE.

Soon after the bulletin was delivered, all the medical gentlemen, except Dr. Holland, departed. Dr. Holland remained all night at Brandenburgh-house, as did also Lady Ann Hamilton. Num expresses were sent off in different directions.

Her Majesty's Seal was placed upon all her papers and effects or Tuesday night.

The following Supplement to the Gazette of Tuesday was pub-

"WHITEHALL, AUG. 8 .-- Yesterday evening, at twenty-five minutes after ten o'clock, the Queen departed this life, after a short but painful illness, at Brandenburgh-house, at Hammersmith."

There have been many conjectures as to the immediate cause of er Majesty's illness. There is good reason to believe that, indeber Majesty's illness. pendent of the general state of suspense and agitation in which her last arrival in England, the circumstances attendant on her visit to the scene of the Coronation on the morning of the 19th July, prisonment and hard labour, materially contributed to bring on that crisis which terminated in The reception she experienced on that day caused her dissolution. her the deepest disappointment. Thenceforward her Majesty be came more than or linarily thoughtful and melancholy; her state of mind at times approached even to despondency, and she was frequently ladisposed slightly. Some hours before the time of going to Drury-Lane Theatre, her Majesty was attacked by excessive sickness at the stomach. Her Ladies, who for many days had been anxiously contemplating her declining health, became alarmed, and streamouth, nearest her to excessive streamouth, nearest her to extinguish her latestices. Her Majesty strenuously prayed her to relinquish her Intention. Her Majesty replied—"Why should I not go? I shall be well directly." She then ordered a quantity of warm water, of which she drank copiously, with its usual effect; and she then went to the Theatre as she had appointed. But her indisposition increased even whilst she was there, and went on accumulating till it terminated in her death.—Her Majesty had been more than once attacked by the same disease; and about two years ago, when she resided at Pestro, it assumed so alarming an appearance, that the physicians, during a period of three days, were in momentary expectation that the result would properful. the result would prove fatal.

There is a misconception respecting a Proctor from Doctors' Commons being engaged in preparing her Majesty's Will, whilst her Majesty's Counsel were in attendance. The fact was, her Majesty made some arrangement relative to her foreign property, and her signature was required to be attested by two Notaries, who at-tended from the Commans for that purpose. It is understood that her Majesty by her will has left the bulk of the property at her disposal to Mr. Austin. The executors of her Majesty's Will are Dr. Lushington and Mr. Wilde; but her Majesty requested that the Marquis of Antaldi and Signor Felici would are under the directions of those gentlemen for the settlement of her Italian property.

Her Majesty was Caroline Amelia, daughter of Charles William Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick, by her Royal Highness Augusta, eldest sister of his late most gracious Majesty George III. See was born 17th May, 1768, and on the 5th April, 1708, married his present Majesty George IV. then Prince of Wales, by whom she had one daughter, the late lamented Princess Charlotte of Saxe-Coburg. It was exactly seven years on Wednesday since her Majesty embedded at Worthing for the Continents.

barked at Worthing for the Continent.
On Wednesday, at one o'clock, Barl Liverpool dispatched a messenger to Messrs. France and Banting, the King's upholsterers, to attend at Cambridge-house, for the purpose of receiving orders for the coffin and the funeral paraphernalia; and on Thursday morning the body of her Majesty, having been enveloped in a sear-cloth, and attired in a shroud, was placed in a cedar shell. Lord and Lady Hood, and Ludy Anne Hamilton, were present while the body was put into if. Her Majesty, before her dissolution, gave directions that the shell should be made by a cabinet-maker who had manufactured several articles of cabinet work for her very recently. The shell was brought to Brandenburgh-house on Wednesday evening. The lead and exterior coffins will be made under the direction of the Lord Chamberlain, to whom the Earl of Liverpool (by directions of the Privy Council which assembled on Wednesday) has given orders for making the necessary preparations, before the body will be re-moved to a sea port town for embarkation for the Continent. On the arrival of the orders of the Privy Council at the Lord Chamberlain's office, dispatches were transmitted by the Council for the return of Mr. Mash and others from Ireland, to attend to the preparations for the mourning to be worn by the Royal Family's servants. Her Majesty's body decomposed rapidly. Several persons have called at Brandenburgh-house, and expressed a wish to see the remains of her Majesty; but, in compliance with her Majesty's wish "not to be made a show of," it was thought proper to refuse the applicants their request.

Lady Hood and Lady Ann Hamilton alternately remain in the room with the royal corpse. On Wednesday, an eminent artist was employed to take a cast of the features.

The exterior coffin is of garter blue velvet, with silver gilt decorations, in the usual style of royal coffins. All the preparations for the interment wait the orders of his Majesty, in answer to the disatches which have been sent after the Court by the Cabinet Council holden on Wednesday kıst.

Yesterday was the day fixed for the removal of the body from Brandenburgh House, and her Majesty's Household only were to be allowed to form part of the funeral procession; but final orders are expected from Ireland. Her Majesty expressed a wish to be buried in a night-dress of her own, and not in a shroud: her wish was complied with, and Mr. Bailey and his assistants, in the presence of Lord Hood, Lady Hood, Lady Hamilton, Mr. Wilde, Ald. Wood, &c. removed the body from the board on which it was laid out, into the coffin, it having been previously attired in a long white linear into the coffin, it having been previously attired in a long white linen night-gown, with a frill round the neck, and a plain cap on the head. The body being within the leaden coffin, several men went down on Thursday night to solder it up; but ber Majesty's executors and their friends determined that it should not be closed up till the arrival of intelligence from his Majesty. The outside coffin is made of fine mahogany, covered with crimson velves, with gold farniture, and gold naits, ornamentally placed in the form of diamonds on the sides, and the lid and ends come pending. The interior one is lined with white satin, the bottom is covered with a satin mattress, and a pillow of the same. satin mattress, and a pillow of the same

The body will lie in state part of this day and Monday, when it is decided that the procession will move from Hammersmith. Friday evening the lead coffin was soldered up, in the presence of the Household and Executors of her late Majesty. The external coffin will be conveyed to Brandenburgh-house to-morrow morning.

COUNTRY ASSIZES

WINCHRATER. -- At these Assizes were tried, Malachi Thornton Andrew Smith, John Walsh, John Galvin, Mary Galvin, and John Woodnot, elias Brooks, for burglariously entering the dwelling-house of Captain James Kearney White, R. N. Jubilee Terrace, Southsea, early in the morning of the 23d of April last, and stealing numerous articles of plate, apparel, foreign coin, and bank notes. Capt. White deposed, that he arrived from London on the 22d of April, and being unwell, slept that night in the front parlour. He left his watch and pocket-book on a chest of drawers. In the room were also a quantity of Spanish dollars, and a general equipabout seven in the morning, he called his servants, and on going into the scullery, the window was open, and the door unbolted. On the 27th of April, in consequence of information, he proceeded with Hunt and Hill, of Portsmouth Gaol, to an inn at Cosham where Thornton shortly after made his appearance, and on being se-cured, some of the property was found upon him. The same evening, they went to Portsmouth barracks, and apprehended Brooks, on whose person a key was found, which left no doubt of his being concerned in the robbery. On a subsequent evening, the barracks were again visited, and, on searching the bed of Smith, a bundle was found, containing more of Capt. W.'s property. The seals of the watch were taken from Galvin, and he also produced the watch.—Mary Neild, sister-in-law to Capt. White, slept on the second floor with her mother; went to bed about one o'clock, and soon after, heard a noise in the yard, which seemed to come from the scullery.—Several other witnesses were examined; and Thornton, Smith, and Woodnot, were convicted, and ordered for execution. Galvin was pronounced guilty of receiving the property, knowing it to be stolen, but in consequence of producing respectable testimony to character, was soutened only to one year's im-

CHELMSFORD, AUG. 7. - Seaman v. Corder. tion by the indorsec, against the acceptor of a bill of exchange for 1561, drawn by one Mayhew, and excited considerable interest from the nature of the defence. The plaintiff's case was conducted by Mr. Gurney and Mr. Kelly, and the defendant's by Mr. Marryat and Mr. Ryland.—On the part of the plaintiff the usual prima fucle case of hand-writing, presentment, and disbonour, was proved, and in fact, admitted by the defendant.—The defence set up on the part of the defendant was, that he had been completely swindled out of the acceptance with which he was now attempted to be charged, under the following circumstances:—Persons of the names of Gibson and Fommi had employed the defendant, a respectable com-factor, in Mark-lane, to sell a parcel of barley, consisting of 94 quarters, an order for the delivery of which, had been originally given to the former, for the delivery of which, had been originally given to the former, for the same purpose, by a person of the name of Maylew. The latter had had dealings with Messrs. Woodley, in the corn trade, but they had refused to give him credit, without the guarantee of the plaintiff. It appeared that the plaintiff had given a guarantee to the extent of 3001. The corn in question had been the property of Mr. Maylew, and at the time of this transaction he was under engagement to Messrs. Woodley beyond the amount of the guarantee; and in order to recover themselves, they were desirous of getting possession of the corn, as they were normined they sirous of getting possession of the corn, as they were promised they should by Mayhew. Mayhew, however, being desirous of turning the corn into cash, had employed Messes. Gibson and Fomm to sell it, and accordingly gave them an order for delivery. Messes. Gibson and Fomm, in their turn, having succeeded the defendant in his business, requested him to dispose of it on their behalf. In the mean time, the plaintiff and Mayhew endeavoured to prevail upon Gibson and Fomm to accept a bill on account of the expected prooceds. This they declined doing. The plaintiff then, in concert with Mayhew, made a similar application to the defendant, and the bill of exchange in question was actually drawn, and the defindant was prevailed upon to accept it, upon the positive assurance that the corn should be delivered to the order originally given in favour of Gibson and Fomm. These circumstances having reached the knowledge of Messrs. Woodley, who expected that the corn would be delivered to them, as a security for the advances they were under to Maykew, they became incensed, and called upon the plaintiff and Mayhew to account for the deception, who excused themselves by saying, that it was too late to recall what had been done, that an order for the delivery of the corn had been given to Messrs. Gibson and Fomm, and that the defendant had actually accepted a bill of exchange in anticipation of the proceeds. Messrs. Woodley, however, prevailed upon the plaintiff and Maybew to give to them an order to deliver to them the corn in question; countermanding, at the foot of it, the previous order given to Gibson and Fomm. It was stated, that the very next day, Mayhew had drowned himself, and in fact, his body was found in the River Thames. Notwithstanding the circumstances above disclosed, the plaintiff, to whom the bill bad been indersed by Mayhew, now brought the present action against the defendant upon his acceptance.—As soon as the facts above stated were proved in evidence, the Learned Judge asked Mr. Gurney what he would choose to do in the case.—Mr. Gurney said, he would be non-suited; and his client was non-suited On the Crown side, R. Collins was indicted under the 43d of the late King, for wilfully and maliciously administering to Hannah ngle woman, six ounces of certain medicines and drugs in order to procure abortion.—The prisoner was clerk in the office of Mr. Pattison, solicitor of Withum. The prosecutor was servant in the same family. No criminality appeared to have taken place in Mr. Pattison's house. The prosecutrix left her mester's house, and went to live shortly afterwards in the service of Mrs. Watson, in the same town. In the interval between her quitting Mr. Pattison's and going to her new place, the prisoner accomplished the ruin of the unhappy girl at his father's lodgings. This was in the month of November. She went to her new place, and about the month of January she proved with child. She communicated this circumstance to the prisoner, who, in his letters to be down to the month of Eubenter addressed has in the ways to be proved of the prisoner. of February, addressed her in the warmest terms of affection and tenderness, always concluding his epistle by subscribing himself "ber affectionate and faithful husband." Shortly after the prisoner and discovered that the unbappy girl was pregnant, he sent her a quantity of pennyroyal, which he told her in a letter "was a remedy for the tooth-ache, prescribed by the famous Dr. Solomon in his "Guide to Health."—Upon the receipt of the letter, with its acounde to Hearth. "—Upon the receipt of the letter, with its accompaniment, she took the pennyroyal, as prescribed, but it had not the effect desired. When she saw the prisoner afterwards, he told her that he would bring her something that would do her good. He then brought her a box of steel pills, which he desired her to take every morning fasting. The box contained twelve pills, which she took; but they produced no other effect than to heat her system violently. He afterwards induced her totake some electury. This not having the derived effect, he brought her three twigs of some sort of tree, the name of which she did not know, with directions to boil half of them in two quarts of water, until it was reduced to one quart, and take a ten-cup full three times every day. This she did for about two days. Upon this failing, he told her to get some steel filings, and make them into pills, and take them three times a day. These filings she, by the direction of the prisoner, took in various ways, but without effect. He then induced her to take a phial of ways, but windut effect. He then induced her to take a philal of medicine of a pale red colour, but she was so ill in consequence of taking them, that she was obliged to go home to her parents, when her mother soon discovered what had passed. Her pregnancy was still advancing, and although her constitution had overcome the attempts made to destroy it, her health was in a precarious state. Repeated applications were made to the prisoner to marry her, but he as often declined, upon the plea of inability, and that he was afraid of losing his situation without a character.-In his defence he insisted that the girl had seduced him, and that at her earnest request he had procured and administered to her the drugs in question, in consequence of her having become pregnant— Several respectable inhabitants of Witham, and amongst others Mr. Pattison, his master, gave him an extremely good character for morality and general correctness of deportment.—The Jury found him Guilty, and he was sentenced to 14 years transportation.

"Lady Morgan's View of Italy combines the high tone of philosophy with the most gay and familiar descriptions of the life and manners of the very mixed societies to which she had access: and her opportunities were highly favourable to the task she had in view. Her narrative abounds with striking anecdotes, traits of character, incidents, fetes, and farces, which will highly interest the public."—Morning Chronicle.

JOHN BULL.

LONDON, August 12

His Majesty has doubtlessly reached Dublin long ere this; his voyage has been much shorter than we thought it would be at the outset, from the prevalence of strong westerly winds.

We trust that His Majesty will not consider it neces sary to quit IRELAND on account of the death of the QUEEN. The expectations which have been excited, the anxiety which has been created, and, we may add, the expences which have been incurred, by the noble generous Irish people, in the hope of welcoming, and keeping among them for some time, their beloved King, are not to be forgotten or overlooked.

HIS MAJESTY has a heart full of kindness, affection and tenderness, and we are quite sure that, outraged as he has been, publicly and privately, by her who has paid the debt of nature, he would not cherish an angry sentiment towards the late QUEEN, or be wanting in those marks of respect usually shewn upon like occasions; but, whatever the MAN may feel, or the HUSBAND concede. THE KING has a greater duty to perform

He goes, of his free will, the harbinger of peace and unanimity to Ireland; the noble race of that long-neglected land flock to his feet-they crowd round their Princetheir benefactor-their friend - their hospitable hearts and homes are open to him, and every nerve has been strained to prove how ardently they love-how sincerely they welcome him.

It would be the severest mertification to this gallant people to lose the happiness of having their monarch amongst them, almost at the moment of his arrival-it would be a blight to the brightest hope that ever beamed over their land; and we sincerely trust the King will tee, on this occasion, as he has ever done, that public duty must give way to private feeling, and that, after a seclusion from society during the period that her Majesty's remains are unburied, he will allow his Irish subjects to evince a feeling, which, as it was always wholly unconnected with the deceased, ought not to be checked in its expression on her account.

Since writing the above, the Messenger Lack, who was dispatched on Tuesday night to the King, with the account of the Queen's death, has returned with dispatches from Lord LONDONDERRY (who was with his Majesty) to Lord LIVERPOOL. These dispatches are dated from the Royal yacht, in Holyhead Roads, at two o'clock on Thursday, so that the Messenger performed the whole journey in seventythree kours, and the home journey in thirty-seven. The King had embarked the preceding evening, with the intention of crossing to Dublin; but the wind becoming foul, the yacht came to an anchor, and remained there when the Messenger came away.

THE QUEEN IS NO MORE!

The announcement of this fact was the death-blow to the animosity which, during her life, we, upon principle, felt towards the Leader of the most desperate and despicable faction which ever disgraced this country. With the knowledge of this event ceased all those sentiments of disgust and abhorrence which were inspired by vice and profligacy; our detestation was turned to pity; and never should a syllable have appeared in this Paper, reflecting on a life which cannot be recalled, nor upon conduct which can be neither amended nor atoned for kere, had not the Old Times newspaper chosen, in its last glow of zeal for the cause, to misrepresent popular feeling—to record as facts and truths scenes and circumstances which never took place, and, in short, to "outdo its usual outdoings" in falsehood and misconstruction.

If the Times considers the last moments of the Queen as matter of history, why should we not do the same? We should be hypocrites and liars were we to affect that the demise of the Queen had changed our opinion of her-why should it? True it is, hat an inherent feeling of respect, which we all instinctively feel for a fellow-creature dead, would have imposed a silence upon us now she is gone to her account; but since her panegyrists have thought proper to insult the public with praises of her conduct at the close of life, it is our duty to analyze their productions, and lay open their shameful ignorance and impudence.

The Times having promised liberally on Wednesday, produces on Thursday a full account of the Queen's demise, which, as being from authority, we insert verbatim.

"The noblest panegyric which we can make on the Royal victim of slander and persecution just deceased, is to record her behaviour during the last trying scene of her existence. Our statement shall be unmixed with a single comment, and scrupulously and anxiously free from all exaggeration or heightened colouring. When, at the beginning of last week, Her Majesty's illness first assumed a serious character, Dr. Holland requested her permission to send for another physician, observing, that whatever might be his own individual skill and attention, yet the public would necessarily expect, in the case of a Queen, that every possible aid should be had recourse to. Her Majesty answered with a smile to the following effect :- 'My dear Doctor, do what you please : if it will be any relief to your own mind to call in assistance, do so; but do not do it for my sake: I have no wish to live; I would rather die.' Indeed, from the first moment that Her Majesty was assured of the very serious nature of her indisposition, she clung to the assurance with joy and gratitude, and listened with a reluctant ear to the hopes of recovery which her physicians and friends held out to her from time to time. 'Why do you wish me to live?' she exclaimed on one occasion in the early part of her filness; ' life to me can be nothing but a series of sorrows and persecutions: I shall be much happier in another world than in this.' It was observed, that she desponded too much; that public opinion was in her favour, and would make her amends for all her sufferings. Her Majesty asked what public opinion had done for her?' It was answered, 'that it had defeated that late dreadful attempt to ruin her—the Bill of Pains and Penalties.' Her reply was prompt and firm-' What am I the better for the failure of that Bill? If it had passed, I should have been degraded; and what is my situation now! have indeed the empty little of Queen; but am I Queen of England? Have I the privileges, the power, the dignities of a Queen of England? No, no; I am a mere private person-1 am not Queen of England.' It will be recollected that on Friday last the symptoms of Her Majesty's disorder had become very alarming, and the physicians had scarcely any hope of her recovery. She received the announcement of her danger with admirable calmness and composure; and shortly afterwards proceeded to make ber will. There was an air of cheerfulness about her after she had signed it, which induced one of her professional advisers, (we understand, Mr. Brougham) to express a hope that she felt herself easier and better. Her Majesty answered, 'Oh, no, my dear Mr. Brougham, I know I shall die, and I do not at all regret it.' Mr. Brougham said, that he was of a different opinion, and expected Her Majesty to recover, but added, that the step she had just taken was perfectly proper in case of accident. Her Majesty persisted in saying, that she knew she was dying. In the course of the evening she took occasion to say-' I do not know whether I shall suffer bodily pain in dying, but I can assure you that I shall quit this world without regret: I have no great reason to be attached to

"On Saturday and Sunday, in spite of some favourable symptoms which inspired the physicians with hope, she still expressed her firm conviction that she should die. She seemed to feel pleasure in talking on the subject, and rejoiced in anticipating her release from trouble—her escape from the malice of her enemies. She said, that in this world, whether in England or abroad, the rancour of her persecutors would always beset her: and it was only in another world she could look for peace and justice. She expressed the deepest regret that she was so little able to reward those faithful servants who had stood by her in her difficulties; but hoped that Government would fnot let them want. She declared benefit warmly grateful—and hoped her gratitude would be made known to that generous portion of the people of England whose support of her had been most steady when most wanted, and who had never been frightened from her cause either by the power or the calumny of her oppressors. 'England,' said Her Majesty, 'has certainly been to me a land of sorrow and persecution, but I know how to love those faithful English who have always sympathised with my sorrow, and have done all in their power to defeat the malice of my persecutors.' It was on this occasion that she observed that her enemies had been for years plotting and conspiring to destroy her: 'At last,' said she, 'they have destroyed me, but I forgive them. I die in peace with all mankind.' Shortly after, she sent for Mariette Brune, to whom (as we mentioned yesterday) she declared her perfect forgiveness of her sister's (Demont's) cruel falsehoods. All who had an opportunity of seeing Her Majesty were struck with the glorious trait in her character, that though her heart was evidently broken with the recollection of the deep injuries she had received, and though an indelibly strong image of the injustice of her enemies was always present to her mind, yet she never used a harsh or angry expression against any individual: she freely forgave them all, and spoke of them in terms of pity, and even made allowances for their conduct on the score of the weakness and frailty of human nature.

"On Monday night it will be remembered, that her physicians seemed to consider Her Majesty out of all danger: she was informed of their opinion, but insisted that they were mistaken, adding, she felt she was dying, and thought she should die before nine o'clock the next evening. It is not improbable that Her Majesty then felt the symptoms of incipient mortification. She seat for Mr. Wilde, who was in attendance, and added a codicil to her will: we believe it related to the place of her interment. Her first wish was to be buried in the same grave with her beloved daughter, but,' added she, 'I can have little hope that the Government will grant this wish: I desire, therefore, to be buried in the same vault with my father and brother at Brunswick.' When Her Majesty had signed this codicil, she began to converse at con siderable length with Mr. Wilde: the physicians, fearing that conversation might disturb her, wished to withdraw Mr. Wilde from the room, and that gentleman, from the same motive, was anxious to go: but Her Majesty begged him to stay. thank my Physicians,' she said, ' for their kind intentions: they mean nothing but what is right; but they do not understand my character. They think that it agitates me to talk of death: they are mistaken; to me, who have little pleasure in the past, and no prospect of future tranquillity in this life, it is a pleusure to contemplate my approaching death; and why may I not speak what I feel?' All these observations were made with such sweetness of manner and such calmness of tone, as to make an impression never to be effaced from the minds of those who were present. The night between Monday and Tuesday was passed without sleep, owing, it is believed, to that restless auxiety which usually accompanies the process of mortification. On Tuesday afternoon, about one, she again sent for Mr. Wilde and Dr. Lushington, and again conversed on her usual topics.

"Alluding to the few friends who had remained constant to her to the last, and for whom she expressed the most grateful regard, she took occasion to obscree, that her adversaries had put in practice two modes of separating worthy people from her society; one was to deter them from visiting her by propagating the most atrocious calumnies against her and them; the second was, when they saw her surrounded by persons of honour, to endeavour, by anonymous letters, and all means in their power, to poison her mind against them, in order to induce her to bresk with them. 'Against the first mode of attack,' said her Majesty, 'I could have no help; the second plan I soon detected, and therefore defeated.' She then alluded to the practice of opening the body after death, and said that she saw no occasion for the operation in her case, and wished it not to be done. She then begged that she might not be made a show of after her death,-There has been,' she observed smilingly, quite enough of that in my life-time; besides, there are persons who kept aloof from me when alive, who may have no objection to see me when deed, and there is no good reason for satisfying their curiosity.' She then again adverted with great regret to her inability to bestow adequate compensation on her servants, or remembrances on her friends; but said their services and kindnesses were deeply written on ber heart. Mr. Wilde then left her for some time. About four o'clock an access of fever came on, which operating on a frame already almost exhausted, produced, for a short time, a greater exultation of spirits than she had yet manifested. During this period she express herself with more vehemence of manner, but still with the same forbearance of language, touching the cruel conspiracies of her inveterate foes; but the fever soon subsided, and she recovered her usual gentle tone, her usual calm and firm demeanour-she was again all resignation to the will of God. A drowsiness then came on which lasted till nearly eight o'clock, when she suddenly awoke, and observing by her bed-side Dr. Holland, who, during her illness, had often expressed a hope of her recovery, said with a smile and accent of the greatest sweetness- Well, my dear Doctor, what do you think now?' Her Majesty soon afterwards became insensible, but remained alive for above two hours, showing by h a vigour of the lungs and of the heart which the physicians said exceeded any case they had ever witnessed. At length, at 25 minutes past ten, her heroic and persecuted spirit fled to the region of truth, and justice, and peace. The anguish of her friends, the agony of her servants, we have before described; and have only to add, that the physicians betrayed emotions of grief not often seen among the professional attendants of a death-bed.

We have kept our word: we have given a plain unvarnished parrative: let the people of England make their own comment."

The people of England will make their own comments. Prom the beginning to the end of this elaborate account of a protracted death-bed scene, there is not one consoling syllable to induce the Christian reader's belief that the QUBEN ever once thought of preparation for another world.

She evinced a carelessness of life, and a restlement arising from a self-induced degradation in the eyes of the nation; and her last hours were spent in talking of plots and conspiracies WHICH NEVER EXISTED, and in enquiring what good her popularity had done, as if she were disappointed in its effects. In such topics, and in an angry lamentation after "the privileges," the power, and the dignity of a Queen of England, was Tuesday, the last day diner mortal career, expended.

The TIMES says, " No mitred Prelate was near to receive, " amidst the impressive ceremonials of his office, and to "publish to the world her solemn declarations of inno-" cence." Of these declarations none specifically appear; but the TIMES still speaks truly, and lamentable is it to reflect upon, not only that no "mitred Prelate" was present, but that RELIGION was altogether forgotten in the last **-peaceful moments" of her Majesty's life. We hear of her Majesty making codicils to her will-we hear of her Majesty talking over her worldly affairs with Alderman Wood-we hear of her Majesty entreating her legal advisers to stay with her-we hear of her Majesty's banker arriving at a full gallop,-but we hear of no Clergyman having been called upon (the Rev. Mr. Wood mentioned is a lad, a son of the Alderman's, at Cambridge, but we much doubt his being in Orders). We certainly do not hear of her Majesty's prayers, nor of her Majesty's participation in the BLESSED COMMUNION OF OUR HOLY CHURCH.

We have no hesitation in saying, that a more appalling, cheerless description of a death-bed we never read; and however suitable to the close of such a life as the Queen's, most assuredly, no Paper, except the Times, could have been so ignorant of right, so careless of respect for a patroness's memory, or so disrespectful to the good feelings of the reputable proportion of its readers, as to have recorded it with an air of triumph!

Of the gross lies, and incomparable stupidity of the same Paper, so boldly put forth, and so explicitly evinced on this occasion, we shall now preceed to take due notice.

THE TIMES says, on Wednesday-

"The nation feels now widowed by her decease."

It is most true, and most glaringly true, that the nation feels no such thing. That a cockney, in his garrett, in Printing-house square, or wherever the TIMES office is. should at any time find out what the nation feels, we very much doubt; but when we consider that the Queen did not die till nearly eleven o'clock on Tuesday night, and that the cockney in question did not get the intelligence till near one, and that the article he wrote upon the occasion was printed by the day-break of Wednesday, the skill of having ascertained a national feeling during the short intervening period, is more than we can easily allow even him; his surmises and forebodings, however, are less miraculous, though their character is more decidedly duncish. He says-

"Politiciens must perceive with some anxiety that the destinies of the monarchy are now transferred to, and wound up with, the life of an infant girl."

Now!-they were as much wound up (as he calls it) last Sunday as they are to-day. What possible influence could the Queen's living have upon the succession to the crown? We should think, if any change were effected in this particular point by her death, the hopes of a direct heir to the throne would be rather strengthened than diminished by the demise of her Majesty.

But that which is better worth our looking at than the thoughts of such a Paper as the TIMES, is its flagrant, deliberate falsehood. The Times says.

"The sensation produced in the vicinity of her Majesty's residence was deep beyond description. At midnight lights were moving in the windows of every house in the village of Hammersmith; the streets were filled by persons running to and fro, whither or why, they scarcely knew; and circles collected round the door of every dwelling discussed the dreadful event of the night with interest painfully acute. "The Queen is gone" was the observation with which each met his fellow. " Peace be to her soul!" was the fervent prayer of thousands!"

Now this, upon our honour-upon our oath, if necessary

we state to be false from the beginning to the end.

We were at Hammersmith—nay, slept at Hammersmith: and we do solemnly declare, that at nine o'clock, when we visited the lodge of Brandenburgh House, the only persons there were three women, apparently laundresses; and at the gate was one of the Queen's men-servants, who, finding the air chilly, was at that moment warming himself by DANCING—to his own whistling!

When the event of her Majesty's death was known we passed into High-street, and remained there for some time; we did not see more than half a dozen persons in it during an hour; and as for the lights which were seen moving in " every house in the village of Hammersmith," we can only say that knowing that village as we do, we believe that its inhabitants rarely go to bed without candles, and that the movement alluded to was simply the effect of their accustomed retreat to their quiet and ordinary repose

"The "intense and deep interest" which manifested itself in London was exhibited by about a dozen persons collected opposite Cambridge-house during the day, and we think we need not designate the following paragraph:-

"When the account of the Queen's death reached South Audleystreet last night, a vast concourse of persons were surrounding Cambridge-house. On the bulletin being read there was a general shrick from the females assembled; many fainted, and were carried into Alderman Wood's house opposite.

Those who duly appreciate the sensibilities of ladies who are to be found strolling in the streets at midnight, will (if they believe the story) put a proper value upon this tribute

The Chronicle, full of fine writing and fine feeling, gave us, on Thursday, an article, margined black, in which, after describing her late Majesty's virtues and excellencies, (which every person connected with the Paper, from LORD ERSKINE upwards, were accustomed, during her life-time, to deny, laugh at, and ridicule) it adds, to the list of calamities likely to accrue from her Majesty's dissolution, one which our readers, we think, cannot anticipate, and which is the more distressing, as it is inevitable.

The death of her Majesty will produce a considerable change," says the Morning Chronicle, " in-in-in the situation at the bar of MESSRS. BROUGHAM and DENMAN, her Attorney and Solicitor-General."—" A sense of equity," adds that upright paper, "will, however, we should think, induce those who have the power, to confer on them professional honours, which may prevent them from being thrown back to their former position, and thereby suffering in their practice.'

We are unable to say what a sense of equity may do, but we think a sense of justice will prevent any honours being conferred on either of the Learned Gentlemen mentioned. Mr. Brougham was refused a silk gown, when he offered for its sake to abandon the Queen: why he should have one now we leave the Morning Chronicle to inform us.

THE QUEEN'S WILL.

By her Majesty's Will she directs that Cambridge-house shall be sold, and the purchase-money paid to Mr. WIL-LIAM AUSTIN—it being confidently expected by her legal advisers that she had an equitable claim on Government to provide her a house. The first instalment on the purchase had been paid by her Majesty, and the two next, amounting to 12,000l. are guaranteed by the house of Messrs. RANSOM and Co.

Her claims under the Will of her mother the Duchess of BRUNSWICK, whatever they may amount to, she also leaves to Mr. WILLIAM AUSTIN, and she makes him her residuary legatee.

She directs a sealed box, which she describes, to be ransmitted to a merchant in the City, to whom she owed 3001. It is supposed to contain her diamonds.

She bequeaths 5001. each to Lord and Lady Hoop.

She leaves a picture of herself to Lady ANNE HAMILTON, one to the Marquess Antaldi, one to the Signor Fedici, and one to Mr. William Austin.

She leaves to HIERONYMUS her barouchette and her linen; and to the sister of DEMONT all her wearing apparel! Her Italian property is not alluded to, as that was preiously settled by a notarial deed.

She directs that her body shall not be opened, nor laid n state, and that she should be buried by the side of her father and brother at Brunswick. The body to be sent off

The following inscription to be engraved on her tomb-

"To the Memory of CAROLINE of BRUNSWICK, the injured Queen of England."

There are two Codicils to the Will, containing tokens of affection to her domestics.

Lord and Lady Hood have earned their money most worthily; but the Woods are as completely forgotten as if they had never exposed themselves: to be sure, the money he betted and won on the Queen's visit to England he has bagged: but as for a mark of Her Majesty's favour, or affection, or gratitude for his servile adulation and unceasing exertions, and the unfortunate tom-foolery of all his family-none is to be found; and the influence weight, and importance of this smirking dunce stand betrayed to the wondering world.—BROUGHAM and DENMAN make no figure either: but LUSHINGTON, the approved, tried friend, does. He is one of the exacutors, who was unremitting in his assiduities to the Queen in her last moments, and was married exactly ten hours and twenty-two minutes after Her Majesty's demise.

Her Majesty's other executors are "Antonio Antaldi,
"Who grins like Grimaldi, and another Italian; a striking proof of the confidence and respect the Queen entertained for the natives of Italy.

There has been a continued liveliness in the funds during the whole of the past week, and many circumstances have occurred which have occasioned considerable variation in the prices of the different public securities. The advices which have been received from Russia and Turkey are so varying, that no dependance can be placed upon them; although there are many persons in the money market who seem to attach more credit to the reports of war, and act upon them to the fullest extent, thereby at-tempting to depress the public securities, and assist their own views; but notwithstanding the means thus resorted to, the present high price of the foreign funds, added to the decrease in the public expenditure in consequence of an event which has lately occurred, there has been a con-tinued and strengthened confidence in the fundholders which has materially improved the prices. Consols were, in one part of the week, as low as 75‡ for money and the account, but they have since risen to 76 for money and 761 for the account. The opening price yesterday morning was 751 for money and 761 for the account, and closed at 75; for money and 75; for the account, and sellers at those

An express arrived in the City yesterday morning from Paris, having left there on Thursday afternoon; by this conveyance intelligence was received of the French loan of twelve millions of rentes having been contracted for by the ministry. There were four bidders, viz. the Dutch House, De La Serre and Co. Rothschild and Lafitte, Sartoris, and Ricardo, brothers. Messrs. La Serre and Co. were the highest bidders, at 85 fr. 5 cents; the next in order were Rothschild and Lasitte, Ricardo, brothers, and Sartoris, when the French Minister declared Messrs. La Serre and Co. to be the contractors. The French 5 per Cents. were, previous to the biddings, as high as SS, being an advance within a few days of nearly 14 per Cent. The Exchange upon Paris is at one month 25 fr. 50 cents, and at three months 25 fr. 30 cents.

THE QUEEN'S LAST MOMENTS.

In addition to the shocking account above quoted from the TIMES, of the last moments of QUEEN CARO-LINE, the Chronicle has furnished us with the following melancholy evidence of the state of her mind, on the brink of the grave :-

" It has been stated, that Her Mujesty, on the day before that on which she died, sat up for some time in an arm chair. Her Majesty, in the course of that day, mentioned to her attend FAVOURITE DRESS which she had worn UPON SOME VERY PAR-TICULAR OCCASION, and copressed a strong wish to have it put on, and to sit up for a short time. The wish was promptly compiled with. Her Majesty was attired in this dress, and placed in an easy chair, where she remained for some time, conversing cheerfully with those about her."—Chronicle, Friday.

It may be necessary to remark, that, however sanguine her legal and medical attendants were, as to her Majesty's recovery, she herself was convinced that she should die!

INTENSE GRIEF FOR THE QUEEN'S DEATH.

"AT TWENTY-FIVE minutes past TRN (TCESDAY NIGHT) her "heroic and persecuted spirit fled to the region of truth, and jus-"tice, and peace.—The anguish of her friends—the agony of "her servants we have before described, and have only to add, "that the physicians betrayed emotions of grief not often seen "among the professional attendants of a death-bed!"-TIMES, THURSDAY, AUG. 9, 1821.

"On WEDNESDAY morning, at News o'clock, was married, at "Hampstend Church, Doctor Lubhington, new Majesty's Ad " vocate and Executor, to Miss Carr, daughter of Mr. Carr, So-"licitor to the Excise. The HAPPY couple left Hampstead about "half-past two o'clock, to spend the HONEY MOON! at-"BRUNSWICK, and——to make preparations for the funeral of her "Majesty."—All the Papers, Friday, Aug. 10, 1821.

There are reasons for every thing, and we trust the Learned Doctor will give us one for this very extraordinary haste. Perhaps, in his absence, MR. BROUGHAM might favour us with his riew of the business.

CONSISTENCY OF THE CHRONICLE.

On Friday, the Chronicle says:-

"The maindy which has sheltered her Majesty from all future care and suffering, is not, we have good authority for believing, of recent origin. This unfortunate Princess has been more than once attacked by the same disease, and about two years ago, when she resided at Pesaro, it assumed so alasming an appearance, that the Physicians, during a period of three days, were in momentary expectation that the result would prove fatal?"

One inch below this, read the following;

"She has fallen the victim of the most cruel and unrelenting persecution: she must have been more than woman, more than mortal, not to have felt her wrongs; she was a heroine, and suppresent them: all but those who have an interest to say otherwise. must believe and affirm that she literally DIBD of GRIBF; for the disease which brought her to the grave was occasioned by the suppression of sorrow."

A more beautiful instance of consistency, we think, never was exhibited, even in the Chronicle.

The Morning Chronicle of Friday last, speaking of our forbearance from speaking of her Majesty last Sunday,

" JOHN BULL honestly confessed, on Sunday last, that the illness of her Majesty had deprived his columns of the subject which chiefly gave life to them, and he hoped his readers would, on that count, forgive his duliness."

We did hope so, and we have no doubt they did; but we deny that the Queen was the subject which chiefly gives life to our columns, or that we ever said so. While the Radicals and Whigs exist, and the Times and Chronicle are published, we shall never want food for mirth and ridicule.

The truth is, that the illness of the Queen had not, till late on Saturday, assumed an appearance sufficiently serious to induce us to cancel all the articles prepared for publication, in which her conduct and character were canassed. Anybody who knows the nature of a periodical journal, must know, that such matter, thus withdrawn, could not be replaced in time for our publication on Saturday evening, and therefore, we apologized for the temporary absence of that, which happened to be last week particularly piquante.

We shall continue our course steadily and impartially, upholding loyalty and morality, and shewing up Humbug wherever it can be found; and though the QUEEN, from her political consequence, and her situation, as leader of Radicals, came perpetually before us, there are plenty of fellows, who, in their patriotic struggles to fill up her vacancy, will call for our vigilance to detect, and our power

We quote the following paragraph from the Morning Chronicle of Friday. It may serve to corroborate the stories we are told of the deep and intense interest taken by the people about the late Queen. It is from Dublin.

On the receipt yesterday (Sunday) of the London Journals of Friday, announcing the serious indisposition of the Queen, the most intense anxiety prevailed among every rank and order of the community, lest the disorder should terminate fatally, and thus et once MEAD TO THE ABANDONMENT, BY HIS MAJESTY, OF HIS BONG-LOOKED-FOR VISIT TO THIS COUNTRY-at the very moment, teo, when the fondly-cherished hopes of the people were so near being realized. The arrival of Saturday's papers, however, this day, communicating the fact of her Majesty's having taken some nourishment, and having had some sleep, has again restored the public mind to its wonted serenity; and hopes are now entertained, thather Majesty's illness will not cause any interruption to the promised visit of the King."

HUMBUG.

His Serene Royal Highness Prince Leopold left England two days before His Majesty's Levee and Drawing Room, to visit his dear sister, who was sick; his affection for her drove him away, and he hurried from town on the wings of fraternal love.

His Serene Royal Highness quitted London on Saturday, the 21st of last month; he is now living in the Rue Richelieu, spending our fifty thousand a-year in Paris, and seems, in the gaiety of the Boulevards, to have entirely forgotten his poor dear sick sister.—He dines OUT almost every day.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF SUSSEX.

The conclusion was. 'Gad save the King,' sung by CATALANI and BRAHAM in the most impressive manner. The company did not disperse till a very late hour in the morning, after a delightful harmonic treat, and the most liberal hospitality."—New Times, Aug. 6.

WE have hitherto abstained from any observations upon the conduct of his Royal Highness the DUKE of SUSSEX, because he is the son of KING GEORGE THE THIRD, and the brother of KING GEORGE THE FOURTH; but human patience may be tired out, and whatever our respect for the Royal Family may be, our respect for the PEOPLE who have upheld and patronized us in a most distinguished manner, must not be forgotten; to them we have professed to speak truth, and call things by their right names, and we must redeem our pledge.

Is it to be believed, we will ask the PEOPLE, that his Royal Highness the DUKE OF SUSSEX, fourth brother of the King, and heir presumptive to the Crown of these realms, has gone publicly from the palace, in which (by the grace and Favour of his Majesty) he resides, to stand Godfather, in person, to the infant child of MR. BRAHAM, the singer.

MR. BRAHAM, though he has the worst possible taste, and by no means a sweet voice, is a very meritorious performer, and in his proper sphere, deserving of public patronage. But now let us look to the claims, which, as a member of society, MR. BRAHAM has upon a Prince of the Blood for the very distinguished honour which has been conferred upon him.

It is painful to rake up private character, and we hold the doctrine that the public have nothing to do with the private characters of public performers, quoad their public performances. When Punch's puppets are put into their box, it matters little to us whether they be made of wood or leather, if they have served the purpose of amusing us; but if Punch's puppets be held up to us as beautiful copies of human nature, or symmetrical models of men and women, it hecomes our duty, before we allow them our praise, to handle and examine, and inspect them closely.

So long as MR. BRAHAM remained in his place, and sang for our entertainment, we should have been quite satisfied to have criticised his performance, and the green curtain which separated us at the end of the opera, should have been an inviolable barrier between us; but, when MR. BRAHAM's conceit and presumption lead him, as an individual, to solicit so striking a mark of royal favour, as that which he has begged and obtained from the bands of the DUKE of SUSSEX; and when his coxcombry and folly induce him to paragraph it in the papers, he volunteers the exposure; he steps from the stage into the publicity of private life, and courts observation upon points which, while he knew and kept his place in society, would have been held sacred.

It will be recollected, that MR. ABRAHAMS, alias BRA-HAM, lived for many years in open adultery with MADAME STORACE, the singer, by whom he had a son. It will be remembered that he abandoned MADAME STORACE, for her intimate friend, MRS. WRIGHT, and whom he subsequently quitted, to marry the bouncing daughter of a country dancing-master. Is it then, as a reward for morality, or as a subject for emulation—is it as a mark of respect for virtue, or as evidence of approbation, that THE "Ornament of the House of Brunswick" (as Sir FRANCIS BURDETT called the DUKE OF SUSSEX at the Holkham Political Association) goes to stand God-father at the Christening of this singer's child? We only ask, (and we ask for information) upon what ground, or with what view, could that magnanimous moralist—that patron of charities—that Grand Master of Masons—that Vice-President of the BIBLE SOCIETY, his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, go to Tavistock-square, to stand God-father to Mr. Braham's baby?

Had his Royal Highness the DUKE OF SUSSEX taken ten pounds worth of tickets (and paid for them) at MR. BRAHAM's benefit, we should have thought he had done a good natured thing; or if, after MR. BRAHAM had sang him "Scot's wha hae wi' Wallace bled," "William Tell," or "God save the Queen," he had paid him his hire, we should have been as much pleased as surprised; but that the high-minded Prince should have taken this extraordinary mode of shewing his sense of the obligations conferred on him by MR. BRAHAM, which he has chosen to adopt, does, indeed, astound us.

One thing adds to our surprise, which is, that her Majesty THE QUREN, for whom his Royal Highness the DUKE OF SUSSEX has expressed the warmest affection, was at the time this ceremony took place lying on a bed of sickness-of death the vital spark hovered and glimmered over her couch, every moment her dissolution was expected; and yet the affectionate brother-in-law, the advocate of the injured QUEEN, was at this critical juncture, smoking and singing at the hospitable board of MR. BRAHAM, alias ABRAHAM, in Tavistock-square.

It is true, that while his Royal Highness's favorite brother as dying, he was making speeches amongst the Norwich Radicals, but there was a point to be gained: old Coke, who boasts that he drank the health of our enemy during a war, and who brags that he personally insulted his late Majesty, was there, and so was his jester, LORD ALBEMARLE, and the people were abusing the Government, and the PRINCE REGENT; and we can quite enter into the feelings which could detain (where public duty called) a man from the death, bad of the death bad the death bed of one anxious, fond, and sympathizing brother, to sit and hear the most virulent abuse of another.

But we will admit on that occasion, that the DUKE OF SUSSEX might not have heard of the death of the DUKE OF KANT; but in this instance, considering the distance between Kensington and Brandenburgh, we cannot find a decent excuse on one hand for a want of feeling in his Royal Highness, which could allow the enjoyment of a jollification, during the actual danger of the Queen, or on the other, for his Royal Highness's professions of affection for her Majesty if they did not really exist.

But let us look at the party who met the Prince upon this eventful occasion: not only the "ornament of the House of Brunswick," was there, but he who called him so, the pure, amiable, patriotic SIR FRANCIS BURDETT: and then there was a Mistress Eliashon from Duke's-plashe, (at a christening!) and then there was MRS. MITCHELL, and MR. MASTERS, and MR. HIGGINBOTTOM, and MR. CRUIKSHANKS, and half a dozen more suitable associates for his Royal Highness; but then CATALANI came in the evening, and then they did not separate till a late hour.

We do not think we need say more upon this subject. lament—bitterly lament, the degradation of the Royal Family in the persons of any of its members; and we, therefore, feel most when THAT Prince, who, according to SIR FRANCIS BURDETT, WADDINGTON, BRAHAM, HONE, WOOD, and the Times newspaper, is THE ornament of his illustrious house, should have rendered it necessary for us to exhibit him as a God-father to a singer's bady!

MR. THOMAS MOORE.

WE take the earliest opportunity of noticing a letter, signed "VERAK," which has appeared in the Morning Chronicle, alluding to what it calls our attack upon Mr.

It is true, that we cannot, from principle, esteem the writer of The Two-ponny Post Bag, The Fudge Family, or The Memorial to Congress. It is equally true, that we shrink from the profligate, who could dress up in soft flowing language, such wanton thoughts as are to be found in Little's Poems, or Fanny was in the Grove; but we admire the poet, to whose exquisite taste and genius we owe the prettiest translation of Anacrem in the language, and the bewitching Lallah Rookh. "VERAX," in the Morning Chronicle, is wrong if he supposed our notice of the paragraph in the Times was intended for an attack upon that poet.

We know that Mr. Moore's defalcation arises from the mis-conduct of his Deputy; but knowing also, that he, as prin-cipal in his office, is responsible, we merely said he was a defaulter, to account for his absence from England. We stated, that Mr. Moore had a sinecure office, only to shew the Times the nonsense they were talking, when they fancied him "a patriot sufficiently inflexible" to refuse a mark of Royal favour; and we added, that this sinecure was procured for Mr. Moore by the special favour of His present Majesty-because it is the truth.

It only shews the misery of having vulgar partizans and stupid friends. In order to expose the ignorance of the "leading journal" of Europe, we were forced into saying things which might unintentionally wound the sweetest songster of Ireland.

THEATRES.

On Tuesday, Covent Garden Theatre closed for the season, and Mr. Fawcett, after the play, made the following

"Ladies and Gentlemen,—I present myself to perform an un-pleasant part of my duty,—that of taking leave of you; but I derive consolation from the hope that the separation will be of short duration. A retrospective glance at our compaign affords matter for gratitude and exultation, for you have generously patronized us by your approval, and our most gracious Monarch has twice honoured us by the sanction of his name and presence. Most of our new productions have been successful. For the lovers of music, opera, in the early part of the season, took the lead, and held a conspicuous place. To please our juvenile friends at Christmas and Easter, our Harlequin Pantomime and Melo Drama were happy in the extreme. Amongst plays of a classical and refined cast, three new and successful Tragedies in one season is a proof that modern authors are not neglected by us, nor unrewarded by But, to conclude our labours on the 7th of August, with one of the great works of our immortal bard, got up in such a manner as to occasion its repetition twenty-seven times (to the most crowded and splendid audiences ever congregated within the walls of a theatre), furnishes materials for dramatic history, and affords me the pleasing opportunity of now offering you the most sincere and grateful thanks of our proprietors. Until the 27th of September next we close; and I can with truth declare, no day in the interim will be passed without an effort to re-open with (if possible) in-creased effect. The performers, ladies and gentlemen, and the humble individual who has the bonour to address you, beg to add their thanks; and we all, for the present, most respectfully bid you farewell."

This review of the session appears to be very satisfactory to MR. FAWCETT; but the truth is, that till the lucky hit of the Coronation, Covent Garden was in a deplorable state. What the new opera was, which they produced, unless it were TWELFTH NIGHT, the CHANCES, or the TEMPEST, we do of it was the pronunciation, or rather mis-pronunciation of not know. The pantomime, they are justified in congratulate one of the most horrid and blasphemous oaths uttered by ing themselves upon; but of their three new plays, " of the classical and refined cast," the less that is said the better: and we think it a great piece of injustice to held out the and we think it a great piece of injustice to note out on-meed of praise thus publicly, to the authors of those most illustrious specimens of twaddle, CONSCIENCE, MIRANDOLA, and DAMON AND PYTHIAS. CHARLES KEMBLE and and DAMON AND PYTHIAS. CHARLES KEMB MACREADY should be thanked, and not the writers.

These coxcombs of authors will sneer and tell you but their plays are too good: nay, Bynon himself says, that he has written a play, (and every body says it is a fine play; but it is not meant to be acted—oh no; it is too fine for that. Now we, as was once said before, are silly enough to think, that one of the chief merits of a drama is, its being dramatic.

We know that STULZ is the best tailor in London; but, were he, upon the strength of his reputation, to make coats very well, that we could not wear them, it strikes us, that he might soon cut up his lengthy list of customers into nex. sures. Sure we are of this—that if the managers of Covent Garden produce many more plays of a "classical relind cast," as Fawcett calls them, they will find "a beggarly account of empty boxes."

One good comedy would answer their purpose better than fifty such things. Why does not MORTON str his stumps!—he is active, and gay, and full of fun. COLMAN we give to in despair; and REYNOLDS is rich: but then there is KENNY, and there is T. DIBDIN, approved hands at comedia: besides a whole swarm of underling farce-writers, who, if they tried, might succeed. We wish they would make the experiment; for it is a much more lively thing for an auditorial for the same to see a head of the same to see a ence, and more profitable for managers, to see a hazardous comedy damned, than to mope over the negative success sigmawkish tragedy for nine dull nights.

Drury Lane re-opened on Thursday, with the Corona. TION. It is really got up with wonderful splendour and correctness, and is well worth seeing, either to recall the magnificent pageant to those who were present, or give the best possible idea of it to those who were not.

It appears as if the public taste for Theatricals were whether by the necessary closing of the houses for one night; for al. the places of public amusement seem more througed with visitors during the last three nights than they have been at any time this year.

HAYMARKET.—On Saturday se'nnight a new play vas performed, written by Mr. T. Dibdin, entitled Rice and

The following are the incidents: - Sir Omnium Traffic, 3 rich speculator, arrives with his niece, Miss Traffic, at his villa, and is requested to patronise the intended marriage of Rose, the head gardener's daughter, with Nensitire, a well educated young man, but reduced. The Baronet and he niece object to a marriage not arranged under their auspics, when they receive the news of a Continental failure, which reduces them to sudden poverty, and to the necessity of selfing the estate. Sensitive, on the other hand, becomes as unexpectedly the possessor of an immense income, which enables him to purchase the Baronet's domain. In spite of temptation he remains true to Rose, and promises to assist his friend Trampley, an eccentric wanderer in the service of the press, with a large sum of money, when a codicil is dis covered to the will of his benefactor, Sir Robert, which re-stricts him from marrying for three years, or from lending any sum above 51. While perplexed with these drawbacks, it is discovered that the testator is yet living, having been ship wrecked, but preserved providentially, on his passage from the Indies; and the failure of Sir Omnium's agent turns out to be a fabrication, made to cure him of speculation. Sentences tine, however, is equally well provided for during his patron's life, marries Rose, and all parties are dismissed with the due share of felicity.

Upon these materials Mr. Thomas Dibdin has founded a very agreeable little piece. The same original (which is French) has been very well treated by Kenny in his play of the Touchstone; and we confess, had we been Mr. T. Dibdin, we should have chosen some subject which had not been so recently handled to have worked upon.

There is no great eriginality in any of the characters; indeed the only attempt at the outre is that of the lawyer, in the de livery of whose quaintnesses Oxberry was hardly sufficiently rapid. Jones kept the thing going incessantly in the school master; and his reception and welcome to the Haymarket were such as might convince him how fully his activity and ability are appreciated.

Terry delivered the Prologue with uncommon effect, and played a very inferior part in his best style. It is in a sort of familiar soliloquy that Terry is eminently good—where he appears to be considering some foregone event, or arguing some point with himself. An opportunity occurred in the lay for making the quiet effect we allude to, and he availed himself of it with infinite skill.

Mr. Williams played Sir Omnium particularly well, and in a sudden transition from extreme grief and disappointment to the sanguineness of hope that his property still might be saved, he was really excellent. One thing we would observe, that since Parsons, and after him Mathews, gave us to understand, in Sir Fretful Plagiary, that violent agitation was to be expressed on the stage by buttoning up one's coal then unbuttoning it again, all actors of taste in arduous situations adopt that mode of evincing the strength of their feelings, and accordingly we noticed, that when Williams was in grief and suspense, he buttoned his coat up to the chin, and then suddenly unbuttoned it; but we were quite satisfied of the correctness of our observations when we beheld Terre in a fit of agitation, just before he made up his mind to ught One man we knew Sensitive, do exactly the same thing. One min we knew shot himself because he was tired of the horrid system of buttoning and unbuttoning; if he have any disciples leit, we would advise them to beware of theatres, where the science is carried on in these days with the most triumphant success.

Decamp was very active and lively in the Frenchman; but by what fatality the author could have written, and he have sung the song with which the third act opened, we cannot understand; the song in itself was bad, and when we had tion that the words of it, the subject of it, and the whole point swearers, we think we shall be borne out in saying, that if author and actor approved it, it was the duty of the manager to have prevented its performance, if the licenser had not previously saved that trouble.

Mrs. Chatterley was a very sweet Rose, and Mrs. Tayleure very good in Miss Omnium. We were particularly stricken by the propriety of the change of her dress from morning to evening, a point generally not much attended to on the stage. Miss Boyce had very little to do, but did that little well; and the eclat with which the piece went off was not diminished by the pointed Epilogue, most admirably delivered by Mrs. Charactey.

Upon the whole we never saw a play more unequivocally successful, and really deservedly so. The principal tault in it appears to us to be in the denovement, in the hurry to bring about which, the mistake of the letters is not sufficiently cleared up—we mean, for probability's sake it seems rather abrupt. On the other hand the dialogue never flags, nor indeed the interest, from the beginning to the end of the play, which does its indefatigable and ingenious author much RISE AND FALL has been repeated every night the house has been open since the Queen's death; and we are not only pleased to see the public pleased with their entertainment, but that they give the best possible testimony of their satisfaction by coming in crowds to laugh, after the old fashion of the little Haymarket.

VAUXHALL.

On Monday last, there was what was called a "ROYAL CARNIVAL," a Masquerade, given at Vauxhall.

We should violate the promise made to ourselves were we to say more, than that after all the discussions which have taken place upon such subjects, the last act of her late Majesty's life was, to command a public Masquerade at this place. We are quite sure no comment is necessary-nor shall we make any-except, indeed, a few upon the conduct of the Master of the Gardens.

A Vauxhall Masquerade is exactly the climax of every thing indecent and appalling in society, the place at any time is abominable from the indiscriminate and inevitable mixture of the loosest and lowest of prostitutes with the respectable women, who are doomed now and then to shew their country cousins the lions; but when the restraint which a responsibility to the police puts upon these persons with their faces bare, is taken off and masques are put on, the scene becomes too disgusting to be described; it is, indeed, a thing so abhorrent and filthy, that the Magistrates of Surrey have frequently declared their determination not to licence the Tavern, if such entertainments were ever permitted to take place there.

Is there, we will ask, amongst the thousands and tens of thousands, who read this paper, a husband, or a father, who would take, or send, his wife or daughter to a Vauxhall Masquerade?—we will take upon ourselves to answer—No—assuredly not; unless he had pre-determined to debauch her mind, and destroy her principles, by associating her with drunkenness, riot, and obscenity, and familiarizing her with vice, profligacy, and prostitution.

It is, therefore, impossible to guess why or wherefore her late Majesty's patronage and countenance were obtained for such an entertainment, nor does it signify now, further than the effect produced by it upon the entertainment itself, goes.

It will be remarked, that on Monday, the 23d of July, a grand Masqued Fête was given (as they call it) at Vaux-hall Gardens, in honour of the CORONATION; and it was subsequently announced that a repetition of the entertainment was to take place on Monday, the 6th of August, because (the puffs say,) " many hundreds were prevented from "joining in the loyal scene on the former evening, on account of the badness of the weather."

Our readers will observe, that amongst other attractions held out in the bills beyond the brilliant illumination of " LONG LIVE KING GEORGE THE FOURTH," was a " superb "and matchless transparency of HIS MAJESTY in HIS Co"RONATION ROBES, attended by Minerva and several alle-"gorical figures, and a grand National Ode written for the occasion, which with other appropriate music, was to be " performed by the whole strength of the grand orchestra."

But down comes the command we have necessarily alluded to, and the CORONATION Fete is suddenly forgotten, the promises held out in the bills broken, and instead of the joyous preparations for celebrating the King of England's inauguration, we are treated with a Royal Carnival, the foreign and licentious name of which was evidently intended to remove the little restraint which any thing English might have had upon the tag-rag and bobtail, who were expected to congregate upon the occasion.

We confess, however envious of the patronage he obtained, and of which he made so servile and disgusting a parade, we had hoped that the loyalty of the master of this place would have taught him that there was a paramount duty to be performed to that which seemed best calculated to answer his dirty purpose.

We speak of the loyalty of the master of Vauxhall, from no knowledge of his politics; but judge of his principles from the liberal use he has always made of his present Majesty's name in his bills, and from the fact of his being one of His Majesty's tradesmen in the candle line.

de on Monday was excessively dull, was in character except persons hired for the purpose, and however neglected and unfashionable Vauxhall may be at present, we are quite sure, that neither Carnivals nor such patronage as appears to be appreciated there, are likely to bring it back into the favour of a loyal, moral, and respectable

To-morrow—being seven days since the ROYAL CAR-NIVAL was given, under the sanction and protection of her late Mi Esty; the proprietor gives (at three shillings and sixpence per head) a grand National Festival in grateful commemoration of HIS MAJESTY'S birth-day. This is quite upon the old school-boy principle of "one down tother come on," and is really one of the most whimsical specimens of humbug we have witnessed in trifling matters.

Lord Arbuthnot was elected on Friday a Representative Peer of Scotland, vice the Earl of Stair. The votes were, for Lord Arbuthnot, De-for Lord Reny, 1.

We have received the following communication from Mr. Webster Wedderburne, in contradiction to some accounts which have appeared in the papers:-

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—As an act of common justice I beg the favour of your enabling me thus immediately to repel one of the most deliberately false and malignant libels that ever issued from the press against an individual—I mean, Sir, the paragraph, which appeared some days ago in several of London journals, and which purported to relate an occurrence, of certainly a most unpleasant nature, which took place in my house at Boulogne-sur-Mer last week. What did then occur was this:-

One of my servants, in a state of frenzy, from inebriety and passion, after insulting me in the most unprovoked and gross macrier, and, without even having been first struck by me, threw me down, and threatened to kill me, in the presence of another servant, who offered me no assistance. Finding myself so situated, and being almost exhausted by the violent and atrocious attack upon my person, and having no other means of disengaging myself from a struggle which threatened MY LIFE, in defence of which alone I was relactantly obliged to avail myself of a dirk cane which I accidentally had in my hand, (having in vain attempted to disengage myself by using the cause itself.) At this crisis the interposition of my friends fortunately relieved me from my perilous situation, by removing the man by force, and administering, by my directions, every care that kindness could suggest to counteract any bad effects from the injuries which he is now fully sensible his own conduct provoked and justified.

In regard, Sir, to the allusions made to my domestic concerns and arrangements, in the paragraph in question, they are all as deliberately and diabolically false as the other calumnious assertions; and the moment the forms of law will admit I shall bring the publisher of this libel into court, where he will have every opportunity of justifying it; and where, if I fail to discover the base and cowardly AUTHOR of so crael and unprovoked a calumny. it will be for a Jury of my own country to establish, whether the British Press is to be considered a public blessing or a, private curse; or whether it is to be henceforth the avowed and licensed channel of conveying the poisoned shafts of the base and vindictive calumniator to the bosoms of private families, and of thereby violating with impunity every feeling and sanctuary of domestic life. am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

J. WEBSTER WEDDERBURNE.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR-In your statement last Sunday, of the proceedings in the Common Council, on the 30th ult. you say that "it was carried by a large majority, the old (London) bridge should be repaired and altered." It is true, this sapient body did so resolve, but it is their opinion only; the right of final decision being with Parliament, and by whom it will be settled

The Corporation of London possess greatly improvable estates, of the present value of 30,000l. per annum; besides a fund of upwards of 112,000l. which are applicable for the sole purpose of sustaining London Bridge, but which they have suffered to lapse into its present shameful and dangerous state, at the annual loss of many lives and much property. A Committee of the House of Commons has lately reported on the subject, and unanimously recommended a new structure; but the Corporation, from the mixed motives of continuing a job, and opposing the wishes of the House of Commons, with a view to make it unpopular, by raising a bug-bear about tolls, &c. have set themselves in opposition to a new bridge. The funds, in the case of the repair, will be wholly at their disposal, as well to pay away, as to leave a large surplus in their hands, whereby much of the present nuisances of impeded navigation, &c. will remain, by the projection of the starlings; and the structure will, in no degree, be improved. I am, Sir, yours,

A CITIZEN.

TO JOHN BULL.

MR. EDITOR,—I much wish to know whose duty it is to clear away the filth of Covent Garden Market; for the negligence shewn either by the Duke of Bedford's servants, or else by the respective owners of the stalls in the market, in not daily clearing away the putrid vegetables, and other impurities, which so offensively surround the same, as also the streets adjacent, particularly James and Southampton streets, is a disgrace in a country like ours. Perhaps this hint may be the means of bringing the birch-broom and pail rather oftener into play than they hitherto have been, and at the same time oblige your constant reader, н. н. м.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—On reading in your last Paper the account of the Queen's Coronation, (which appears accidentally to have fallen into your hands) I observed, among the clergymen who have prayed for the Queen, the Rev. Martin Benson, of

Now, Sir, although that gentleman certainly did repeatedly pray for Queen Caroline, I think it is but justice to him to state, that he has not done so since his name first appeared in your Paper; also, that on the Sunday after the King's Coronation, he delivered a most excellent and appropriate sermon, teaching the duties of loyalty and obedience, tiating on the natural love of one's country, and describing the blessings we enjoy, or ought to enjoy, in our favoured isle, where the best of laws are administered with equal justice to the noble and the peasant, &c.

The impressive discourse was received with delight by a congregation of half the population of the town, and God save the King was afterwards sung (accompanied on the or-gan) with a degree of fervour not to be described, excepting only three individuals, who appeared afflicted with the Radical cholic, one of whom, whose brains were probably a wool-gathering, sung or said, "God save the Queen!"

Orders were sent from the Lord Chamberlain's Office on Wednesday to the Theatres, ordering that they should be closed on that evening, and on the night of the funeral. The Schools and the Library of the Royal Academy are closed until after the interment. The military hand in St. James's Park, has crused for the present to play while the regiments are relleving each other.

THE CORONATION.—We have the pleasure to record a most gratifying instance of the exercise of that benignity of character, for which His Majesty is so distinguished, in his condescending attention Insure that aged and highly respectable servant of the crown, Sir Isnac Heard, Garter King of Arms. This venerable gentleman, now in the ninety-first year of his age, has bud the high gratification of receiving, as a gracious and special mark of the King's favour, a gold Coronation medal, conveyed to him by Lord Sidmouth, a few days since, to Malvern Wells, where he has been for some time past, on account of the feeble state of his hodily health, which, unequal to the energies of his mind, did not allow him the happiness of officiating, in his place, upon the late great and glorious solemnity.

The 19th of July is memorable in more respects than the coronathe 19th of July is memorante in more respects than the coronation of our present Sovereign.—On that day, 1333, Edward III. defeated the Scots, with great slaughter, at Halidown-hill, near Berwick-upon-Tweed.—On that day, 1554, Philip II. King of Spain, landed at Southampton, and was married to the sanguinary Mary, at Winchester, on the 25th of the same month—a usion to which a great part of the nation had, with good cause, the utmost aversion.—On that day, 1575, began a most magnificent enterminment, given to Queen Elizabeth by the Earl of Leicester, in Kenilworth-castle, Warwickshire, which was extraordinary for its magnificence; the daily expence is said to have been, even at that time, 1000l. to the Earl. "Surely," observes Hume, "one may say of such a guest what Cicero said to Attices, on occasion of a visit paid him by Cæsar—'If she relieved the people from oppressions, her visits were a great oppression to the nobility."— On that day, 1565, the Spanish arnuala arrived in the English Channel, but was soon after compelled to retreat; and the following laconic inscription on a medul, which was struck on the occasion

EXPORT OF TOBACCO TO IRELAND .- Copy of a letter, dated

Treasury-chambers, July 21, 1821:—

"Gentlemen,—With reference to a Report of the Commissioners of Excise of the 5th ult. on a statement from Newry, in Ireland, in regard to a consignment of tobacco from New Y and with reference also to a letter of this Board of the 23d ult. to the Commissioners of Excise, directing a clause to be prepared allowing tobacco to be exported to Ireland in vessels of 70 tons; the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Trensury desire that, until the pleasure of Parliament shall be known, you will give general directions for granting this indulgence. " Note-Orders have been sent to the outports in conformity." THE ARMY.—One of the fluest battalions in His Majesty's service, the 93d, or Sutherland Highlanders, is at present the junior regiment of the line. It is one of the live that continues the Roman costume, and in an admirable state of discipline. This corps, together with the 42d, 78th, and 79th, which likewise retain the garb of old Gaul," are to be brignded in Dublin during the ng's visit We are now able to state, in an authentic manner, the intended reductions in the army:—Two regiments of cavalry are to be disbanded, viz. the 18th and 19th Light Dragoons. Two troops are to be reduced in each of the remaining regiments. Two companies are to be reduced in each of the battalions of Foot Guards and Infantry of the Line. The whole reduction will amount to about 12,000 officers and men. On Thursday the Abundance store-ship arrived at Portsmouth from St. Helena, with the remainder of the 66th regiment on board; also the Ocean transport, Lieut. Mudge, agent, from Halifax, with the remainder of the 15th regiment, who landed and marched to join head-quarters at Fort Cumberland.

THE NAVY.—The officers passed over in the Naval Promotion of Fing Officers, are—Captains H. Evans. W. Ogilvy, and John Miller, and Hon. C. Boyle and J. Wolley. The Hon. Sir C. Paget, we understand, was not included in the list, that he might not be disqualified from commanding the King's personal yacht; he therefore stands the senior Post Captain in His Majesty's fleet.

DREADFUL SHIPWRECK .-- A letter from Liverpool, dated Aug. 9, gives the following account of the loss of a Dublin packet:—
"The Earl Moira packet, for Dublin, sailed from here last night, about six o'clock, with the wind directly contrary, and blowing strong. The vessel was beating out, when, about eight o'clock, she struck, and went on shore on the Wharf Bank. The Moira lay quite upright until about five o'clock this morning, when the tide making, a scene commenced which it is impossible to describe. The waves made a complete breach over the vessel, and death stared the whole of the unfortunate crew and passengers in the face—their destruction appeared inevitable. The life-boat from Hoylake, and two boats from Liverpool, succeeded in saving the lives of 30 passengers and part of the crew. The number of passengers who embarked in the Moira is not exactly known, but it is supposed that it could not be less than 200, There were 45 cabin passengers on board, most of whom it is supposed perished. passengers on board, most of whom it is supposed permised. The master and all hands, with the exception of the steward, were drowned. Almost all the passengers below deck perished; many of the others took refuge in the rigging, where they remained all night; and from 50 to 60 were taken up this morning by the Hoylake life-boat. One of the passengers, a lady, died almost as soon as she was rescued from the wreck."

NEW ZEALAND.—His Majesty's store-ship Dromedary, Captain Skinner, in her late voyage to New Zealand, anchored in the Bay of Islands, and took on board a cargo of cowdy, or pine spars, sufficiently large for the topmasts of ships of 98 guns. They were loaded at Whangaroon, where the Boyd was cut off by the natives, and the crew and passengers murdered. Some of the vestiges of the ill-fated people are still visible, and the chief actor in the dreadful affair, a native, who has long been at Sydney, and known by the name of George, openly avows he was the chief perpetrator. The bones of the unfortunate men are worn as ornaments by the

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

SHOCKING SCICIDE.—Friday night, about ten o'clock, a young woman, named Ann Raine, went into the Flying Horse, Wilsonstreet, Moorfields, and requested a bed: having been accommodated, she retired to her room about eleven. Not making her appearance next morning, the hundlord went up stairs to ascertain the cause. On his reaching her bed-side she vociferated, "Jesus Christ protect me!" Her manner and conduct left no doubt that she had been seized with a fit of insanity. She became gradually worse, and her screams alarmed the neighbourhood; it was with o'clock on Sunday morning she appeared rather tranquil, and it was thought the malady had left her; but during the temporary absence of her attendants she opened the window of her chamber and jumped out into the street (a height of fifty feet, being on the third story); her skull was shockingly fractured. She was a beautiful girl, apparently about twenty years of age; her friends and relations, who are respectable, reside at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. It was supposed that she had been disappointed in marriage. An inquest, which lasted three hours, was held on the body yesterday. The Jury returned a Verdict—That the deceased had thrown herealf from a three are in factors without a part of the death. self from a three pair of stairs window, which caused her death, she being at the time in a state of mental derangement.

Hydrophobia.—In February last, as a charity boy belonging to Bridge, Dowgate, and Candlewick School (in company with several of his school-fellows) was picking sugar off a cask on Cox's Wharf, Lower Thames-street, a strange dog came up, and, without the least provocation, bit him on the back of the hand so severely as to lay the bones nearly bare to a great extent. The populace collected and killed the dog, but not before it had bit two other persons in their attempts. The boy and the dog were both taken to Mr. Price, a surgeon, in Cannon-street, when the dog was opened and examined by several surgeons, but they were unable to discover the usual marks of canine mudness, and it was not therefore deemed adviseable to amputate the boy's hand, which was exercised, and caustic applied to every part. Between four and five months after the bite he was attacked with evident symptoms of hydrophobia, at his father's house, in Sugar-loaf-court, Garlick-hill, of which he died on Thursday se'maight. The dread of fluids, and the convulsive state which any attempt to swallow them produced, were particularly action in the core. state which any attempt to swallow them produced, were particularly evident in this case. He was visited by several medical gentlemen, and one of the surgeons from $t. Thomas's Hospital, who had no doubt of the nature of the disease. Of the two other persons, one was taken to an hospital, and had the part cut out, but has since died of hydrophobia; the other went into the country to place himself under a course of some celebrated remedy for the cure of the bits of a mid dog, but he also died of hydrophobia.—
The low was buried on Sunday all the hoys and sirls of the school The boy was buried on Sunday, all the boys and girls of the school, with a great number of their friends, walking in the procession.

On Tuesday a shocking occurrence took place in Robin Hood-court, Shoe-lane. A brass-founder, named Hipwood, who had repeatedly betrayed the most brutal disposition towards his wife, on coming lone at his dinner-hour, desired her to bring some porter. On her return words arose, which terminated in his attacking her furiously with a knife, and inflicting several wounds on her temple, head, and neck. The interference of the neighbour's, whom the woman's coles had alarmed nevented his numbering the ron the woman's cries had alarmed, prevented his murdering her on the spot, and he was immediately taken into custody. The unfortunate woman was taken up literally bathed in blood, and conveyed in a speechless state to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

Monday night, about 12 o'clock, a fire broke out at the bouse of Mr. Webster, oilman and tallow chandler, Chapman-street, St. George's in the East. It originated in the shop, and was first di covered by a neighbour, who, with difficulty, roused the inmates. They were obliged to escape by jumping from the windows on a bed, but a lady, who lodged in the house, had her arm broken, by falling against the pavement. The whole of the house, together with the extensive stock in trade, and valuable furniture, were de-

DARING ROBBERY AND ATTEMPT TO MURDER, -A few nights ago, Mr. Walker, a gardener, in the Kingsland-road, having had his gardens continually plundered in the night, he, for the purpose of finding out the thief, concealed himself amongst some peas About 12 o'clock, he perceived a tall ill-looking fellow scaling the fence, and watched his movements. The robber broke open the tool-house, and having entered, Mr. W. left his hiding place, and rushed into the shed; a struggle ensued between the robber and Mr. W. the former seized a quart pot, and most inhumanly beat Mr. W. about the head till he was nearly dead. The villain then scaled the fence and escaped, leaving his victim weltering in his blood.

Monday morning, about 12 o'clock a multitude of persons assembled in Goswell-street, to witness the punishment of a fellow, named Edward Bagster, who had been convicted of various felonics and was sentenced to 3 months imprisonments, and to be publicly logged. Soon after 12, the prisoner arrived from the House of Correction, and being made fast to the tail of a cart, he was whipped from the end of Noble-street to the sign of the Man in the Moon, distance of 100 yards. He appeared very indifferent about it.-After the punishment was inflicted, a most formidable gang of roffians armed themselves with stones, brickbats, &c. and repairing to the house of Mr. Oliver, in Noble-street, who was the principal prosecutor of Bagster, they commenced a most violent attack upon the house; stones were flying in every direction, to the great danger of the passengers. Mrs. O. was struck on the head with a large-flint stone, which felled here to the ground. Mr. Oliver with a large fliat stone, which felled ber to the ground. Mr. Oliver with great difficulty escaped with life; he at length succeeded in shutting his shop, but the street was blocked up by the rioters till about eight o'clock in the evening, when a party of the Bow-street patrol arrived, and after some time suppressed the tumult. Several of the ringleaders were secured.

TO THE PUBLIC.

TO THE PUBLIC.

I AVING, according to my usual custom, advertised, at full length, the Scheme of the State Lottery, I beg leave now to recommend it to my best friends the Public. On perusal, it will be found to consist of the whole 20,000 Tickets, to be all drawn in one Lottery, viz. 30th October, 20th November, and 11th and 20th December. There are not any Stock Prizes, all the Prizes being Sterling Money. There are not any Stock Prizes, all the Prizes being Sterling Money. There are not any Classes or re-drawing, every Ticket drawn singly, each deciding its own fate, and no other. There are Three Grand Money Prizes of £30,000, besides 30 other Capitals; and one grand feature of the Lottery is, that there are not Two Blanks to a Prize. Should my friends think proper to patronise this Lottery, (and I feel condituent they will.) I most respectfully solicit a continuance of that patronage? I have experienced for such a long series of years; and I hope Dame Fortune will enable me, as heretofore, to be as liberal in dispensing her favours.

THE CHAMPION'S DEFENCE of the CORONATION, and CHALLENGE to Mr. BROUGHAM.

"This argument was ready for publication, before the decease of the Queen took place. That event does not alter its design, which is, to trace Coronation through historical records; and for the good of the community, to suffer no interests, however bighly derived, to become, without observation, the means of public deception."

"The question, as regards the late Queen, is treated throughout as one of constitutional import, and not of personality; it has, therefore, required no alteration; it appears as first written.

PATENT ECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMP.—The Chamber Lamp, increasing in interest as the days shorten, the Patenton Is induced to present this to the Public as a source of comfort superior to any in this country, or parhaps the world. It embraces brilliancy, perfect safety, and certainty for any length of time required, will bear any motion, can be regulated to burn the longest or shortest night, disappearing the morning without smoke or smell. The same principle applies, and the Lamps equally portable, on elegant pedestals, for the dining table, sideboard, study, mantlepiece, &c.; and also for the Glass Grecian Hanging Lamp for the hall, conservatory, passages, staircase, drawing-room lustres, &c. elegantly simple and much admired. It is a most essential acquisition in all these Lamps, that they will burn the whole evening without trimming, requiring to be replenished with cotton only once in two or three months, and so simple that a child can turn them. The annual expense of light burning every night in the year, praportionate with candles, is, for the chamber as above described, 10s.: for the kitchen, equal to a candle eight to the pound, 12s.; parlour or mould sixes, 15s.; and to fours, 17s; suppose a dome lamp for the diming table, equal to four mould fours, 68s.; or hall, three mend sixes, 45s. Thus the degrees of light, more or less, can be regulated at pleasure suited to the occasion. By this statement Gentlemen may ascertain the great saving in proportion to their establishment, bearing in mind, that these Lamps burn as sweet as wax.—Sold for the Patentee, by Thomase Pearce and Co. No. 308, facing the front of St. Clement's Church, Strand; who, to secure the reputation of this invention from the effects of adulterated cill, are bound to sell none but pure and genuine Spermaceti. DRINCE'S CKLEBRATED RUSSIA OIL.—Although these are Articles for the Hair daily puffed in the Newspapers, but the above is proved to be the wholesomest nourisher and preserver of the Hair for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children; and even Medical Gentlemen at the Medical Hall, London, have published in the Gazette of Health, that Prince's Russia Oil is superior to any Oil for the Hair, and will do, in cases of Baldness and weak Hair, what can possibly be done. In short, Prince's celebrated Russia Oil is the heat Oil for dressing, preserving, and prometing the growth of Hair, and if used constantly, not a Hair will fall off or turn grey; clears the Scarf, and keeps the Head and Hair clean, and by using it regularly for a few months, will restore the Hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, which has been proved by hundreds. But to produce the desired effect, it must be used regularly for a few months.

Ladles will find Prince's Russia Oil preferable to any ether Oil for dressing their own, or false Hair, as it gives it a natural gloss, seftens and curls it. Gentlemen wearing powder ought to use it instead of pomatum—promotee eye-brows, whiskers, &c. The Original Proprietor has now so improved the Russia Oil that it will always be sweet and pleasant, and v. Ladles and the desired effect, it will always be sweet and pleasant, and v. #### FUNERAL PROCESSION OF HER MAJESTY.

On Tuesday morning the remains of her Majesty were removed from Brandenburgh House, Hammersmith, as officially arranged.

Mr. Balley, conductor of the funeral procession, preceded by 13 mourning coaches and six, a hearse and eight horses, with the various funeral habiliments and paraphernalia, arrived between five and six o'clock, at Brandenburgh House. A little after six, Dr. Lushington arrived Mr. Wilde, Mr. Brougham, Alderman Wood, Mr. Hobhouse, Major Gen. Wilson, Mr. Thomas, (acting for Mr. Mash of the Lord Chamberlnin's Office), Dr. Holland, Lieuts. Flynn and Hownam, Count Vassali, &c. were present in the State apartment. At six o'clock wrecisely, a squadron of the Oxford Blues. ment. At six o'clock precisely, a squadron of the Oxford Blues, under the command of Capt. Bouverie, arrived from their barracks, Regent's Park, rode up the avenue, and formed into line in front of the house. The crowd expressed considerable displeasure on the entrance of the soldiers, but they acted with great forbearance. The gates of Brandenburgh House were closed, and kept by a number of patrole, who prevented the entrance of persons unconnected with the solemn ceremony into the grounds.

The flag at Hammersmith church was holsted half-mast high, at five o'clock, when the tolling of the bell commenced. Minute guns were fired from the bank of the Thames opposite Brandenburgh House. It rained all the morning without cessation.

The London and Hammersmith Committees were on horseback the former headed by Mr. Hume and Mr. Hobhouse; the latter by Mr. Gomme, the churchwarden, (an undertaker) and Mr. Bowling; they had hat-bands, and white batons or wands in their hands, the ends covered with crape; and by the time they reached Hammer-smith, they were completely soaked with the rain. The carriages were admitted into the avenue leading from the lodge to the house Alderman Waithman arrived in his carriage, at seven o'clock, and Ex-Sheriff Parkins upon horseback!!

At half past seven o'clock, orders were issued by Mr. Bailey for every person to be in readiness to depart with the procession; and be gave directions to the Lord Chamberlain's officers to deliver up the body to the persons in waiting to carry it to the hearse. Sin George Nayler, in his state dress, stood at the foot of her Majesty's coffin; on his right was Mr. Woods, the Herald, holding the direc-tions from His Majesty's Government to remove the body. On each side of the entrance of the state apartment stood the officers of the Lord Chamberlain (Grooms of the Great Chamber), Messrs. Nost, Gardner, and Seymour, in plain dress black. On each side of the body were arranged, Mr. Brougham, Major-Gen. Wilson, (with a star on his left breast), Mr. Thomas, Dr. Holland, Mr. Bailey, Mr. Chittenden, the assistant conductor, Alderman Wood, Rev. Mr. Wood (her Majesty's Chaplain), Count Vassali, &c. On the body of her Majesty being demanded of the executors, Dr. Lushington spoke to the following effect :-

Spoke to the following effect:—

Sir George Nayler and Mr. Bastey—You know what has already taken place upon the subject of her late Majesty's interment; you know what has been the exprassed wish of her Majesty's executors upon the necessity of delay, for the purpere of making preparations for so long a journey; and also upon the digraceful conduct that has been persisted in by his Majesty's Government (in such direct opposition to the known will of her late Majesty), in forcing into the Luneral procession; great body of soldiers. I enter my soleun protest against the removal of her Majesty's body, in right of the legal power which is vested in me by her late Majesty, as executor. Proper arrangements for the funeral, and the long journey, and voyage by sea, have not been made; there has not been time for it; and I command that the body be not removed till the arrangements, suitable to the rank and dignity of the deceased, are made.

Mr. Balley—I have orders from Government to remove the body, which is now in the custody of the Lord Chamberlain: Limit do my duty. The body must be removed.

Dr. Lushington—Touch the body at your pent? You have no power to act contrary to the will of her Majesty's executors, and they do their duty by protesting against suck an usurpation.

Mr. Balley—You do not mean to use violence and prevent by force the protesting against suck an usurpation.

Mr. Balley—Vou do not mean to use violence, and prevent by force the removal of the body, I trust, Dr. Lushington?

Dr. Lushington—I shall use no violence myself.

Mr. Balley—nor recognise it in others?

Dr. Lushington—I shall neither assist in, nor recommend violence, nor shall. I join the procession in my official character of executor, but merely go as a private individual, to shew my respect for her Majesty.

Mr. Balley—Very well, Sir, I shall discharge my duty firmly, and I trust properly.

After the above conversation had passed the procession was ar-

This gentleman immediately went to Mr. Wilde, in the state apartment, who presented him with a written protest against the removal of her Majesty's body, and addressed Mr. Bailey, in very warm language, declaring the conduct pursued by His Majesty's Ministers and where was its destination?—Mr. Balley complained, that every impediment was thrown in the way of the persons, whose duty it was to attend at the removal of the body. He then took out of his pocket a paper, and read from it the route of the procession:—

"The funeral cavalcade to pass from the gate of Brandenburgh House, through Hammersmith, to turn round by Kensington Gravel-pits, near the Church, into the Uxbridge-read, to Bayswater, from thence to Tyburn Turnpike, down the Edgware-road, along the New-road to Islington, down the City-road, along Old-street, Mile-End, to Romford, &c. A squadron of the Oxford Blues, from Brandenburgh House to Romford, &c. A stated the procession; a squadron of the 4th Light Dragoons, from Romford to Chelmsford; another squadron of the same regiment, from Chelmsford to Colchester; another escort from Colchester to Harwich, where a guard of honour is in waiting.

Mr. Wilde declared that he would not go with the procession in the route mentioned by Mr. Bailey, nor should the body be taken, except by force; and when it stapped at the first stage, he should be there to exercise his legal right, as executor, to have the body re-moved according to his own will, and that of her late Majesty, moved according to his own will, and that of her late Majesty, without squadrons of soldiers. Mr. Bailey said, he would take upon himself the peril of removing the body.

In the carriage which was assigned to Mr. and Mrs. Wilde, Mr. Bailey placed several of the inferior members of her Majesty's Household.

The carriages of different gentlemen, the friends of her late Majesty, followed.

The Committees of Hammersmith and London, two and two.

The preparations being at length completed, the carriages began to receive their company, and fall into rank. These movements, it appears, commenced by Sir George Nayler removing the Crown and other emblems of royalty, which, with the assistance of Hieronymus and Mr. Austin, were placed in the coach in which Sir Geo. Nayler was to travel. The coffin was then placed in the hearse. The procession began to move from the house about eight o'clock, and by a quarter part eight the head of it had appropriated the church. The quarter past eight the head of it had approached the church. The Charity Children of Hammersmith preceded, strewing flowers, till their supply was exhausted, and then they ranged themselves on each side of the road. The procession moved through crowds of people, in a solemn manner, as far as Kensington, when an unexpected obstacle impeded its progress, two waggons were drawn across the street which led to the Gravel-pits, one of them loaded. The other was a military waggon. On the representations of some persons in the suite, the military waggon was speedily removed; but this was no sooner done, than another waggon, which was on the other side of the main street, was thrust into the gap.

It was half-past nine o'clock when the cavalcade reached Ken-sington Church, and would have turned up Church-street, but for this impediment, which half a dozen constables might with ease have removed. A fellow was seen to conduct his cart, with a large load of dung, most deliberately, and shoot it down in the middle of the street. Why had not the Magistrates of Kensington their constables out in attendance? It would have prevented much riot, and as it appeared in the sequel, the loss of many lives. From half past nine, however, till a quarter past eleven, the funeral remained stationary, the hearse having stopped directly in front of Cobbett's house, which was covered with black from top to bottom. It is stated that during this period, an express was sent to the Earl of Liverpool for orders. Meanwhile the moh (evidently under some superior direction) proceeded to break up the Gravel-pit-road, at some distance, in the direction which the procession was to take. At this time, too, the Ex-Sheriff Parkins was met gallopping with Gro other horsemen, through the Park towards Town. Most unfortunately, the attempt to pass down Church-street was abandoned. This was instantly cheered by the mob, as a victory, and a loud cry was set up of—"City, City!"—A strong detachment of Life Guards was set up of—"City, City."—A strong detacument of the continuous appeared, with the Police Magistrate, Sir Robert Baker, at their head. They were received with groans and hootings by the mob, who, though they had before abused the Oxford Blues, now suddenly changed their tone, and cried out, "Blues for ever," "No suddenly changed their tone, and cried out, "Blues for ever," "No Reds," "No Butchers," &c. &c. The soldiers, however, both Blues and Reds, bere the whole with most exemplary patience and steadiness, and seemed only intent on the quiet and humane discharge of their duty. When the procession reached Kensington Gate, Sir R. Baker directed it to enter the Park, meaning no doubt to proceed directly to Cumberland Gate: but the mob rushed tumultuously to the gate, shut it, and resisted all attempts to force it open. of the military had at one moment got half the gate open, but the mob assailing them very furiously with mud, stones, and sticks, Sir Robert Baker thought proper again to yield to them, and the funeral moved on towards Hyde Park-corner, the mob now testifying the greatest exultation, and still erying "City! City!" At this period, too, several of the horsemen in the procession rode up, and in the most insulting and menacing manner dared the Magistrate or the soldiery to take any other route than through the city. At twelve o'clock a strong sensation was excited in the neighbourhood of the Strand, in consequence of a person on horseback, riding along at a most furious pace, exclaiming, "The funeral will come this way!"

In consequence of this intimation, crowds began to move slowly towards Pall-mall, through which the remains of her Majesty were expected to come. A small detachment of the Life-Guards was placed at the end of Pall-mall, which was loudly assailed by the mob with cries of "The Queen! the murdered Queen!" and other tightent expressions and company the parameter was represented. violent expressions, and some blackguards were even so indecorous as to throw mud and missipes upon the soldiers, which the latter bore with great good temper. The funeral having soon after this-period reached Hyde Park-corner, found the gate leading into the Park barricadoed with market-carts. A short consultation then took place, the result of which was, that it proceeded a few paces forward, on which the mob, concluding that it would pass through the city, gave a loud and deep shout, and mud and missiles flew at the soldiery from all directions. A party of Dragoous was imme-diately sent round to Park-lane, with strict orders to remove the carts; in which service, we regret to say, many of them, as well as the mob, were badly wounded; the former with stones, and the latter with the swords of the soldiery. One dragoon had his eye dreadfully cut with a huge stone; and he would no doubt have killed the man with his sabre, had it not been for the interference of Sir R. Baker. The line of waggozs, however, was so very compact, that it was found impossible to remove them; and this circumstance being communicated to the Mugistrates, it was, after considerable stoppage, agreed to open Hyde Park-gate, and orders were given to admit the whole cavalcade, and to exclude the rabble; which was at length effected after considerable resistance and pelting on the part of the latter. No sooner were the gates thrown pen, than the hearse and after-part of the procession proceeded through the Park at a trot; the remainder of the carriages, now thrown into the rear, harried after to regain their places. The military also pushed on, and, having far outstripped the carriages, passed through Cumberland, gate. The mob no sooner observed this than they hastened to shut the gates, and a contest now began between them and the mob. Mud and stones were poured plentifully against the soldiers. Sheriff Parkins was also observed here at this period! In the violent conflict which took place at this spot the soldiers were compelled, in self-defence, to use their sabres, and some of them fired off their pistols; while, on the other hand, the mob threw down near 20 feet of the Park wall to furnish themselves with brick-bats. Many individuals were hurt on both sides, and we are sorry to say some lives were lost. Fortunately for humanity, a picquet of Foot Guards arrived at this moment; and the mob, understanding at the same time that the Riot Act had been read, dispersed in different directions, leaving the passage through Cumberland-gate clear.

In the confusion, part of the carriages went through Tyburn-turnpike, the rest proceeded rapidly down Cumberland-street, and the whole were re-united in the New Road, along which they proceeded without opposition, till they had nearly reached Tottenhamcourt-road, when they again found their direct progress impeded by a strong barricade of backney-coaches and carts overturned and lashed together. A large mob was collected at the place of stoppage with their former cry of "City! City!" Sir Robert Baker, who had all along proceeded on horsebark, with the civil and miliwho had all along proceeded on horsebark, with the civil and military power, seemed to consider that enough had been done in resisting the determination of the populace, and the point was therefore conceded! Accordingly, the procession turned down Tottenham-court-road, and passing through Broad-street, Drurylane, and the Strand, at length entered the city at Temple-bar, the mob shouting and crying out "Victory! Victory!" The procession now made its way, in most miserable plight, from the rain and dirt, along Fleet-street, St. Paul's Church-yard, Cheapside, Leadenhall-street, Algate, and Whitechapel. Its arrangement had also by this time become much confused; but the following is had also by this time become much confused; but the following is the detail of its numbers:-

At the head were 57 horsemen of the "Escort" party; then came a Trumpeter, 11 Horse Guards, 7 Horsemen, 5 Horse Guards, 4 Mutes on horseback, 2 Mourning Coaches, 16 Mutes on horseback, 8 Attendants in scarlet, with black soarves, 23 horsemen, 1 Horse Guard, the City Marshal's men, Mr. Wonther, one of the City Marshals; the Lord Mayor, the Hearse, about 50 Horse Guards, 1 Mourning Coach, the Queen's Coach, with the Crown and Cushion; 13 Horse Guards, 10 Mourning Coaches, in the fourth of which was Alderman Wood, Alderman Waithman's carriage with himself and son. Mr. Hobbouse and Major-Gen Wilson on horseback. himself and son, Mr. Hobbouse and Major-Gen. Wilson on horseback, followed by 73 other Horsemen; the rear was brought up by 26 Carriages of various sorts, including 3 Mourning Coaches, and the rest Gigs, Post-chaises, Hackney-coaches, &c.

The Lord Mayor met the procession, preceded by the Marshals and the City officers. Sheriff Williams was in his Lordship's carriage. Sheriff Waithnan was already in the cavalcade. It was joined also by two small bodies of tradesmen carrying banners. procession arrived at Mile-End at five o'clock, wher joined by a party of seamen; and previous to its arrival at Bow and Stratford many of the pedestrians and equestrians returned, among the latter may be meationed Major-General Wilson. Alderman Wood's carriage returned about six o'clock. The road from London to Ilford presented a scene which testified the grief of the people for departed Royalty, without at all entering into what might be termed party. We observed on the road flags, displayed from windows, bearing the inscription—"God rest her soul;" but we could see nothing which manifested any other feeling than that which is usually excited by the loss of a fellow-creature. The procession was not well attended into Romford, where it arrived at half-past seven o'clock. It was composed of 17 carriages (including the mourning-coaches) and a few pedestrians.—At eleven o'clock orders were given to a party of the 4th Light Dragoons to be in readiness to escort the body to Chelmsford, and they who took charge of the corpse on its arrival at Romford lined the road, and the cavalcade (unaccompanied by some part of her Majesty's suite, who remained at Romford) moved on towards Chelmsford.

The procession did not reach Chelmsford till half past four o'clock on Wednesday morning. The church had been lighted as soon as it became dark. Two large brass chandeliers dissipated the gloom of the body of the church. The pulpit was hung with rich black of the body of the church. The pulpit was hung with rich black velvet, having emblazoned in the front of it the royal arms, and those of the house of Brunswick, on separate skields. The chuncel was similarly hung with black; on either side were three similar though smaller escutcheons; in the intervals between which handsome embossed silver escutcheons shed a chastened light over that part of the edifice where all that remained of her, whose conduct had so lately agitated society to its centre, was to repose for a few short hours. The escort of troops which accompanied the body short bours. was relieved by the 4th Light Dragoons on reaching this town. The procession slowly drew up through the town, and halted at the great entrance of the church-yard, where it was received by the Rector (the Rev. Mr. Ward), and his Curate (Mr. Hutchinson). The coffin was slowly removed by the numerous attendants, from the bier to the chancel. On its entrance a solemn dirge was performed on the organ, and the body deposited at the foot of the altar. About a quarter before twelve, the body of her Majesty left Chelmsford for its final destination, escorted by a strong detachment of dragoons, and followed by a few private carriages, in addition to the mourning coaches.

On the arrival of the procession at Colchester, the body was removed to St. Peter's Church between eight and nine o'clock, and the carriages were placed in the Three Cups Inn yard, and the Market-place. At midnight, Dr. Lushington, Mr. Wilde, Major-General Wilson, Count Vassali, Lord Hood, and Alderman Wood, went into the Chancel, ordered a person to mount the coffin, and went into the Unancel, ordered a person to mount the coffin, and screw upon it a plate, with the inscription mentioned in one of the Queen's Codicils. Sir George Nayler, who officially directed all matters of ceremony, considered the proceeding highly indecent and improper, and advised Mr. Thomas to remove it. After some remonstrance, the church was cleared, and the offensive plate removed. Dr. Lushington and Mr. Wilde then delivered the following contest:

ing protest:—
"We, her Majesty's Executors, solemnly protest against this violation of her Majesty's commands previously communicated to the Earl of Liverpool, and not 'dissented to by him, about to be committed, by taking off the plate placed upon her coffia by the Executors, against their will.

(Signed)
"STEPHEN LUSHINGTON,
"THOMAS WILDE,
"Executors to her late Majesty."

Soon after day-break, the procession moved on for Harwich, where it arrived soon after eleven o'clock. It moved slowly down Windmill-bill, and through the town to the water's edge. A Guard of Honour composed of the 6th Veteran Battalion were drawn up in the Naval Yard to keep the Esplanade clear. The procession was met outside the town by Major Marston, at the head of four com-panies of the 86th regiment, which fell into the procession immedipanies of the sour regiment, water in the day present in the advanced guard of dragoons, and the Mayor on a white charger. The troops immediately reversed their arms, and the band commenced with melancholy effect, that fine piece of funeral music, The Dead March in Saul. The band on reaching funeral music, The Dead March in Saul. The band on reaching the water's edge, halted, the troops divided and lined both sides of the jetty, from the Esplanade down to the sea. The music retreated through the files of soldiery, and headed the procession, of which the most prominent feature was the Royal Hearse; this together with the Royal Carriages was closely surrounded by asquadron of the 4th, or Queen's Own Dragoons, commanded by Major Onslow. The coffin was taken out by the proper attendants, under the superintendance of Mr. Bailey. The Rev. Mr. ants, under the superintendance of Mr. Bailey. The Rev. Mr Winckfield, the Rector, and another Rev. Gentleman in full clerica habits, proceeded through the files of soldiery to the sea's edge.— The corners of the Esplanade were occupied by the Executors, Dr Lushington and Mr. Wilde, Mr. Brougham, Major-General Wilson, Mr. Hume, Sir G. Nayler, bearing the Crown of the Queens of Ragland on a black velvet cushion; immediately followed the musical cortege; immediately afterwards followed ten bearers carrying the superb coffin, in which her Majesty's remains were instant. This is a very marker and weights that it was found in rying the superb coffin, in which her Majesty's remains were inclosed. This is so very massive and weighty, that it was found impossible to avoid its being injured or torn in the velvet covering of the bottom of the coffin in lifting it in and out the hearse. Nothing could exceed the melancholy magnificence of the scene as the funeral group began to move. The first minute gun was fired from Landguard Fort—the report and its echoes rolled heavily over the intervening sea. The melancholy march rose as the signal was given to lower the flags on the station. The Dragoons that followed, the 56th, which lined the approach to the sea, lowered their ensigns to the ground. The shrill melancholy wailing of the trumpets was heard in the distance. The coffin reached the extremity of the platform about a quarter after twelve o'clock, and was lowered into the chief galley of the Glasgow frigate, under the superintendance of Col. Gosset, of the Engineers, who appeared in a magnificent uniform, decorated with several military orders. The Executors, Lord and Lady Hood, Mr. Brougham, Count Vassali, Mrs. Wilde, Lady Anne Hamilton, her Majesty's own maid, Mr. Austin, Major-Gen. Wilson, Mr. Hunne, and some others, with the domestics, followed immediately after the corpse. The sailors, habited in white shites and transverse with black neckelolaths roce in domestics, followed immediately after the corpse. The sailors, habited in white shirts and trowsers with black neckcloths, rose in their places, and with their faces turned to the coffin, on which the Crown was laid by Sir George Nayler and two attendants, were towed by an eight-cared man of war's barge a-head through the surge, accompanied by seven other boats of the squadron, which

The naval officers, in their respective barges, appeared in full uniform, in the naval cortege of the Queen's remains towards the gun-brigs Pioneer, Rosario, Wye, and Brisk, which lay between Harwich and the Ipswich shore. The Glasgow frigate, drawing too much water, remained outside, in the deep sea beyond the promontory formed by Landguard Fort. Her boat's crew was neatly the Michael contume in plaid towards, white shirts. dressed in the Highland costume, in plaid trowsers, white shirts, and tartan bonnets. As suon as the coffin was put on board the Pioneer, she hoisted the Royal flag; her sails were spread to the favouring gale which rapidly brought her alongside the Glasgow. Several who formed part of the procession, including two footmen, her Moorish servant, her own maid, her steward, and other attendants, are to proceed forward with the corpse.—Mr. Brougham, accompanied by Major-General Wilson, almost immediately left the

CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO HER MAJESTY'S FUNERAL.

Lady Anne Hamilton and Lady Hood to Mr. Hobhouse

The Ladies in attendance on her late Majesty the Queen feel it incumbent on them to state to Mr. Hobhouse, that having only received intimation this day, at four o'clock in the afternoon, of the mecessary preparations to make for the mourning, they find it impossible to complete the dresses requisite before Tuesday night.

Unless the time until Wednesday morning be allowed for the removal of her late Majesty's remains, Lady Anne Hamilton and Lady Hood will not have it in their power to attend the funeral.

Brandenburgh-House, Saturday night, Aug. 11.

Mr. Hobbouse wrote two notes in answer to the above. In the first he expressed his surprise that Dr. Lushington and Mr. Wilde had not communicated to the Ladies the anxiety of the King's servants to carry the wishes of the Queen into effect by an early fueral, as that communication had been made to those gentlemen so early as the morning after her Majesty's death; and in the second note Mr. H. states, that the order of removal for Tuesday is irrevocable; but the Ladies can, as in cases of a similar kind, if they are not prepared, follow after the funeral has proceeded on its route

Lady Hood to Lord Liverpool.

Brandenburgh-House, Aug. 12, 1821.

My Lend—Though I have not the bonour of your Lordship's acaintance, I cannot resist the impulse I feel to addres quaintance, I cannot resist the impulse I feel to address you, not as the Minister of this country, but I wish to speak to your heart, and I am not without the hope of inspiring you with sympathy on this most interesting and awful subject. I have often, my Lord, heard you highly spoken of. Some time ago I was acquainted with a fady who was either nearly allied to you or to the late Lady Liverpool; her environments of some fixed principles inspire me with hope pool; her sentiments of your fixed principles inspire me with hope that you will act up to that excellent monitor within every one's breast—to do as they would be done by. Why, my Lord, is her Majesty's faneral thus indecently hurried? Mr. Hobhouse replied to a note written by Lady Anne Hamilton and myself, because it was the Queen's request in her will. This is, I believe, the first and only request of her Majesty that ever has been complied with; and allow me, my Lord, to put another question to you. Why is there to be a guard of honour appointed to attend her funeral, which honour was never given to her during her life? If such is persisted in, I foresee much mischief, and I fear bloodshed. The people have ever been her Majesty's only friends; suffer them to pay last tribute of affection to their beloved and injured Queen without being interrupted by the military. I have been in the heat of attending her Majesty for the last five months through immense crowds, and not a single accident has ever occurred. Why, my Lord, is the corpse to be carried out of the direct road, to disappoint the people? For heaven's sake revoke this sentence; the evil of it expeople? For heaven's sake revoke this sentence; the evil of it exceeds all calculation. I have, my Lord, been the companion of the Queen for the last five months. My previous knowledge of her good and estimable qualities alone induced me to accept the situation, and from seeing her deserted by all former associates and friends; and I can with truth assure you, that not even her bitterest enemy could censure her Majesty's conduct; and her death-bed, my Lord, that awful moment to which we are all approaching, is an example to all living; she died in peace, I do believe, with all the world; and during her illness frequently said, "Je ne sais si en the world; and during her illness frequently said, " Je ne sais si en mourant j'aurai à souffrir des douleurs physiques, mais je puis vous assurer, que je quitterai la vie sans regret." And she desired her semale attendant Brunette to assure her sister Demont that she her female attendant Brunette to assure her sister Demont that she had forgiven her.—I have one more appeal to make to your Lordship; und, first, I will ask you why the funeral of the Queen of England should be so much more hurried than that for your Lordship's late wife? That event proves your Lordship's opinion the subject—and the Queen will not have been dead a week till after ten o'clock next Tuesday night; therefore, I trust your heart will dictate the same degree of outward respect, if not love for your Queen; and now, my Lord, I have only to say, that I have been survised at the interruption to the tranquillity of this house. been surprised at the interruption to the tranquillity of this house, by a show of mourning, by having a part of this house hung with black, which cannot be completed before Monday night, if so soon, and the proceeding has only been interrupted this day, Sunday, du and the proceeding has only been interrupted this day, Sunday, dirring the time her Majesty's Domestic Chaplain performed the Church Service. I trust, my Lord, you will not order her Majesty's funeral before Wednesday or Thursday next.—I will only add, my Lord, that every word of this letter is dictated by myself, and that I have set down nought in malice; for my late beloved Mistress, the Queen, set me a better example, but my conscience will not allow me to continue silent, and entreat that your Lordship will grant that the requests contained in this letter, and in so doing he assured. all the requests contained in this letter, and in so doing be assured I shall ever feel the highest veneration and esteem, permit me to add affection, for your Lordship, and believe me, my Lord, your humble servant,

JANE HOOD.

To the Right Hon. the Earl of Liverpool, Coombe Wood.

Lord Liverpool's Reply to Lady Hood.

Coombe Wood, Aug. 12, 1921.

MADAM,—I have this moment had the bonour of receiving your Ladyship's letter. I think it right to observe, in answer to it, that when her late Majesty's executors communicated to me copies of her last will on Wednesday last, by which it appeared that her Maperty desired that three days after her death her body should be sent to Brunswick for interment, I selt it to be my duty to give directions, in the King's absence, that her Majesty's intentions in this respect might be carried into effect with as little delay as possible, and I lost no time in laying before the King the directions which had been issued for this purpose. I have since received his Majesty's commands to continue to act in conformity to the orders first given. I had directed that the funeral should proceed from Brandenburgh-House to-morrow morning; but, upon a representation which I received from Dr. Lushington yesterday, it was agreed to put off the departure till Tuesday, and I feel that I should be now acting in direct contradiction to the King's commands, as well as contrary to the intentions of her late Majesty, if I was a party to any farther

I am sorry it is not in my power to return a more satisfactory answer to your Ladyship's letter, but I have been ready, from the beginning, to communicate with her Majesty's executors on the arrangements necessary to be made on this melancholy occasion and it has been the anxious desire of the King and his Government that every thing should be conducted in the most becoming, or-derly, and decent manner. I have the bosour to be, Madam, you Ladyship's obedient humble servant, LIVERPOOL.

Viscountess Hood to the Earl of Liverpool.

Wiscountess Hood to the Earl of Liverpool.

My Lord,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's letter, and though certainly not according with my wishes, yet please to accept my thanks for the promptness of your reply. But, my Lord, there is a material part of my letter which you have not answered, (my question)— Why is a Guard of Honour appointed to attend her Majesty's funeral? I can venture to pronounce, if there are no soldiers, there will not be any disposition to tumult; therefore I do most earnesdy pray your Lordship to give up the idea of her Majesty's remains having any other guard than that of the people. They were to her Majesty, during her life, her most welcome attendants; and surely, if your Lordship is so tenacious in strictly adhering to her Majesty's request in her Will, you cannot fail being equally no in complying with what I am sure would be strictly adhering to her Majesty's request in her will, you cannot fail being equally so in complying with what I am sure would be her Majesty's wish, was she living to speak—as it was ever her earnest desire to have no soldiers, but to be attended and guarded solely by the hearts of her people. In their love she ever confided; and surely, my Lord, you will not, at this awfulmoment of her interment, act so decidedly contrary to her inclination.

I omitted to mention, in my last letter to your Lordship, that the person sent by Government for nowiding the mourning for her Ma-person sent by Government for providing the mourning for her Ma-jesty's servants, did not arrive in Brandenburgh-house till yesterday noon; consequently, neither Lady Anne Hamilton, Lord Hood, nor myself, and several other Gentlemen, could think it requisite to be in such haste to order their mourning; and until Dr. Lushington and Mr. Wilde arrived at Brandenburgh-house late yesterday evening, we could not form an idea of the funeral being fixed for so early a day. I must again repeat, that on no occasion whatever has the Go-I must again repeat, that on no occasion whatever has the usersemment ever ordered the troops to attend her Majesty; I trust, therefore, your Lordship will not think of such a measure upon the occasion of her Majesty's funeral; and I also conclude, from your Lordship's not replying to that part of my letter respecting her Majesty's removal, that the procession will be ordered to remove in the direct and nearest road through the City of Loodon; as I am informed that the Lord Mayor and the Corporation of Bondon intend meeting the funeral procession at Temple-bar; and surely your Lordship will not offer an insult to so ancient and respectable a body, who have each shown their attachment to the Royal Family. body, who have ever shewn their attachment to the Royal Family. body, who have ever shewn their attachment to the royal radiity. I flatter myself your Lordship will forgive my thus troubling you, and impute it to my zeal and attachment to my much-loved and departed Queez; and I beg to subscribe myself your Lordship's humble servant,

ANSWER.

Coombe Wood, Sunday Night, Aug. 12. MADAM-I have had the honour of receiving your Ladyship's second letter, and I must only repeat, that it is my duty to obey the King's commands as to the arrangements to be made for her Majesty's funeral (whatever these arrangements may be, have been, or will be, duly communicated from the Secretary of State's office to her Majesty's Executors); and I am under the necessity of adding, that no discussion can take place with any other persons on the subject. I have the honour to be, Madam, your ladyship's most phedient humble appears. obedient humble servant.

The Viscountess Hood

Sunday last, Master Charles Cook, whilst amusing himself gathering some cherries off one of the trees in his father's garden at Harmondsworth, near Hounslow-heath, unfortunately pitched headforemost from the tree, and was so dreadfully injured that he died shortly afterwards.

We think it but justice to insert the following letter, which was unavoidably delayed last week, and to say that no such word as Editor appeared in the article alluded to.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I am sorry that it has pleased you to exhibit me (who never had an opportunity of giving you personal, nor ever took one of making political aggression upon you; and, by the way, whose political feeling is much of the same character professed by your paper,) in a point of view calculated to make me appear ridiculous, and at the same time, to do a studied mischief to me, both as a printer, and a Magistrate.

In the prosecution of the Queen, I never was her advocate, nor, in any instance, did I traverse out of the way of a fair and impartial report of the proceedings. The friends, in this country, of that anarchical principle, which seems unluckily to have pervaded her Majesty's councils, are not my

The disposition which you have made of me in her Majesty's pageant would therefore appear monstrously unjustifiable, but that, on second reading, I perceive the name immediately following "the Editor (I am the proprietor also) of the Clonmel Herald, with his Tabard," is that of Lady Blessington, who is the daughter of a person that some years since published a paper in this town called the Cloumel Gazette, but which I silenced fourteen years ago.

I am not quickly alive to trifling offences. Were I in any other situation, but that in which I owe a sense of obligation to His Majesty's Government, I should have laughed at the thing as a bagatelle, and not have troubled you.—I am, S vour obedient servant, GEO. GRACE.

At the Derby Assizes, on Tuesday, A. and F. Brittlebank, and Spencer, the second to Mr. W. Brittlebank, charged with the murder of Mr. Cuddie, were put upon their trial. The evidence, upon the charge, was substantially the same as has already been detailed: such as, the intimacy of the deceased with the sister of the prisuch as, the intimacy of the deceased with the sister of the prisoner—the subsequent duel in the garden, and the declaration of the deceased, as to the fairness of it when questioned. The prisoners stated, that they had rendered every assistance to Mr. Cuddie, on his being wounded. Brittlebank, who fived the fatal shot, had not surrendered to take his trial. A vast number of witnesses gave the prisoners an excellent character; and the Jury, who were out for nearly an hour, returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

The little Work which has lately appeared under the title of Practical Economy; or the Application of Modern Discoveries to the Purposes of Domestic Life, will be found equally useful to those who are wise enough to enter into the practice of the rules which it lays down, and entertaining to others, who may merely wish to amuse themselves with its theories. It professes to teach economy in every department of domestic life; and so it does; but on such an agreeable plan, that it is sure to meet with willing pupils. "To enjoy is to obey" says the rational religionist; and, in the same manner, the object of the rational economist is to procure the greatest number of innocent gratifications at the least possible expense. "To save," as the author justly observes in his preface, " is one thing; to economise is another. Absolutely to avoid expense is to preclude enjoyment; but to economize expenditure is to unite enjoyment with prudence."

Under this impression, then, the reader may safely suffer himself to be conducted by the author of this ingenious manual through all its divisions, comprising a variety of new and useful information, calculated at once to increase our comforts, and diminish our expenses.

The Numbers of the New Monthly Magazine, (New Series) have been just reprinted in America. The Publishers introduce them with the following observations:—

"If we might assume so far as to give our opinion, we should express a hape, that from its miscellaneous and attractive character, this Magazine will be more generally read than either of the celebrated Quarterly Journals which sway the sceptre over the litera-ture and politics of Great Britain. A very large class of readers, who have neither time nor inclination to study the profound philosophical and political disquisitions of the Edinburgh and Quarterly, sophical and political disquisitions of the Lainburga and Quarterity, would turn with pleasure and advantage to the sprightly essays, the rational poetry, the entertaining biography, and the vigorous criticism of the New Monthly.

"To American women, it is confidently believed that it will be an acceptable acquisition, and it is offered to them without hesitation, as at a time when some of the most popular authors of the age have so far forgotten their duty, and mistaken their interest, as a load thair influence against the cause of virtue—the writers for to lend their influence against the cause of virtue—the writers for this Magazine have found the art of being easy and cheerful without licentiousness, and have excited the imagination without corrupting the heart. That such will be its character in future no other assection. rance need be given, than the name of the Author of the Please of Hope, and Gertrade of Wyoming."

The very curious " Memoirs of a Man of Fashion," just got lished, are anonymously dedicated to a certain Lord, but what noble Lord is entitled to this honour has not yet been satisfactorily ascertained; report has variously ascribed it, first, to the Date of -e, then to Lord F--e, and lastly, to Lord P--t.

Lord Nugent has resigned his command in the Ayleshory squadron of Bucks Yeoma'ary, and has addressed a letter to the squadron, in consequence, of the thanks of the Government being given to the 2d regiment of Bucks Yeomany, who attended the Coronation, in whach he says, "I resign, feeling it to be unbecoming in me eider to accept any portion of praise which may belong to such services, or by disolaiming it, to interfere in any respect with that unanimity of sentiment which ought always to prevail amongst the Yeomany of the County,"

BULL. JOHN

LONDON, August 19.

OUR readers will perceive that his gracious MAJESTY has arrived in DUBLIN. Privately as his landing was effected, he could not be concealed from the watchful eyes of his subjects.

Nothing can be more gratifying to every loyal heart than the enthusiasm which has hailed and followed his MAJESTY on his progress to IRELAND—the rapture with which he was received on his debarkation—the joy so naturally, so warmly, so unaffectedly evinced at his appearance—the anxiety to see-to have him in their country,-all shew the real state of the affections of the people.

It was a proud day for IRELAND,—the anniversary of his birth too. There was a friendliness, a cordiality, a frankness and condescension in his MAJESTY'S manner, that realised all the hopes and anticipations of those who, for the first time in their lives, beheld him; and on this occasion, where, from the absence of pomp and ceremony, and the usual official guards of parade, (with which Kings of necessity, on state occasions, are surrounded), the people could gain access to him, the anxiety to touch his person was gratified in a manner not to be forgotten—his MAJESTY shook hands with all around him, and, with an emphasis which has fixed the words in the hearts of those who heard them, pronounced a blessing on their native country.

We refer our readers to the detailed accounts from Ireland for particulars, which we are sure will be read with the liveliest interest.

THE public will find in our columns the details of every thing connected with the Queen's funeral.

Any thing more degrading, more disgraceful, or more ludicrous, we have seldom met with; it seems as if the scum and rabble by whom the wretched woman was ruined during her life, had resolved that the last scene of the farce they have been acting for the last twelve months, should be the most striking part of the performance.

It will be observed, that her Majesty makes a will, in which she desires to be removed in three days after her demise; etiquette, however, demanding that the KING's acquiescence to this wish should be obtained, messengers are dispatched, and with the greatest exertions it is found impossible to comply with her MAJESTY's directions to the letter, and seven days inevitably are consumed before the removal can take place.

One certainly could not be prepared to imagine that the Queen's friends would have taken umbrage at the endeavour to obey as nearly as possible her last injunctions. But so it is.

LADY HOOD and LADY ANNE HAMILTON, upon hearing the day named for the funeral, wrote to the Minister a serious and official letter, saying, that they " found it impossible to complete the dresses requisite before Tuesday night."

Had these feolish women (for absolute fools they must be to make such an exposure of the nature of their woe,) been employed in getting up a ballet at Naples, or fitting themselves for the Royal Carnival, to which they had promised themselves that very evening the pleasure of going, we could have thought the want of dresses and decorations might have been important; but when we recollect that they speak of mourning, and of following a Royal Mistress to the grave, we cannot but sneer when we think by what hollow, shallow, stupid people the QUEEN has been surrounded.

Of LADY HOOD, it becomes our duty to speak in terms a little stronger;—that she is a fool is only her misfortune, (and why JENNY WHEELER should be privileged or exempt from the common failings of nature we do not know,) but she is old enough, and has lived in the world long enough to know that there is a difference between St. Giles's and St. James's, and that the language and conduct of fishwomen and chimney sweepers, are as generally excluded from decent society as their persons.

If she ever did know this, she has by her association with the hangers-on of BRANDENBURGH House forgotten it. In her letter to LORD LIVERPOOL she alludes to her knowledge of a "Lady with whom she was acquainted, who was either related to his Lordship or the late LADY LIVER-POOL." This, she mentions to get something like respectability back to her, but the use she makes of her former acquaintance is to tell LORD LIVERPOOL, that her anonymous friend admired him, and therefore, she, LADY HOOD, aving heard such a good cl aracter of his Lordship, wonders why, although it was the Queen's request, his Lordship " should so indecently hurry the funeral, because it is the first and only request of her Majesty's that ever was com-

This to us is not so surprising, inasmuch as it was the first reasonable request we remember her Majesty ever to have made; and even had it been unreasonable, it was a deathbed request, and every body knows that the most absurd wishes are, in such cases, always gratified.

The papers tell us, that BUONAPARTE desired to have a silver fork, spoon, and plate, buried with him; and Old DEVAYNES, the present MRS. WILDE'S former master, and subsequent husband, desired to have a bottle of his best Madeira put under his head, in his coffin. We are last wishes were to have been shewn, the yellings of her faction would have been loud and long.

But we do not find fault with LADY HOOD's zeal; we know what five hundred pounds are worth, in minds like her Ladyship's, and it is quite right that she should make a little stir for her money; but there is an allusion in her letter to the EARL of LIVERPOOL, so grovelling, so heartless, so unlady-like, so unfeminine, that we could not have believed, that even a friend and associate of QUEEN CARO. LINE's could have made it, did it not stand recorded.

She asks the widowed husband of a virtuous, excellent, and exemplary weman. "Why he kept her remains so long as he did?"—The Billingsgate spirit of this question—this "how would you like it yourself" tone, we duly appreciate, and laugh at; but the senseless, shameless outrage upon the feelings of one of the most amiable men in the country, and the best of husbands, deserves to be held up to public execration.

LORD LIVERPOOL was fulfilling the orders of Government, as a public functionary, and moreover, en. deavouring to meet the QUEEN's dying request, and therefore he is to be upbraided with his tenderness to an attached and excellent wife, and to have the memory of her who lived in his heart, and died in his arms, brought into competition with that of the wretched QUERN CAROLINE, and to be reproached with his respect for her. -We never heard of anything so shameful—so brutal.

The subsequent proceedings are marked with the same spirit of determined discontent and malignity towards every thing that is just and proper, which has characterized the whole of the QUEEN'S career since her return to England; nay, the same personages were the chief performers, Hobhouse, Wilson, Brougham, &c. within doors, and the dirty-shirt Committee without.

The first trick they played, was locking up the QUEBN's body in a room by itself, and hiding the key !- this was a charming ruse of that frisky dear LADY ANNE HAMILTON, " such a capital scheme to hoax the LORD CHAMBERLAIN's people."-Is it not dreadful ?-" MR. THOMAS, after asking every body for the key, was obliged to break open the door to get at the body."-It really is ridiculous enough to be terrific !

Then the day of the funeral, when all the thieves at large, and all the prostitutes who were disengaged, had congregated to see the " last of her," as they called it, DOCTOR LUSHINGTON, the bridegroom—the benedicksweet fellow-declared nobody should take away the body.

The consequence of disappointing the people, never was considered, and the undertaker was told to "touch the body at his peril;" which threat MR. BAILEY knew how to appreciate, and ordered his men to carry off the corpse. BROUGHAM did not speak, but his nose hitched and twitched, and he seemed to be thinking more of the loss of his silk gown than anything else.

The procession moved, and during the day the most disgraceful conduct was pursued by the rabble, who checked the progress of the mournful train, in all directions, till they succeeded in getting it through Broad St. Giler's, and down Drury Lane!

But will it be believed that the mob of London are such besotted beasts as to have cheered the procession loudly as it passed, and cried, "Queen for ever" by the side of the corpse? there never was so absurd a thing seen; but as we wish to be quite impartial, we will quote the OLD TIMES -verbatim.

"We observed amongst those grateful people, the Carpenten, " the Brass Founders, the Morocco Leather Dressers, Coopers, &c. "They marched in ranks with banners and emblems of their pro-"fession—they carried banners—one large banner white, with " black letters, had the following inscription :- " Power of Public "Opinion'—another had, 'United we Stand'—another, 'Spanish "LEATHER DRESSERS!!!' 'Justice will Triumph'-another, " Friends of Humanity!""

This is a cockney's picture of something very awful.

THE TIMES is rather angry with Ministers, and, we believe, the KING does not quite escape because it was a very wet day; they subsequently find out, however, that " Nature wept." We should think the persons composing the procession must have been somewhat annoyed by her tears. WILSON, who wore a star, (we suppose of St. Bergami,) and Dr. Hume and Hobhouse, were not to be recognised through the mud with which they were literally covered; and such were the crowd and confusion, that these illustrious patriots never discovered that they had been, at all favourable opportunities, pelted by the people!

The mob moved along one living mass of dirt, and the green, others in dirty brown coats, excited nothing but the sneers of the peaceable inhabitants through whose neighbourhood they dragged the corpse.

That goose, LORD HOOD, rode in the first ceach after the hearse alone, having dubbed himself her Majesty's Chamberlain for the day.

In the next came those interesting females, LADY HOOD and LADY ANNE HAMILTON.

In the next, the Bride and Bridegroom, Doctor LUSH-INGTON and his LADY, going to spend the Honey Moon!!!

The next was prepared for JONATHAN WILDE and his WIFE, but they shued.

The next contained WOOD and VASSALI, but the Ladies of the Alderman's family not having had any thing left quite sure that, if any thing like inattention to the Queen's them by her late Majesty, declined being of the party.

In the next coach was (will those who know what we mean, believe it,) CAPTAIN HESSE!!!—a son of MAJOR-GENERAL WILSON, WOOD'S son, and poor WILLIAM

Then followed HOWNAM and FLYNN.

And then other carriages with less important personages. The procession was lengthened by many hackneycoaches, and a number of GIGS filled with people, who had taken the cockney mode of keeping out the wet. And at the place where we saw the procession, which was near Temple Bar, the last carriage of the line, was a MUD CART!

Uron the whole, whether we take into consideration the conduct of the principals or their adherents, the ladies or the executors, the gentlemen or the mob, we can safely venture to pronounce, that a more disgusting spectacle never was presented to the eyes of London. Even those who believed that something like respectability was attached to her MAJESTY'S name, saw the animals who followed her to the grave, and were undeceived.

At Cumberland-gate, after a most daring attack on the soldiers, a fellow threw a large stone at the Life-Guards, and cut the head and eye of one severely; the man drew his pistol and shot the assailant through the heart: and this the TIMES makes a great card of-measures out some of his Manchester stuff for us, and says-(only mark)-says this :- (for we love to quote him.)-

"The populace, in Oxford-road, and at Tyburn Gate, appeared " in the highest degree exasperated against the military, whom they " loaded with the bitterest execrations; some cried, "They have " shot A MAN, and killed him; others wished to draw the attention " of the horsemen in the funeral train to the blood of the unfortu-" nate sufferers in the conflict, which stained the ground in many

Let it be remembered that a man was shot—let it be remembered that three or four were wounded-let it be remembered that nearly a hundred thousand people moved over the pavement after the affair, and that it was pouring torrents of rain-and then let those who choose believe that the marks of blood ever could have been seen, or ever were seen on the ground; particularly as, by the evidence before the Coroner, we find it sworn to, that the man who was shot, bled inwardly, and that no blood issued from the wound.

The TIMES says, that the most marked respect was shewn to the hearse, and that every body uncovered themselves as it passed. No such mark of attention was shewn to the hearse.—The Times says "there was not a dry eye in any of the streets through which the procession passed." We admit that to be the fact-for the weather was so wet, that nothing in the open air could be kept dry for one minute; but at the windows of the houses, we beheld no tears, we heard no sighs; indeed, the most agitated spectator of the affair that we happened to see, was a fat bullock, looking out of a garrett window, in Whitechapel.

In order to corroborate the accounts of the woe of the people which are given in the Times, we quote from the Chronicle an account of the singular occurrence we have just alluded to:-

"A curious circumstance occurred in Whitechapel on Tuesday evening, at the time the Queen's funeral was passing. A bullock ran from a drove, into the entry of a baker's shop, went up two pair of stairs, and lay down upon the landing-place. Some drovers followed him up, and with ropes dragged him down; but just as he got to the bottom of the stairs he broke loose, and ran up stairs into the garret. The window being open, he put his head out, and aptred to be looking at the funeral procession, which was then passing the end of the street, TO THE NO SMALL DIVERSION OF THE MOB, his head projecting over the parapet. He was at last got down; and though he was a large beast, and the stairs very marrow, very little damage was done.

But not with LONDON, according to the TIMES, did the testimonials of affection for departed virtue cease; every where along the road "the hedges were peopled"-men hung like crab-apples from the trees-all the inhabitants were up all night, and every body was dying with grief.

It will be seen that the sorrow en masse was intense, and continued to the water's edge; but when we come to look for individuals, we find their woe wear off a little. Lady ANNE HAMILTON, and that gentle, elegant, forbearing, mild creature, Lady Hood, knocked up at Romford, and swore they would not go on till they had a comfortable meal; and preferring, as it was natural they should, a jolly dinner to following the QUEEN, (who could give them nothing more, and had not given them too much as it was),

they allowed her sacred remains to go on without them.

DOCTOR LUSHINGTON, having his bride with him, trarrived at Colchester 1 Wednesday night; and here the TIMES says that Dr. LUSHINGTON argued against proceeding, as (naturally enough) he and his wrife wanted to go to bed! There is a great deal of ranceal stuff written in the TIMES about this, and a good deal of abuse levelled at Mr. BAILEY, (whose conduct throughout has been most praiseworthy and firm), so that one would suppose that Mr. BAILEY enforced, as he was empowered to do, the immediate moving of the body; but after all the trash the Cockney TIMES gives us, we find that, while the party were enjoying themselves at supper, MR. BAILEY entered and said—what?—" that if they "preferred staying at Colchester for the night, he had no "firticular objection." And so, after all the trash and stuff the TIMES talks of indecent haste, &c. &c. the ladies had their numb in comfort and DR and MR. I received had their punch in comfort, and DR. and MRs. LUBH-

INGTON got a comfortable night's rest.

JONATHAN WILDE and the Bridegroom, however, pre-graved on it, and stuck it on the coffin; having achieved which indecency they retired, elated with their success

It was, of course, removed in the morning, and as it was placed on the coffin only to be taken off, JONATHAN and the Bridegroom carried their point.

It will be seen that the procession reached Harwich at half-past eleven the following day; and here the correspondent of the TIMES abuses the procession because nobody attended it. Of course—the London Radicals could not reach Harwich-a cockney cannot live out of his smoke, and therefore the body was unattended. But we will quote the TIMES a little—have him his own way.

"The Royal arms were still left upon the hearse, but all the

" escutcheons (if there ever had been any) were removed from the borses."

This, we stop to observe, is the invariable custom when funerals have to travel."

No attendance of Heralds or Marshal's men."—" Then came "her Majesty's own carriage, drawn by six horses, containing Sir "George Nuyler (Clarencieux King at Arms) and his companion" (a Herald.)

This is all in one paragraph:—to be sure, we do not expect a cockney like the Times to know that a King at Arms and a Herald are of the same genus; but we should have thought, when their correspondents were packing off intelligence, they would have endeavoured to have spoken truth upon subjects where falsehood is so easily detectable, in order to gain something like credit for the lies they invent, which, though equally gross, are not quite so plain and palpable.

To follow the TIMES in its assertions, and controvert them paragraph by paragraph, would take up too much space in our Paper; suffice it to say, that the whole mass of that which assumes to be intelligence, in that journal, is false from beginning to end. And as they have, whenever the disgusting subject has been canvassed during the Queen's life, misrepresented, mis-stated, and misinter-preted every thing that has occurred; so, in the conclusion, they have maintained the character for impudence and mendacity, which, in her desperate cause, they have established to themselves; and in giving a detail of the sighs, and groans, and tears which followed her to the grave, they only indulge in the same system of lying as they adopted when they talked of her virtues, her goodness, and her greatness while she lived.

It is a singular fact, that in the heat of their zeal and energy, JONATHAN WILDE and the Bridegroom LUSHINGTON have lost their law and their grammar—an executor has no right but after probate of the will, nor then over any thing that is not bequeathable; and Mr. WILDE and Dr. LUSHINGTON have no more to do with the Queen's corpse than we have.

That they act nonsensically is evident; but not content with this, they write stuff that even WAITHMAN or WOOD would be ashamed of; they talk of "Her Majesty's commands "previously communicated to the EARL OF LIVERPOOL, and not dissented to by him."—What dunces! We have found out by this specimen who it was who insisted upon it that her Majesty should be " crowned As Monday."

Her Majesty's Italian property is thus disposed of-the house at Como is mortgaged to its full value to CARLINI the banker; the Barona is given to BERGAMI; and the VILLA VITTORIA, at PESARO, to his Excellency's daughter!

The TIMES has got into so inveterate a habit of lying, that it really cannot help it.—We are told in that Paper that every indignity was offered to her Majesty's remains, and yet we have the following account of the state cabin of the Glasgow, prepared for their reception:-

STATE CABIN.—GLASGOW FRIGATE.—We were allowed the favour of taking a view of the State Cabin, into which the coffin, containing the Queen's remains, was conveyed on its arrival on board. It taining the Queen's remains, was conveyed on its arrival on board. It had been previously prepared by a number of workmen from the King's upholsterers. The whole interior of the cabin was entirely covered with black cloth. A bier about four feet high was raised under a canopy about six feet long and four feet wide, edged with black fringe, and ornamented with tassels. The corpse was placed on the bier, covered with the pall, and the crown and cushion placed on the pall. The walls were decorated with sconces and candelabras with was candles. On each side of the coffin were four escutcheons, and a hatchment was ulaced arginit the head of the coffin were think was the way to be such as the coffin were four escutcheons. hatchment was placed against the head of the coffin, upon which were placed the Royal Arms emblazoned. On each side of the corpse were three massive silver state candlesticks six feet high, with long and thick wax tapers. There were seven black trestles on each side the apartment, which were sat upon by the officers of the Lord Chamberlain's department, as the body lay in state. The apartment had an imposing effect. Sir George Nayler has left his state habiliments in England, as it would not be proper for him to wear them in a foreign country.

But strange to say, the lying system is pursued here,—not only does the paragraph give the lie to its other assertions by what it says—but it lies within itself.

"On each side the corpse were three massive silver state candlesticks, six feet high, with long and thick wax tapers."

The Glasgow frigate is about seven feet high between

PRINCE LEOPOLD AND SIR ROBERT GARDINER.

For those who enjoy military literature in a civil way we have a treat. We have received the following letter from Sir R. Gardiner, K.C.B. which we insert; reserving to ourselves We have received the following letter from Sir to make a few comments :-

"Claremont, August 14, 1821. "Sir Robert Gardiner wishes to correct a graph be happens to have read in vesterday's JOHN BULL. (No. 35): it is evidently kindly meant; but if JOHN BULL is anxious to watch over, and record to the world, the movements and private life of the Prince Leopold, he should draw his information from authentic sources; and Sir Robert Gardiner, in his Royal Highness's absence, offers his own services; or, he is convinced, any other member in his Royal Highness's family, will be happy to afford all the inform ation he can require.

auon he can require.

"In the present case, the Prince certainly quitted England immediately after the Coronation; but it was by His Majesty's gracious permission, and having previously been honoured with a private audience, expressly for the purpose of taking leave of His Majesty.

"Secondly, the Prince Leopold did not go abroad, as John Bull states, for the purpose of visiting a "sick sister;" nor had his Royal Highness received any intimation of a sister's illness.

"Thistily the Prince Leopold is not at Paris as Leon Rule."

"Thirdly, the Prince Leopold is sot at Paris, as JOHN BULL states, amid "the gaisties of the Boulevards," but at Coburg, on a visit to his Royal Highness's mother, the Dowager Duchess."

Now, with respect to our wishing to watch over and report viously produced a ceffin-plate with a Radical LIE en- upon PRINCE LEOPOLD'S private life, we have no such and delivered to the Purser of that ship.

wish. The life of a foreigner, living in England, can have little to interest either us or our readers, but as one of our songs says—Prince Leopold is really "A puppett whom we uphold,

"Neither for use nor for shew;

and his PUBLIC conduct we have a right to canvas, and we will.—We pay him fifty thousand a year in his public character, and therefore he is subject to public remark

SIR ROBERT GARDINER evidently stands relatively to PRINCE LEOPOLD as ALDERMAN WOOD did to the QUEEN-he flourishes about outside, but knows nothing of that which is going on within his master's house.

We know as well as SIR ROBERT GARDINER that

PRINCE LEOPOLD had a private audience, and took leave of the KING—but what then?—it was adding hypocrisy to disrespect.—But if, as SIR ROBERT GARDINER says-Secondly, he did not go to visit a sick sister, nor had ever received any intimation of a sister's illness, we can only see his going in a more unfavourable point of view than we ever did before. The fraternal affection, we said he expressed, seemed to us a good excuse; which, if he had not, we really do not see, considering that His Serene Royal Highness holds the largest sinecure in the world, what business else could have superseded the respect he OUGHT to have shewn to HIS MAJESTY.

But, far from doubting the word of PRINCE LEOPOLD, does SIR ROBERT GARDINER happen to know what excuse his Serene Royal Highness actually did make at his private audience? We doubt whether this K.C.B. will get thanked for his meddling.

But THIRDLY, Sir Robert says, "PRINCE LEOPOLD is not at Paris, but at Coburg on a visit to his Royal Highness's mother, the Duchess Dowager."

We said he was at Paris, in our paper last Sunday, when last heard of him. SIR ROBERT writes on the Tuesday following, and knowing how he moves says, and very shrewdly says, "he is not at Paris;" but that does not deny that from Saturday the 21st of last month up to a very recent date he was at Paris; nay, we catch somebody out even as it is, for the Morning Chronicle of Friday says in its Foreign news. that on the very identical day, Tuesday last, (THE DATE of SIRROBERT GARDINER'S letter to us,) PRINCE LEOPOLD was to dine with the KING OF FRANCE at Paris.

We do not certainly quote the Chronicle as better authority than the Equerry, but we believe the Paris Papers; and we are really quite sorry, that SIR ROBERT GARDINER should have taken the trouble to be satirical only to shew that he not only does not know what his Royal Master did when he was in England, but that he does not know where he is when he is out of it.

We should add that with the liberality which marks every thing done at CLAREMONT, SIR ROBERT GARDINER enclosed (in order to obtain our countenance and favour,)—— Ten shillings and sixpence!!—We have returned this sum, not willing to rob his Serene Royal Highness of even an hundred thousandth part of his hardly earned income, and aware, that in the present cheapness of fruit, many gallons must be sold to the green grocer at KINGSTON, to make up so heavy a deficiency in his Royal Highness's receipts; for be it known to our readers that his Serene Royal Highness disposes at an easy rate of the gooseberries of CLAREMONT, to defray his current expences!!!

TO JOHN BULL.

A ridiculous report has got abroad this morning that the Blues have refused to relieve the Life Guards at White Hall to-day, from some hostile feeling arising out of the events of Tuesday last. From this supposed disagreement, the Radical friends of the late Queen are anticipating the delights of a mutiny among the Blues. They have wretchedly misconceived the principles of that loyal and distinguished corps, as the following explanation will sufficiently show :-

The Household troops take the various duties in rotation of regiments; at present the 1st Life Guards and Blues; the 2d Life Guards being at Windsor. The regular tour of duty for this day would have fallen on the Blues, but as a squadron of that regiment, which accompanied the Queen's remains to Colchester will not return till this evening, the Silver Stick (Sir R. Hill) who regulates these duties, directed the guard to be taken this morning by the Life Guards.

I avail myself of this opportunity to correct another error the late Queen's friends seem to have fallen into. They appear, somehow, to fancy that the Blues are partizans of theirs, because they were not so active in chastising their insolence on Tuesday as the Life Guards. Now, pray, John, inform these people that the duties of these corps, on that day, were very different. The Blues formed a guard of honoir, and were part of the pageant, their duty entirely passive, and, like the mourning coach which followed the hearse, had only to remain with it. The Life Guards, on the contrary, were called upon to clear the way, and to enforce the orders of the Magistrates: theirs was an active duty, which they performed with their accustomed manner, exhibiting a forbearance and humanity which accompanies and ennobles the actions of brave and generous soldiers.

OLD BOOTS. Saturdøy, Aug. 18, 1821.

There has been a considerable improvement, during the last week, in the public Securities, owing to the cessation of hostile measures between the Russian and Turkish Governments, which operate in favour of an advance in the prices of property, particularly funded. The accounts of the improving state of trade in some of the manufacturing districts, support the preceding remark of the favourable prospect of the country. Consols opened yesterday morning at 76½ for Money, and 76½ for the Account; the fluctuation, during the day, was very trifling, and they closed at 76½ for money and the same for the Acct. Account day is near at hand; but it is not expected that there will be any defaulter of consence, business has been transacted for the next Account at a continuation of one half per cent.

The advices from the Continent relative to the Funds are very favorable, except for the Neapolitan, in which stock business is done at 68%. The French 5 per cents, are at 88 fr. 30 cents.

An achievement was on Thursday placed in front of the late Queen's house in South Audley-street.

The election for a Member to serve in Parliament for the University of Oxford, will come on next Wednesday, in the Convocation House. The Candidates are Sir John Nicholl and Mr. Heber.

On Wednesday, the dispatches for China, by the ship Scaleby Castle, Captain D. R. Newall, were closed at the East India House, AMONGST the bequests in the late Queen's Will nothing is said of the acknowledgment (called generally the Bond) for fifteen thousand louis or guineas which she claimed, and for which she produced a Bond of her brother, the late Duke of Brunswick. The executors of the Duke had refused the payment, saying that the Bond purporting to be written by the Duke, was not in his hand writing, and that even the signature was not that of his Serene Highness. The claim was resisted, and in the Court of Chancery, but suspended in consequence of the Princess of Wales, the claimant, being in Italy, and her lawyers here demanding time.

When the Princess became Queen and returned to England, it was expected by many persons that proceedings would have been renewed, but to their surprise it was never ·done.

In the anxiety of her Majesty, during her last illness, to provide for her dependants, and particularly for her protegé. MR. WILLIAM AUSTIN, she lamented the want of means to do what she wished; yet still she took no notice of the claim for this large sum, which, at all events, might have been either left for that purpose, or abandoned in favour of her nephew, the present Duke, who being the son and heir of her late brother, must have had his inheritance diminished by that sum, and the interest and expences, had it been paid.

Those persons who previously had some doubts as to the reality of the claim on account of the declaration of the executors, (who are the EARL OF LIVERPOOL and COUNT MUNSTER,) as well as from a doubt of the PRINCESS OF WALES having it in her power to lend her brother so large a sum when she was in debt for the expences of her household, must now be excused, if they are still more incredulous of its existence.

But if it did not exist, what must be concluded? It is not necessary to answer this question, the circumstances speak for themselves.

It was said by a very confidential friend of her Majesty, when some doubts were expressed of her ability to lend the sum, "that the Princess of Wales had borrowed the money in order to lend it to her brother."

However improbable that was, it is now put out of all doubt that the Princess never did borrow the money, otherwise such a debt or debts must have been mentioned in her Will, not only because honour and honesty required such a mention, but that the claim, which would naturally come on what property she leaves, would sweep the whole away, and nothing would remain for any of her dependants.

As to the Queen herself, she is gone "to be laid where all must lie;" but one cannot help thinking that it is rather hard to say that she was persecuted by those very persons who might so eas ly have put her in a really disagreeable situation by sifting this business to the bottom, and who were in some degree in duty bound to do so. Allusion is madehere in particular to the EARL OF LIVERPOOL, the guardian of the property of the young Duke of Brunswick, and one of those who is said to have joined in persecuting the Queen.

It would be going too far to suppose that his Lordship and the Lord High Chancellor did not know what they had in their power to do, and it would not be much better to suppose that they forgot what they might have done.

Under all the circumstances, would it not be wiser for the friends of her Majesty to leave off crying out about persecution, lest those who are supposed by them to be her enemies prove that they have been her protectors?

The business has now changed its term in two ways. In the first place, the Will throws a new light on the subject, by the Queen, of her own accord, abandoning the claim, which, if a just one, she, for her own honour, ought to have never abandoned;—and, in the second place, the matter is now merely an affair of character, and a civil action can no longer be converted into a criminal one.

This language is sufficiently intelligible not to require absolute wisdom to comprehend it, nor to require even common sense to act in consequence of the comprehension; and those who are the real friends of her late Majesty would do well to see whether or not they will be acting in that character, if they persist in holding her up as the victim of oppression— an injured and a broken-hearted QUEEN.

TO MATTHEW WOOD, ESQ.

SIR,-Although your education has not been the most finished, and your reading, consequently, somewhat limited, you might, perhaps, while fagging your way through the intricacies of Dilworth, in Tiverton School, have fallen in with an author highly popular with ladies and gentlemen of tender years.

One of his minor poems records a most melancholy accident which, once upon a time, befel some mysterious personage, which, if I remember, runs thus:-

"HUMPTY-DUMPTY sat upon a wall

" HUMPTY-DUMPTY had a great fail; "Three score horses and three score men

"Couldn't put HUMPTY-DUMPTY to rights again," Nothing is more moving, GAY says, "than to see a great mass in distress," and therefore, any pointed application of those lines to you, at this particular juncture, might appear unfeeling; I shall, under these circumstances, leave the little poem for the present; but I give you notice that when you shall have in some degree recovered the effects of the ridiculous exposure of your insignificance, I propose to adopt the name of HUMPTY-DUMPTY whenever I may have occasion to speak of ALDERMAN WOOD.

Having my pen in my hand, however, I cannot but condole with you upon your present most uncomfortable situation, and in order to work myself up to a proper pitch of pity for you, I must recal some of the various acts by which you have exposed your ignorance and impudence during the

I remember to have seen you sitting cheek by jowl with her late Majesty, smirking and chuckling like a great ape; even then I pitied you—I pitied your ignorance, in degrading the person you wanted to exalt in our eyes by associating yourself with her so familiarly.

I have traced you through your processions and your public meetings; I have heard you say, "Oh! Gentlemen, if you knew what I know about the QUEEN,"you used to go running in and out, and backwards and forvard. "Oh! and MRS. WOOD knows so much about the "QUEEN—these women sympathize—open their hearts to each other;—and GEORGINA is to be a maid of honour, and KITTY is to be a necessary woman, and JOHN PAGE is "to have all the QUEEN's preferment, and his brother is to be a chamberlain, and I—HUMPTY-DUMPTY—I—but "only wait—watch—you'll see!"

FALSTAFF, with the reformed HARRY, never met with so disastrous a fall as you, my dear HUMPTY-DUMPTY, got last Thursday se'nnight. There was ALDERMAN WOOD came down in his carriage-ALDERMAN WOOD has not taken off his clothes for three nights-ALDERMAN WOOD went out at such a time—ALDERMAN WOOD came in at such a place—and Alderman Wood did this, and Alderman Wood did that—and Alderman Wood talked to the QUEEN of her worldly affairs—and then her MAJESTY died-and then MRS. WOOD would not quit the House-there they staid poking and rummaging about all night—and the REV. JOHN PAGE WOOD went out into the garden, MISS GEORGINA retired to cry at the back of the private theatre, and KITTY only staved her sighs by wondering who would have the diamond ear-rings, and the gold watch, and the bracelets, and the armlets.

This went on till Thursday, when the QUEEN'S Will was to be read, and the Woods begged to be present. There they sat, with open ears; line after line-Codicil after Codicil; HUMPTY-DUMPTY looked glum—MRS. HUMPTY-DUMPTY breathed shorter than usual—the girls ceased to weep—the boys to hope; Codicil the last was finished, and lo and behold! the great Captain's Captain—Wit—Wisdom— Whittington, Vi ood, the friend, the adviser, the patron, the bringer-over, the sticker-up, the carrier-about, the cringer, the smirker, the fawner, the grinner, the growler-not so much as mentioned; not a ring—not a picture—not a guinea —not a shilling—not a farthing—not a word!!—Not one trinket spared from BERGAMI, out of MARIETTI'S box.— "Whew" went MRS. HUMPTY-DUMPTY, and said no more. "Well, for my part," muttered GEORGINA.—" My eyes," exclaimed KITTY.—"GOOD GOD," said the PARSON.—
"Nicked, by Jupiter," said his brother.—" The Devil," said HUMPTY-DUMPTY

The rogue who is discovered in his roguery-the thief detected in his robbery—the murderer caught with the reeking dagger in his belt, feel the horrors of guilt, and the dread of punishment; but the remorse of conscience, or even the terror of death, is not so galling to the rogue, the thief, or the murderer, as the pang of this exposure is to you.

There is no feeling of mortification so acute as that, which is experienced by a fool, found out in his folly—a coxcomb shewn up—an ass exposed—a pretender laid open—a braggart humbled, or a meddler displayed in his true colours.
All these blended feelings must be rankling in your heart.

You are, indeed, a pitiable object; your poor wife and family still more to be compassionated, for they had no will of their own. But I cannot see how you are to get out of the scrape, or hold up your smirking face again: for either the QUEEN had found you out, and has treated you with silent contempt, because she despised you, or she is an ungrateful

Your opinion of her Majesty's goodness, and virtues, and talents, and excellence, is recorded in every pot-house in St. Giles's; that is irrevocable:—so, my poor HUMPTY-DUMPTY, you must either put up with the most marked public insult that a dying person could possibly inflict upon a man, or tax the most illustrious pattern of all worldly good with the basest of all earthly crimes—INGRATITUDE!

Take your choice, silly Alderman, and if you have any thing like feeling or shame left, throw up your gown—resign your seat (before you lose it)—sell your furniture—account for the money subscribed for her Majesty's plate—change your name, and go somewhere where you may spend the remainder of your days in obscurity with the jolly wife you have made a fool of, and the two poor girls whose prospects in life you have marred, then lay your head upon your pillow and reflect upon your past life—and a greater punishment I do not ask even for HUMPTY-DUMPTY.

J. BULL. I am, poor fellow, yours,

THEATRE.

Drury Lane continues to attract the people to the Corona-The Haymarket also has its mirthful votaries; more novelties are in preparation, and things seem to be going on with much spirit. A serious calamity had nearly befallen the audience at this little theatre on Thursday. A fire took place in a house in Northumberland-street, the master of which was at the Haymarket; a friend or servant rushed down to the playhouse, found him, and imparted the intelligence; the person agitated in a great degree, exclaimed "Good God! my house is on fire;" which being misunderstood, was construed by the company into "the House is on fire;" much confusion ensued, but after a quarter of an hour, order was restored, and luckily no mischief occurred.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,—I am fully authorised by John Hanson, Esq. in chalf of himself, Harry Stowe and George Scott, Esqrs. all three local Magistrates of the Hamlet, to assure you, and through you the public, that the appearance of their names at the head of the placards posted about Hammersmith, by the Queen's Committee, to recommend and solicit subscriptions for the purpose of erecting a testimonial of respect to the memory of her late Majesty, is entirely without their approbation or consent. The two latter gentlemen were not in Hammersmith when the meeting was held, and they all join in expressing the most unqualified surprise at such a liberty being taken with their names.

TO JOHN BULL.

SIR,-It was stated in the Morning Chronicle, last week, (upon the authority, I suppose, of the old Times) that when the intelligence of the late Queen's death reached Fulham, the church bell was tolled, against the wishes of the Rev. Vicar. The fact (which any body may ascertain, as I have done, by inquiry) was, that as soon as he received that intelligence, the Vicar sent to the Churchwarden, and directed that the bell should be tolled, according to established

It has also been industriously reported, and, as I am told, in some of the Papers, that the Minister of Hammersmith was prevented by his superiors at Fulham from administer. 2 the sacrament to her late Majesty on her death-bed; A FA-BRICATION AS GROSS as the former, and of still greater

The persons against whom these calumnies are levelled have not thought fit to notice them publicly; but I know full well the mischievous effects, among the lower orders, of such assertions (especially those against the Clergy) uncontradicted, and I cannot think it unimportant to expose, whenever there is an opportunity, that system of wicked invention and and liberate falsehood by which the public mind has, of late, been so grievously deluded. I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant, AN INHABITANT OF FULHAM.

DISAPPOINTMENT

YE, aldermen! list to my lay-Oh, list, ere your bumpers ye fill-Her Majesty's dend!—lack-a day! She remember'd me not in her Will. Oh, folly! oh, baneful ill-luck! That I ever to court her begun;
She was Queen, and I could not but suck—
But she died, and poor MATTY's undone!

Perhaps I was void of all thought, Perhaps it was plain to foresee, That a Queen so complete would be sought By a Courtier more knowing than me But self-love each hope can inspire, It banishes wisdom the while; And I thought she would surely admire My countenance, whiskers, and smile.

She is dead though, and I am undone! Ye that witness the woes I endure, Oh let me instruct you to shun What I cannot instruct you to cure: Beware how you loiter in vain Amid nymphs of a higher degree; It is not for me to explain How fair and how fickle they be.

Alas! that her lawyers e'er met, They alone were the cause of my woes; Their tricks I can never forget— Those lawyers undid my repose. Yet the Times may diminish my puin, If the Statesman and Traveller agree Which I rear'd for her pleasure in vain—
Yes, the Times shall have comfort for me.

Of the Wood and the Woodcock the tale, And how perfect soever it seem-The sud conduct of Ilchester Gaol Henceforth shall be MATTY WOOD's theme! High transports are shewn to the sight;
But we are not to find them our own, Or Fate ne'er had given such delight As I had with her Majesty known.

Mrs. Wood, ope your doors then apace; To your deepest recesses I fly; I must hide my poor woe-begone face, I must vanish from every eye. But my and, my deplorable lay,
My reed shall resound with it still :—
How her Majesty died t'other day,
And remembered me not in her Will.

SHENSTONE.

The attendance of Sheriff Waithman on the Jury, which now on the body of Honey, appears to some rather singular, whilst others consider it a mere deed of sympathy for one of his own partisens. It has been stated, that the worthy Sheriff came forward at the request of the friends of the deceased to act as their Commedier; and whatever risibility such an assertion may create, it is new theless founded on fact, since a well-known character in the neighbourhood of Paddington, who is quite insane, and styles himself Sir Francis Burdett, actually addressed Mr. Waithman on the subject, and solicited his legal assistance in favour of a dear son! Although the sapient Alderman, no doubt, construed the word according to its natural signification, the soi disent Sir Francis meant no more than "a son of Reform," as he terms all the Redicals his children!

This paragraph is inserted on the authority of a highly respectable correspondent, who was told by the lunatic himself that it was he who applied to WAITHMAN on the occasion !!!

LANDING OF THE KING IN IRELAND.

The wind being far from favourable for the Royal yacht to proceed from Holyhead for Ireland, and the King observing the regu-larity with which the steam packets had proceeded in their course, he determined to prefer that conveyance; and, accordingly, on Sunday morning last, about a quarter to eleven o'clock, accompasuneay morning last, about a quarter to elected outsign and attended by a numerous suite, His Majesty repaired on board the Lightning, steam-packet, in order to land, commodiously and expeditiously, in that portion of the United Realm. During the voyage His Majesty was pleased most graciously to express his satisfaction at this method of conveyance, and to distinguish the packet by the appellation of the Royal George the Fourth Packet, an honour which her Commander was

On Sunday, thousands of all classes repaired to Dunleary and Howth, uncertain at which place His Majesty would land, but con-fident, from previous report, that he would reach the Irish shore, some time in the course of the evening. Every eye was to add with impatience in the direction where it was expected the Roya squadron would first make its appearance. Any sail that came is view on the verge of the horizon was watched with anxiety by the numberless spectators who crowded the shores on each side bay. At length, about a quarter to four, the Richmond schooner was seen crowding all sail towards Dunleary, and having communicated with Admiral Rowley, on board the Cyrus, a signal was made for all the fleet in the harbour to get under weigh. Presently five large ships, and a vast number of brigs, schoopers, yachts, and pleasure-boats, stretched right across towards the harbour of H. ~th, when the Lightning, Capt. Skinner, with the King on board, was seen at some distance. On arriving at the pier, a chain was immediately flung on shore, and His Majesiy was recognized by some gentlemen present, standing alone on the quarter-deck, dressed in a large blue surtout, with a travelling cap on his bead. The instant it became known that the King was on board, a loud and universal shout burst from the surrounding multitude, which His Majesty answered by taking off the cap he wore, and saluting the assembled crowd in the most gracious manner. The acclamations of the people at this mark of condescension, were repeated with such energy as to be distinctly heard on the opposite side of the Bay. Sir Benjamin Bloomfield then advanced towards the ladder, and His Majesty ascended the steps, assisted by three gentlemen. As the people pressed forward with the greatest eagerness to catch a glimpse of his Majesty, they were called upon to fall back, right and left, for the purpose of a Ang a passage. This being affected without the least difficulty, His Majesty at length reached the carriage, and turning about, and extending both his hands in the most gradious manner, emphatically cried out to those who cheered him, "I thank you—I sincerely thank you"—"God bless you all"—"God bless you all." Sir Benjamin Bloomfield was at the carriage-door, ready to receive His Majesty; he entered it, and feeling somewhat exhausted, threw limself back upon the seat. His Majesty was immediately followed by Sir Benjamin Bloomfield who desired the coachman to drive slowly through the throng of spectators. It was with difficulty the doc, of the carriage could be closed, from the violent eagerness of the people to see, and if possible to take their Sovereign by the hand. His Majesty seemed pleased at this warmth of feeling, and far from receiving it as a rude familiarity, held forth both his hands which were grasped at with eagerness by every person who could come within reach. Many were heard boasting of the honour; and, no doubt, in a century hence, it will be mentioned by the descendants of this warm-hearted people, as a subject of pride, and exultation, that their fathers touched the hand of that gracious Sovereign who was the first that visited them in friendship. His Majesty seemed pleased with every thing around him, and appeared in the best health. The Marquis of Londonderry, Sir John Doyle, Sir Edmund Nagle, and one of the foreign Ambassadors, with a numerous suite, came in the packet. The Marquis of Londonderry after writing some dispatches in the Little Custom House, proceeded in the mail-coach, to town, the mail having been previously dispached by a eart.

It was with the greatest difficulty, and at the repeated request of Sir Benjamin Bloomfield, that the people were prevented from taking the horses from His Majesty's carriage, and drawing him into town. In proceeding towards Phoenix Park, the same desire was manifested, as at his landing, of taking His Majesty by the hand.

As the Marquis of Londonderry entered his carriage, some of the people cried out, "Here is Lord Castlerengh, cheer him!" which was accordingly done. One of them then came up, and said he had a favour to ask. The Noble Marquis with great affability and good humour, desired to know what it was? Upon which the man replied that he hoped he would consider Old Ireland, and the Window Tax. His Lordship smiled, and holding out his hand in the kindest manner, said he should by all means attend to his recom-mendation. Lord Howth, the Bishop of Cork and Ross, Lord Ormond, Lord Kingston, Lord Fingall, Lord Maryborough, and several other persons of distinction, were on the pier when His Majesty arrived.

About six o'clock His Majesty reached the Vice-Regal Lodge through the private road leading to the Phænix Park, amidst the loud and incessant cheering of thousands of his subjects. On alighting His Majesty thanked them for the kind reception he had met with, saying that he would drink their health and the health of his people that night, with other words of the kindest import.—The carriage in which His Majesty proceeded to town from Howth was that of Sir Benjamin Bloomfield's, drawn by his own horses. It that of Sir Benjamin Bloomiteld's, drawn by his own horses. It was not intended that His Majesty's entry should be a public one, but the place of his landing could not be kept a secret, and as the rumour became general that he would land at Howth this day, great numbers repaired there at an early hour, and did not depart till their curiosity and loyalty were satisfied by a view of His Majesty. It is supposed that His Majesty will remais for some time quite private at the Viee-Regal Lodge. His arrival has filled this city with the west supposed to the proposition of the supposition of the supposi city with the most sincere joy. It is impossible to give an adequate idea of the enthusiasm it has occasioned. The effects will not be soon lost on a people so sensible to every attention and kindness.

The King landed on his Birth-day, the anniversary also of the Battle of Aughrim, which one hundred and thirty years ago decided the Protestant succession.

His Majesty looked extremely well; he seemed in perfect health, and not so much fatigued as we should have expected after so long and boisterous a passage as His Majesty experienced.

It is a fact not a little curious, that not a single red coat, not a soldier nor a police officer, appeared at the landing station, or escorted His Majesty on his way to the Park; but he had a guard in the whole Irish people. In Ireland, George the Fourth has as many defenders as he has subjects; he has as many friends as there are Irishmen.

From the great crowd which assembled round the King when he alighted in the Phœnix Park it was not possible even for those who vere pretty near him, to hear distinctly all that fell from His Ma-The following are his words as given in The Correspondent jesty. The following are his words as given in The Correspondent, one of the most accurate of the Dublin Journals:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen, and my good Yeomanry,—I cannot express to you the gratification i seel at the warm and kind reception I have met with on this day of my landing among my Irish subjects. I am obliged to you all. I am particularly obliged by your escorting me to my erry door.

"I may not be able to express my feelings as I wish. I have travelled far, I have made a long sea-voyage—besides which, particular circumstances have occurred, known to you all.—of which it is better at present not to speak. Upon those subjects I leave it to delicate and generous hearts to appreciate my feelings.

"This is one of the happiest days of my life. I have long wished to visit you—my heart has always been Irish From the day it first beat, I have loved Ireland. This day has shewn me that I am beloved by my Irish subjects. Rank, station, honours, are nothing; but to feel that I live in the hearts of my Irish subjects, is to me the most exalted happiness.

"I must now ence more thank you for your kindness, and bid you farewell. Go and do by me as I shall do by you—drink my health in a bumper; I shall drink all yours—in a bumper of good Irish whiskey."

His Majesty delivered the above speech with admirable grace, and with ardent emotions of strong feeling. The last few words were jocularly addressed to some of the lower class, who thronged round His Majesty with looks and expressions of the strongest round His Majesty with looks and expressions of the strongest loyalty and affection. His Majesty then shook hands most cor-dialty with every person within his reach, without distinction of rank and appearance, and retired. During this short address he appeared much affected, and when he mentioned his early love for Ireland, he spoke with great emphasis, and in an impressive and animated manner. The cordial warmth of feeling which animated His Majesty may be inferred from the following trifling incident: Several persons who entered the demesne having walked on the grass in the lawn, some others of the party called out not to tread on the grass. "Oh," said His Majesty, with much good humour, on the grass. "Oh," said His Majesty, with much good humour, "don't maid the grass—let them go where they please." On His Majesty's arrival at the Park, a royal salute was fired at the battery, and the Union flag was boisted on Bedford tower.

His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant had the honour on Sunday to dine with His Majesty the King, in the Palace at the Phœnix

The Lord Lieutenant on Sunday night slept, for the first time, at Dublin Castle. His Excellency will reside at the Castle while His Majesty remains in Ireland.

The following official notice appeared in the Dublin Gazette Extraordinary :-

Lord Chamberlain's Office, Dublin Castle, Aug. 14.
Retice is hereby given, that His Majesty will hold a Public Levee at the Castle, on Monday, the 20th instant, at one o'clock.

And His Majesty will also hold a Drawing Room, at the Castle, on Tuesday Evening, at nine o'clock.

N. B. K is not expected by His Majesty that persons shall appear in mourning as the day of his public entry into Dublin, nor on any of the days of public ceremonials or festivities which may take place during the period of His Majesty's residence in Ireland.

The death of her Majesty has excited very little interest in the minds of the citizens of Dublin. Scarcely an individual is to be seen in mourning.

A notification was at the same time issued by the Lord Mayor in the following terms:—

"MANSION-HOUSE,

"Ith August, 1821.

"The proposed Illumination on the King's arrival will not take place previous to His Majesty's public entry into Dublin, which, on account of the Queen's death, is necessarily postponed.

"A. B. KING, Lord Mayor."

During the entire of Tuesday the Park was crowded with vehicles of every description, filled with elegantly dressed persons; the lawn in front of the Lodge was also thronged with equestrians and pedestrians, who frequently cheered the King; but, owing to His Majesty's wish to remain as private as possible, he did not present himself at the windows. His Majesty's State Porter remained at jesty's wish to remain as private as possible, he did not present himself at the windows. His Majesty's State Porter remained at the Castle during the day for the purpose of taking down the names of the Nobility and Gentry. Sir Benjamin Bloomfield is gone to reside with His Majesty at the Park; Lady Bloomfield and family remain at Stephen's-green. The Princess Esterhazy, accompanied by Lady Bloomfield, went on Thursday to the Palace, Phoenix Park, to visit the King.

The Marquis of Londonderry was recognised on Tuesday afternoon, coming from the chambers of Mr. Secretary Grant, at Dublin Castle: about 500 persons were present: they pressed furgard with Castle; about 500 persons were present; they pressed forward with much eagerness and generous feeling to greet and welcome him. He bowed with all the dignity and urbanity of his nature to all around him, and we heard several of those about us, some of whom had been radically inclined, declare, that they never saw a Nobleman whose carriage and demeanor so forcibly expressed nobility.

The Marquis of Londonderry is stready a great favourite in Ireland. Sir William Curtis attracts much attention; he is constantly at the Castle. He is invited to every party.

A grand public dinner of the Nobility and Gentry is to take place to-morrow, in the Corn Exchange, when it is expected that 1000 persons will dine together in honour of His Majesty's visit. Sir Benjamin Bloomfield and others are invited.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—It is asserted in a private letter received here, that the Tripoli squadron, which was proceeding to assist the Turks, has been surprised and captured by the Greeks.

The Duke of Wellington is daily expected in this capital. Pre-parations have been made for his reception at the Hotel de Paris, houlevard de la Madeleine.

Mons, Aug. 6.- The Duke of Wellington has visited the fortifications of this place, with which he is highly satisfied. He has publicly expressed his opinion that this fortress is the finest in Belgium

An article from Augsburg, dated the 7th inst, states, that according to advices from Vienna, there are unusual movements among the Austrian troops on the eastern frontiers, which are about rably reinforc From this it i will actively co-operate with Russia, in case the latter should declare war against the Porte; and, it is affirmed, that the Ottoman territories will be invaded on three points at the same time. It is also said, that the Emperor of Russia was on the road to Wilna, from whence he intended to proceed to the head-quarters of the army of the south, commanded by General the Count de Wittgenstein.

An article from Hanover, dated Aug. 8, states that the King is spected to "set out on the 10th of September on his voyage to to Germany, to fulfil the long cherished and joyful expectations of his faithful Hanoverian subjects. His Majesty comes by the way of Brussels and Frankfort, stops one day at each of those places, and will arrive here on the 26th of September. His Excellency Count Munster will arrive here some time earlier. We are happy to communicate this intelligence from an authentic source.

ODESSA, JULY 12.- We have letters from Constantinople of the 11th. The object of the authors of the scenes of terror, during the first days of the Bairam, was to burn Pera, assassinate Christians of every nation indiscriminately, and finally to pillage their houses.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Salter arrived in London, on Tuesday, about half past four o'clock, with the news of the joyful event of the safe arrival of the King; and on Wednesday, left town with disputches from the Earl Liverpool to the King in Ireland.

Some person laughing at the conceit of J. T. Barber Beaumont, Esq. F. R. S. was observing, that at the time he belonged to some Volunteer corps of Sharp Shooters, he was a Tory;—"Ah," said another, "but he has married into a Whig family." This in some degree, accounted for the change; and we set about guessing and accounting which it was into the Ching. surmizing, whether it was into the family of the Howards, Cavendishes, or into what Whig family he had married. "A family," said Mrs. Barber Beaumont, who overheard us, "Sir, I'd have you to know, my father is a greater man than any of the Whigs-he is a Wig-maker."-She was a daughter of Vickery, the barber, in Tavistock-street-whence called Mrs. Barber Beau-

The mourning for the Queen is by no means general-black worn by men (except the Court) is a mark of Radicalism, rather than grief; and no women wear it at all—we mean no presentable women. Ladies who walk the streets, and have been up with addresses, are in subles; but amongst females, it is confined either to persons of easy virtue, or those, who having a small stock of clothes, find black more convenient; not to speak of saving the charge of wasbing.

It is rather a singular circumstance, that Captain Doyle, of the Glasgow frigate, who has orders to take the body of her Majesty to Cuxhaven, was the efficer who, on the 28th of March, 1795, handed to her Majesty the hand-rope to assist her in coming up the side of His Majesty's ship Jupiter, when she embarked at Cuxhaven for England to be married.

On Thursday morning, the Duchess of Kent, accompanied by the On Translay morning, the Duchess of Kent, accompanied by the Princesses Viotoria and Feodore, left Kensington Palace for Bognor, and the Duke and Duchess of Clarence, and the reigning Duke of Saxe Meiningen, left the King's Palace, St. James's, on a visit to the Earl of Egremont, at his seat at Petworth, in Sussex, to Bognor, Portsmouth, the Isle of Wight, &c.

The Army.—The 10th regiment, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Stewart, are under orders to embark for Plymouth; it is supposed they will relieve the left hetalian of the 3d Guarde, we are supposed they will relieve the 1st battalion of the 3d Guards. doing duty in that garrison. The 15th regiment, now at Fort Cumberland, will march into this garrison to replace the 10th.—Orders have been sent to Gibraltar for the 80th regiment to proceed up the Mediterranean. Counter orders have been sent out to the 26th, also at Gibraltar, and under orders to embark for England, stating that

Very important reductions have taken place in the Ordnance Department at Chatham. The office of Clerk of the Survey is to be abolished, and for the future there will be only the Storekeeper and the Clerk of the Cheque. The Ordnance Establishment at Upnor is entirely abolished, and will be transferred to Chatham.

A Privy Council has been held upon the subject of the proceedings on Tuesday, when the procession of her Majesty's body, &c. was obstructed. The offence of obstructing the body of royalty amounts to little less than treason. Dispatches were sent to His Majesty at Dublin, informing him of the circumstance. An express was also sent off to Lord Sidmouth, informing him of the proceedings which took place in Colchester church, when Dr. Lushington, Mr. Wilde, and others, placed an improper inscription on the coffin of her Majesty.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

An inquest was held on Wednesday last, at No. 4, Edgeware-road, and continued by adjournment, till Friday, when it re-assembled at the New Inn, Edgware-road, on the body of Richard Honey, who was shot during the riot at Cumberland-gate, on Tuesday.— Mr. Alderman Waithman was present during the inquiry (according to his own statement) as amicus curies for the brother of the deceased. A great number of witnesses were examined.—
Mr. Thomas Gould, swore that there seemed to be a disposition to riot on the part of the people, who flung bricks, which irritated the soldiery.—The Surgeons deposed as to the death being caused by a gun-shot wound.

Edward Bailey observed some stones thrown at the soldiers. in the Park. He was riding in the Park, abreast with the Serjeant of the Guards, when the latter desired two privates, who were with him, to walk quietly forward; instead of doing that, the privates rode on violently, and pressed down two of the people. This witness described the firing, and the fall of the deceased in consequence.

John Hathorne, Simon Berkeley, and John Duckett, confirmed the previous testimony. The latter witness saw a young officer point his pistol in the direction where the deceased stood, a flash followed, and he fell. The officer then rode round into the Park, and he should know him again. Witness produced his hat, and pointed to the place where it had been cut, as he alleged, by the sword of the officer. Saw brickbats flying in different directions, but none from the place where the deceased stood; he saw no Civil Magistrate warning the people of their danger; before the brick-bats were thrown, the soldiers had their swords drawn, and might be said to be brandishing them; he saw some stones thrown out of Park-lane into the Park before the swords were brandished.

As the evidence was reading over to the witness, Mr. Sheriff Waithman observed, that it was not precisely what had been given. The Coroner said, that while gentlemen continued to put so many questions, it would be impossible for the clerk to take them down.

Mr. Sheriff Waithman said he'd be shot through the heart as the poor deceased was, even sitting at a distant table, if he could not write it down more correctly. With regard to recognising the officer, the whole regiment should be drawn out, and then it would be for the witness to say whether he could swear to him or not.

Francis M'Gowan gave nearly similar testimony with the former witnesses, but saw no stones thrown, nor did he hear the Riot Act

Bartholomew Croney, tailor .- I went myself into the Park, and on coming to the gateway near Oxford-street, these here Piccadilly butchers were across the road; I call them nothing else; or, if you wish—the Horse Guards; the mob hissed at them twice, on which an officer was good enough to take a pistol out and let ing; cordurov breeches was the man who was shot; truly then, when the mob found the pistol fired they launched the stones; I have not seen the man since; the officer was a thin man with a Waterloo medal; the shot he fired killed the man, I'll swear to it; I cannot tell the age of the officer; I cannot tell even my own age; I be-lieve I would know the Gentleman; and if the whole troop were called up, I think I'd know him; I could put my hand on him, though he wore a Waterloo medal; I could do the same as to the man who spoke to Sir Robert Baker. I glory in that woman who is gone. God be good to her. I saw no stones thrown until the shot was fired, and then the people cried out shame

By a Juryman-Heard the Riot Act read at Kensington, but does not know who read it; saw Sir R. Buker in Piccadilly and Tottenham Court-road, but not in Oxford-street; the man who read merely read to "Keep the peace!" that is all he heard, and he never heard the Riot Act read before; that's all he knew about it; it might have occupied five minutes in the reading.

The proceedings were resumed on Friday at two o'clock, at the New Inn, Edgeware-road, when several witnesses were examined.-

Samuel Green, a painter, stated that he saw the Guards push through the Park as soon as the iron-railing had been pushed down by the mob, and an officer fired a pistol down the street, and then rode off towards Tyburn turnpike; he fired more than once; when he had got about 100 yards, he turned his horse, and again rode to Cumberland-gate, and he then fired a second time, and then a man fell, who was standing near the watch-box, and shortly after expired.

He slid not see any brick-bats thrown till after the firing took place.

John Cook was then examined.—This witness stated that the mob attempted to shut the gates, and he saw the soldiers cut at that part of the mob who held the gates, which was followed by a discharge of stones which continued for a minute, the soldiers all that time standing still, at length an officer full of desperation (for so the witness swore) rushed with his sword at one man, who bent down wishing to avoid the cuts. The soldiers then dispersed the people in all directions, just at that mement he heard the report of a pistol, and saw two or three soldiers fire in the air, the firing was general; the witness rode up to a young officer and expostulated with him on the impropriety of firing on the people. The officer was much agitated, and said, "I could not help it, what was I to do?" his agitation was very great as if proceeding from terror. At that time the witness did not know a man had been killed. The witness did not hear the Riot Act read.

Wm. Spratt, a shoemaker, deposed, that the first thing he ob served was the soldiers driving the people up Oxford-street; one of them cut at the witness (who was not throwing stones at the time) and made a slight rent in his umbrelle, which he held up to guard his head. The witness endeavoured to get out of his way, when the soldier sheathed his sword and fired at him. The witness then ran across the street, and saw a young officer draw a pistol from the holster and deliberately present it at a man standing near Cum-berland-street. The witness was about two yards from the officer, and he was about seven yards from the man whom he shot. He was confident he should know the officer again, who was in a red The deceased was standing in the front of the crowd; the officer laughed as soon as he had shot the deceased.

Wm. Alexander, a journeyman dyer, deposed, that all the stones were thrown from the corner of Park-lane. He saw an officer come down Oxford-street towards Quebeo-street, and turn round, point his pistol, and fire it; a man instantly fell; there was no other pistol fixed until half a minute afterwards: the witness was about three yards from the officer when he fired; he saw no constables admonishing the people, nor did he hear any command given to fire; there were some stones and brickbats thrown before the military fired.

Mr. Waithman suggested the necessity of having the troops drawn out, to identify the officer who fired the shot.

The Coroner said he would write to the Colonel of the regiment stating the wish of the Jury.

Mr. Hansen, who attended for the enquiry, said he should communicate with the Communiting Officer, whom he had no doubt would do every thing to forward the ends of justice.

Mr. Cleaver, a cheesemonger at Chelsen, on crossing Oxford-street, heard about 12 or 14 pistols fired, and saw at the same time the stones flying in all directions; the procession at that time seemed to be in confusion; he then saw an officer in scarlet, a young man, about 20 or 22 presenting a pistol, and immediately on the flash a person fell against the witness, who was alarmed and run away into the New-road, and returned in about three quarters of an hour, and then went up to the officer, who was with about twelve or fourteen men at Cumberland-gate, and said to him, "You are a pretty fellow to shoot a man, are you not?" The officer looked at witness and said, "I wish you were shot too." He then moved his horse to the further end of his company; a gentleman a friend of the officer came up, whispered to him and said, "I wish you well out of it?" The witness grows he should have the west out of it." The witness swore he should know the officer again, for he (the witness) had addressed him in a very coarse manner; he was ashamed to repeat what he then said, but being now sworn he would tell what he said to the officer; he said, "I shall know your face again, it is so d——d ugly," he then looked at the officer for five minutes, and then retired across the Park. The officer was a slim made man; he could pick him out from five hundred it he were in the same clothes. The witness did not hear the Riot Act read, In answer to a question from a Juror, the witness new said he did not mean to say that the officer was the person who shot the man Stones were flying in all directions at the time the man fell.

George Rogers, a tobacco-manufacturer, one of the Committee at the Freemuson's Tavern, deposed, that he placed himself opposite Cumberland-gate to see what was going on; the first thing he saw was a body of Life Guards; there were three or four; the centre one appeared to be an officer; from the comparative effeminacy of his dress and appearance he judged him so to be; the soldiers were in a state of irritation, brandshing their swords, and apparently threatening the people, who were hissing them; the soldiers, when they came out of the Park, gallored towards the people in all directions, and every soldier seemed to act for him-self; he did not see any stones thrown until three or four minutes after the soldiers had attacked the people, and then they drew their pistols, firing individually. He did not see any damage arise from the firing, nor any person wounded; their swords were drawn, and the three or four minutes which he had previously spoke of were occupied in sabring the people, but he did not see any person wounded, though the swords came in contact with their heads and shoulders. Examined by Mr. Walthman—I attended the Committee at the Freemasons' Tavern frequently, but there was no conspiracy, to my knowledge, to stop up the roads through which the procession was to pass.

Elizabeth Parker was standing on the steps of a gentleman's house at the corner of Cumberland-street; the soldiers were waving their swords, and riding backwards and forwards, but never saw them strike any one; the decensed was standing on the steps, just before the witness, who was looking over his shoulders; when he was shot he was clapping his hands and calling out as loud as he could, "the City! the City!"

Two other witnesses were examined, but they stated nothing material, and the Inquest was adjourned at 11 o'clock, till Monday at

An Inquest was held at the Triumphant Chariot, near St. George's Hospital, on the body of George Francis, who died on Wednesday at St. George's Hospital.

J. Burton was present near Tyburn-gate on Tuesday, and saw fall; whether it was an officer or private shot him he could not tell, he was dressed as a Life Guard's man; there were no stones thrown until after the firing; the deceased did not molest the soldiers.

A Mr. French gave similar testimony.

R. B. Walker is house surgeon at St. George's Hospital; examined deceased; he was shot through the right shoulder-it was a gun-shot; he was bled, and he considered it a hopeless case; the man thought so himself; did not hear him say it was mortal, but he told the Chaplain so afterwards: the man's bowels were open, and he remained in the same state during the whole of the night, and continued so till about seven o'clock on Wednesday night, when he was taken considerably worse, and at 20 minutes after night he died, apparently from suffocation; he has since examined the body, and found the ball passed directly through it; he cannot tell whether it was a pistol bullet or not: it was extracted from the left shoulder; the ball passed through the lungs, and was the cause of his death; two of his ribs were broken, and the hall had passed through the spine; within two hours before his death the man was unable to speak.

The Rev. Mr. Morgan Hughes is Chaplain to St. George's Hospital, and attended the deceased during his illness. He was very anxious his wife should be sent for, as he considered himself a dying man. I directed a person to go for his wife. At six o'clock on Tuesday evening, I returned to see him and found his wife with him. I talked and read prayers to him; and after that I asked him whether he had any ill-will or malice against anybody? To which he answered, he had not; he bore no ill-will to any one, and considered the soldier, or whoever fired, had only done his duty in firing the pistol—he was at peace with all the world. I asked him if he had thrown any thing at the soldiers? and he said no, that he had not at all; that he was a little retired from the crowd at that time and that he was on the pavement, though he had previously been

Mary Francis examined-I live at No. 6, Kingsgate-street, Holborn, the deceased was my husband; he was 42 years of age, and left home on Tuesday morning about ten o'clock, in very good health, he never was better in his life; I next saw him at Saint George's Hospital, I was sent for about two o'clock; I found my husband in bed and some gentlemen standing round him; I asked him what occasioned his condition, to which he replied, he had the misfortune of being near the Park, and was shot through the shoulder, but he did not say that he was dying; he said he saw the people throw the brick-bats at the soldiers and wished to retire

A witness named Binnington, deposed to the deceased being shot. The Inquest at ten o'clock, was adjourned till Monday at three o'clock.

If we are correctly informed, not less than forty-three privates of the Life Guards were wounded, and are now under surgical care, from the effect of the brick-bats, &c. thrown at them in the course of last Tuesday; and some of the cases would have actually been fatal, had it not been for the strength of their helmets.

During the disturbances on Tuesday, an elderly lady was trampled on by a dragoon's horse, and conveyed to the Middlesex Hospital; but she is declared out of danger. Other casualties of minor note occurred during the day; and in Toltenham-court-road a youth about eighteen was wounded by a pistol-ball, and carried

An Inquest was taken on Monday, at the Union Flag, Whitechapel, on the body of Mr. N. Wild, who expired from wounds and bruises received on the Friday night preceding. It appeared from the testimony of the witnesses that he had been knocked down and illused by three or four men, who affected afterwards to assist him, he complained of a pain in his kidnies. On opening the body eleven of the ribs were broken on the right side, and two on the left, which had lacerated the lungs and caused an effusion of blood of about three pints, nearly the whole of the ribs were fractured in two places. The Jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown.

On Tuesday the mob who accompanied the Queen's funeral attacked the Tumpikegate-keeper at Hammersmith, for demanding his toll of the horsemen proceeding to Brandenburgh House. The man was cruelly beaten, his gate torn off the hinges, and the mob would not afterwards suffer him to demand his legal toll—thus robbing the poor man of a considerable sum of money, and half murdering him because he did not choose to be robbed quietly.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH, on an unprecedented principle.—Mr. GRAY, Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, in London, continues to supply the loss of Teeth, on the successful system introduced by himself in 1813, which has been found to answer all the purposes of the human Teeth, in mastication, articulation, appearance, &c. and to remain perfectly secure in their places by the pressure of the a mosphere; thereby avoiding pinning to stumps, tying, twisting wires, or fastening springs to the adjoining Teeth, or any attachment whatever to the remaining Teeth; and consequently, fusted of injuring, afford them support. These artificial Teeth may be taken out, and replaced by the wearer with the greatest facility. To those who require whole or half sets, Mr. Gray undertakes, at his own risk, to furnish pieces which shall answer all the purposes above described, without the insumbrance of the spiral springs, which are usually attached to such pieces.—25, Old Burlington-street.

Idady Caroline Lamb.

Of all diseases incidental to the human frame, none are more afflicting than Convulsion Fits, Epileptic Fits, Spaams, &c. The late Dr. Hadley, of Derby, (the discoverer of this invaluable medicine) used it in private practice for upwards of fity years with the most flattering success in the various complaints, as under, which is proved by incontrovertible facts.

The powerful virtues of this Powder in a short time relieves the sufferer; and by due perseverance in its application, completely extirpates Convulsion Fits in infants and adults; also Epileptic or Falling Fits; strengthens the most weakly atomach; allays linfammation, and removes the most violent Spasmodic Affections. It likewise has the happy effect of eradicating Fits which females are subject to during pregnancy or subsequent accondement. This Powder is a grand restorative in all cases of relaxation, debility, and weakness, in children and adults; it gradually strengthens the stomach, increases the appetite, promotes digestion, and in a short time restores the patient to perfect health, without confinement or alteration of diet.

Extracts from letters addressed to Dr. Hadley:—

COMMERCIAL REPORT, From August 13, to August 18, Inclusive.

The present week, like several of its precursors, has been characterised by an absence of interest in commercial operations, and which necessarily precludes scope for detail. Buyers of Plantation Sugars have succeeded rather better, especially in the low and middling qualities, of which the supplies accumulate considerably. Of Coffee, the foreign descriptions maintain their previous value; but Plantation has declined about 2s. per cwt. The market, however, presents a steady appearance, and, should the demand improve, higher prices must ensue. A steady business has been going forwards in Cottons, at previous prices. The Liverpool market is, however, very heavy; and although the generality of holders evince much firmness, yet, in several instances, i to i depreciation has been submitted to. A reference to our former exposition will show the present state of other descriptions of merchandize.

MISCELLANIOUS.

ANECDOTE OF His MAJESTY .- Baron Fagel, the Dutch Ambassador, dined with the King last week, and wore his national cockade of orange coloured ribband. On his entering the room, His Majesty accosted him, and said, "by the bye, Fagel, I observe you wear your national cockade; but that colour is held the symbol of party-spirit it is culculated to excite unpleasant feelings, and I hall be obliged by your not wearing it in future." We understand that the bint was received as it was meant, and that His Majesty's gracious wishes have been acceded to. We give this as the "on dit" of the day, circulated, as it is said, upon the highest official authority.

A Radical fellow, of the name of WHITAKER, had the audacity to broach his politics before some of the Life Guards, into whose society he had forced himself at the Kino's Head, at Knightsbridge: his principles being very obnoxious, and he being recognised by one of the Serjeants, it was deemed proper to reward his impudence by ducking him with a pail of water. He proceeded to make affidivit of the affair before Mr. Alderman Venables, in the course of which, it appears, the Serjeant "made use of the most." filthy and beastly language respecting the late Queen and Alderman Wood, and said, the latter was a disappointed Radical in "man Wood, and said, the latter was a disappointed Radical in "consequence of the Queen leaving him nothing in her Will; and "that the Queen on her death-bed, had admitted, that William "Austin was her son. I replied fally, that it was a downright falsehood," says this Whitaker. "Fally" enough—for how should Whitaker know? We will swear that Wood is a disappointed Radical; and we do not believe, that although Doctor Litshinoton, and four other persons, who were in the room at the time with him, will deny either so roundly or fally as Mr. Whitaker side, the Queen's admission about Billy—it shews the folly of such zeal as Mr. Whitaker's, (who since his ducking has been called Mr. Wet-taker,) and he will see his felly ere long. And as for the rest of his affidavit it as nearly substantiates the Courier's account of the affair as possible. recount of the affair as possible.

Some Radicals have got up a funeral procession for the two rioters who were shot at Cumberland-gate, which is to take place to-day. The awful ceremony of burying a journeyman bricklayes, we should think hardly tempting enough to attract a crowd; and we are quite sure it is the duty of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs to prevent any assemblage of persons for the purpose in Smithfield.

If the miscreants who are expected to muster on the occasion are protected by the obsolete privileges of the City, we trust, that strong measures will be adopted to preserve the public years when they quit it: and that whoever may command the military (if any should be requited) may have a sufficient force with him to protect the loyal and quiet inhabitants of Middlesex from the depre of a meb, should there be one; but, above all, we hope that Siz ROBERT BARRE may have no hand whatever in the business.

Elderly gentlewomen are useful persons to make tea, and take sauff, and play low whist; but to enforce the orders of Government; and maintain its authority and respectability, we would prefer persons of masculine—minds at least.

In order that the public may form some idea of Madical versalty; we beg leave to state, that a gentleman who resides in the Edgeware-road, informed the people in the neighbourhood, on his return home from witnessing the aftray which occurred at the funeral of the late Queen; that he had been entrageously assaulted by the military, who cut his hat in the most brutal symmes. On enquiry, however, it turns out that he was not hart at all, and that as that hat was only and sound when he entered his dwelling; he must have qui it himself with his peninife some hours subsequent to the rist!!!! #### THE KING.

The King on Friday se maight made his public entry into Dublin, The King on Friday se anight made his public entry into Dublin, in the midst of the greatest concourse of people that ever congregated there on any public occasion. The shops were shut, and before seven o'clock some very elegant and tasteful laurel wreathes, with shamrocks entwining, and surmounted by large ornamental the surrounded by large ornamental statements. growns, were drawn across the streets from one house to the opposite. The houses and streets through which the procession passed were crowded to excess. A triumphal arch was prepared at the matrance of Sackville-street. At 11 o'clock the Lord Mayor, in Mis state-coach, drawn by six horses, and accompanied by the Board of Alderman, Recorder, Sheriffs, and Common Council in full dress, and robes of the most magnificant description, left the Man-sion-house in state, and formed within the triumphal arch, the gate of which was closed. The bands then played God see the King, and afterwards, in succession, several Irish airs, and the plaudits of the neonle. At 12 a roral saluta announced the denarture of the an amerwares, in succession, several irish airs, amin the platells of the people. At 12 a reyal salute announced the departure of the King from the Vice-regal Lodge; which was re-echoed by the loud and reiterated shouts of the people, and the guns of the vessels on the river. His Majesty left the Park in an open carriage, drawn by eight beautiful teres, led by his grooms, and attended by a numerous trains of grooms and footmen in magnificent liveries. His Majesty was decording a full military inform descripted with the jesty was dressed in a full military uniform, decorated with the order and ribband of St. Patrick. He also wore the star of the order of the Garter. The King held in his hand a cocked hat, surmounted by a vich plane of white feathers falling over the leaf; and in the front of his bet, in the place of the usual military cockade, he wore a remarkably targe octagon resette, composed of full-grown sham-packs. His Majesty were a mourning crape around his left arm; he seemed in excellent health and spirits. Shouts from the as-combled multimed in the Park greeted his Majesty upon ascending his harouche, which he acknowledged by repeated inclinations of his head, and a dignified, yet somewhat familiar motion of his hand. The King was accompanied in his carriage by the Marquises of Headfort and Winchester. The procession, which had been arranged to accompany his Majesty into the city, was composed of nearly all the nobility, gentry, and public officers of Ireland. His Majesty reached the northern gute of the Park at half-past twelve, where he was received by his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant.—At ten minutes before two o'clock the splendid cavalcade reached the front of the barrier in Sackville-street; and an officer of arms having in due form, by command of the Lord Lieutenant, demanded entrance to the city of Dublin for His Majesty King George IV. the procession, amidst the loudest acclamations, the sound of trumpets, and martial music, passed through the barrier at as quick a pace as possible. His Majesty stood up in the barouche and bowed repeatedly to the immense multitude around him; thousands of volces, by an instantaneous impulse, vociferated, "God save the King," "God bless your Majesty." The King bowed incessantly, waved his hat in his hand, looked towards the windows and tops of the houses, which were filled by elegantly dressed females (Prince and Princess Esterlassy and the Marchiness of Conyngham were in one of the sear windows), and smilingly repeated his obeisances in a familiar manner. The Recorder welcomed His Majesty upon his entrance into the city; and the King, during the Recorder's speech, stood up uncovered, and repeatedly bowed to the Corporation. When the Lord Mayor presented His Majesty with the keys of the city, upon a silver salver, the King immediately replied to the Lord Mayor, "Take back your keys, my Lord, they cannot be in hetter hands." The presenting of the civic sword and other coremonies them followed. The procession did not move on for upwards of twenty minutes, during which time His Majesty re-ected the congratulations of the people; and, apparently much affected, repeatedly said, "I thank you, my friends—God bless you all—I shall ever remember these proofs of your attachment." —Sir Benjamin Bloomfield exultingly said to the King in that part of the procession when the most enthusiastic demonstrations of attachment were shown by the multitude, "May it please your Majesty, have I any reason to be ashamed of my countrymen?"—
"No, no, my dear Bloomfield," replied his Majesty, "they are a fine, a mobile people." Just as the King passed the Exchange, a Siving done whom were first more to a large week at the country to a large week at the country to be a large week at the country to fine, a moble people." Just as the King passed the Exchange, a living dove, whose wings were fastened to a laurel wreath drawn across from the Exchange to a neighbouring house, was let down by those such sustained the wreath into the royal carriage. The King took the bird of peace between his hands, and appeared highly gratified at this singular mark of respect and attention. At half past two o'clock the procession entered the Castle gates, amid a rayal salute, having been exactly two hours and a half meeting from the Lodge to the Castle. The Civic Authorities and Nobility here took leave of his Majesty, as he alighted at the Palaca. The King immediately after appeared at the window, swar the portion, between the Lord Lieutenant and Lord Sidmouth. and was loudly cheered. His Majesty repeatedly placed his band spon his heart, and bowed to those who had given him so enthusiastie a reception.

on His Majorty attended the Presence Chamber, at the When Mis Majorty attended the Presence Chamber, at the Castle of Dublin, the Lori Lieutenant proceeded to the foot of the Throne, and anking the Sword of State, from his Grace the Duke of Leinster, who been it in the procession, presented it to His Majorty, whe, in the most gracious manner returned it, and commended, that during his stay in his Irish capital, the Sword upon all State occasions, should be borne by his Excellency. At the conclusion of the ceremony, Mis Majorty retired to his private classed, where he repeated for some time, and at his return appeared at the window, and saw with astesishment, that the assemblace of at the window, and as with a standahment, that the assemblage of householders, and the different trades which followed his carriage in the procession, had not yet passed strongh the Castle-yard; although they continued, shring the commony and His Majesty's restrement, to proceed at the pace in which the procession moved. His Majesty, with great condescession, and with evident feeling, a few words to the crowds which filled the Castle-yard but the signts which rent the air, did not easile us to collect their substance. From his manner, we should suppose, that His Majorty was expressing the sessations which the precedings of the day excited.—The bedies in attendance, for the purpose of presenting Addresses, which Mis Majorty was to receive on the Throne, were then indeeduced. His Majorty was seated, survounded by all his great Officers of Shate, and delivered the answer in the most dracet Officers of State, and delivered the answers in the most graceful and impressive manner.

The Provost and Deputation from the University then brought up their Address, which was read by the Provost. His Majesty delivered the following gracious and dignified Answer:—

"It is with the greatest satisfaction that I receive such a testimeny of your feelings inou my arrival in this country, and of your affectionate and firm attachment to my Person and Government. In viviting this part of my kingdom, it is my earnest what te manifest the high sense which I entertain of the value of those excellent institutions and establishments with which it abounds. The University of Dublin holds amongst them a meet distinguished place. Experience attests, that, within your walls, that cultivation has been given to genius, that useful knowledge acquired, and those principles implanted, from which the public has, in numerous instruces, derived advantage, the most splendid and important. It will, I am persuaded, be your constant endeavour to maintain and increase the reputation which you have so justly obtained; and, in the discharge of the duties which belong to your several stations, you may be assured of my constant favour and protection."

On the following day, His Majesty reviewed the several Regiments composing the garrison, in the Phænix Park. At eleven o'clock, the line was formed on the Fifteen Acres, and consisted of the following regiments:—The 3d Light Dragoons, the Ennikkillen Dragoons, ing regiments:—The 3d Light Dragoons, the Enniskillen Dragoons, the 7th Hussars, and the 12th Lancers, besides the 23d, 52d, 43d, 53d, and 78th Regiments of Insantry, and the whole flanked by two troops and a Brigade of Artillery. At half past eleven o'clock, a brilliant eerlege of military appeared on the ground, elegantly mounted, and riding at a slow, pace from the direction of the regal residence. In the group west his Excellency the Lord I ieutenant, with the whole of his Staff, and many other military officers of high rank. At ten minutes past twelve o'clock precisely, the crowd had the gratification of seeing His Majesty. The King at that time, rode out of the private evenue in full military uniform, and mounted on a grey charger; he looked in excellent health and spirits, and appeared delighted at the enthusiastic reception he met with. He repeatedly, and with that dignity and affability so peculiarly his own, acknowledged by obelances, the enthusiastic demonstrations of popular respect, which he eacountered as he rode monstrations of popular respect, which he encountered as he rode through the Park to the ground occupied by the military. A small guard of Lancers preceded and followed His Majesty; Sir Benjamin Bloomfield, Colonel Quinten, and Sir B. Bolton, the King's Equerries, rode by his side. His Majesty recognized several gentlemen and most graciously condescended to salute them in the most familiar way. The Austrian Ambassador, in his full uniform, Sir Chas. liar way. The Austrian Ambassador, in his full uniform, Sir Chas.
Paget, in his naval uniform, and a number of military gentlemen. Paget, in his naval uniform, and a number of military gentlemen, rode with the King, who smiled and conversed with those around him upon the gratifying exhibition of so much enthusiasm as he then witnessed. The artillery discharged a royal salute as the King rode on the ground, when His Majesty approached the line—the military evolutions were commenced and continued with the finest effect. The King repeatedly signified his approbation of the fine condition of the troops in the field, and the admirable precision of their evolutions, which were in the highest degree military and imposing. His Majesty quitted the field at three o'clock, accompanied by the same honours, and greeted with the same warmth with which he had been received. The Marquis of Anglessa was on the ground, dressed in the uniform of the 7th Hussars; at the head of which he rode through the city, on their return to their barracks. He was cheered as he passed along.

On Sunday morning His Majesty went to Christchurch Cathedral: of course the greatest divicality was arctifed. As no admission dral; of course the greatest curiosity was excited. As no admission could be had without a ticket, few persons that were not of high rank and distinction could get in; with these the Cathedral was crowded in all parts. It was a scene of extraordinary brilliancy The part occupied by the King was newly furnished for the occusion, with the seats, cushions, draperies, &c. of rich Irish crimson velvet, fringed with gold; and there was a new quarto Prayer-The Service was read by the Rev. Mr. Osborne; his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin preached the Sermon, and his text was—

"Righteousness exalteth a pation;" and the anthem, taken from

For thou shalt give him everlasting felicity: and make him glad with the lay of the comptoning of the contemporary.

with the joy of thy countension.

This anthem was finely performed by Messus. Jager, Buggins, Smith, Sir J. Stevenson, Weyman, &c. His Majesty's carness ruly plous attention to the service was, like that of his father, truly with the joy of thy counter delifying. The prayers for the King were impressively repeated by the congregation. His Majesty felt, evidently and strongly, this devotion of his people. He was habited in a dark blue coat, white small-clothes, and white silk stockings; he were no order but that of the Garter. Nothing could equal the cheering of the multitude outside, as the King approached the Cathesiral and alighted from of the Garter. his coach. His Majesty was met at the door by the Archbishop of Dublin, who made his obeleauce, which was most graciously re-turned by the King, who then proceeded to his seat in this order— the Vergers, the Chois, Presentor, Dean, the Archbishop, His Majesty, the Lord Lieutenant, &c. &c. , On Monday, the Leves was the most brilliant that Dublin Castle has ever witnessed. The number was so great, and the pressure so intense, that not more than one in twenty were able to approach person, but were impelled to their exit at the opposite door, absolutely without seeing Mis Majesty. Chapeaus, lachets, shoes, bags, nay skirts of cours; were torn away, and the place afterwards presented the data spotts of a field of bettle. Many who had not, nor could not get carriages, were seen walking home from the Leves bare-headed. Great damage was done to carriages, the pannels of many having been broken in by the poles of conte vehicles. Every backney-coach and sedan-chair was in requisition, from it, formed no small part of the street population. The number of equipages could not have been less than 1900, and the crowd in ception apartments may be judged from the following Lord Chamberlain's official notice, which it was found about nessary to issue in the evening, from an apprehension that the com-many could not be accommoduled in any way at the drawing-room negy could not be accer rcement of ladi

His Maiesty slocked?

His Majesty also held an investiture of the Order of St. Patrick. The following Noblemen were introduced, when each received the honour of Knighthood, and were invested with the insignia of the Order:—Lord Greaves, as Proxy for his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, who was introduced between the two senior Knights, the Marquis Conyngham, and the Earl O'Neill. The Marquis of Donegal, his Excellency Earl Tabot, the Earls of Grandade, Meath, Roden, Courtown, and Fingal, were subsequently introduced be-tween the two junior Knights; Sir William Betham, Ulster King of Arms, bearing the ribband and badge on a blue volvet cushion.

His Majesty afterwards held an investiture of the Most Honour-able Order of the Bath, when Admiral the How. Thomas Pakenham, K. C. B. received the honour of Knighthood, and was invested with the riband and badge of the Most Honourable Order; and Sir John Elley, K. C. B. on his attaining the rank of Major-General, received from His Majesty the star of that degree of the Most Homour-able Order, Sir William Betham, Ulster King of Arms, officiated for Sir George Nayler on this occasion.

On Tuesday, a most numerous meeting of the Nobility, Archbishops, Bishops, Clergy, and Gentry, took place at the Boyal Exchange, the Mayor in the Chair, supported by the Lord Primate on the right, and the Lord High Chancellor on his left. The Archbishop of Tuam stated, they had met to propose a subscription for a Testi-monial to commemorate the visit of our August Sovereign, the first who had visited Ireland under such circumstances. Before reading the resolutions, he prayed to the Throne of Grace to prote the resolutions, he prayed to the Throne of Grace to protect our most graftlous Sovereign, to prolong his reign, and to grant him a Trone of GRory, when called from the world below. His Grace then moved the resolutions. The Earl of Fingall seconded the resolutions:—Mr. O'Connell wished a Royal residence should be erected in Ireland; he was certain that the overflowing and faithful hearts of his Irish subjects would contribute liberally, for he felt pride in saying, that the King was the most accomplished gentlement in the world and his material and one decomplished gentlement in the world and his material and one decomplished gentlement in the world and his material and one decomplished gentlement in the world and his material and one decomplished gentlement in the world and his material and one decomplished gentlement in the world and the material and his material and and a second and the sec mun in the world, and his urbanity and condescension since he to Ireland, had gained him the love, admiration, and respect of every individual. -In the course of a few minutes, the sublists were filled to the amount of several thousands.—On Thursday, His Majesty intended to visit some of the public institutions, and in Reserving, the Lord Mayor was to entertain His Majesty, Prince Esterhazy, and several persons of distinction, with a grand dinner at the Mansion House.

ADJOURNED INQUEST ON GEORGE FRANCIS. On Monday at three o'clock, the Jury re-assembled at the Goat Tavern, Pimileo. The Coroner intimated to the Jury that he had received from Mr. Hobbouse, similar to the one noticed at the laquest on Charles Boyd described the movements of the moh and the Charles Hoyd described the movements of the movement was soldiery up to the arrival at Cumberland-gate; he thought the soldiers acted as if with a view to intimidate the people. They actually out at the people, but witness stated that he had been a short time on the wall when he saw the decreased come from Tyburn-tumpike; saw a man with him; they were both, as it appeared, going to Cumberland-gate; the deceased ran fast, as if to gain Cumberland-gate, but seeing some of the Guards before him he tried to regain his former position, when a shot was fired and be fell; tried to get hold of him as he was near the railing, but could not do so, and he fell. The deceased appeared, both on coming and on going from the gate, as if re-treating from the soldiery; observed by whom the shot was fired, but does not think he could now pick him out. He appeared a young man about 22, he was ruddy and round-faced; saw the pistol before he fired; he turned hatf-round in his saddle and fired. After the Life Guards had gone a little way along with the fanceal, they came back in two parties, and in the first party was the man who shot the deceased; when they came back he said, "there is the man who shot deceased." The soldier put his hand on his sword, and looked disdainfully at witness, who retreated.

two latter witnesses testimony was nearly similar to that gives in evidence by them on the enquiry into the death of Honey.—The On Wednesday the Inquest was resumed :- Joseph Hawk had inspected the troops, but could not identify any onessex make we.

William Spratt saw the officer who shot Honey, at the burnarias three times, but he was so like another officer, that he could not identify the officer who shot the deceased; but he saw the officer who shot Honey, and witness said to him that he was the man, and the accused made no reply: he could not identify him when he saw him drawn up at the barracks; there were two officers so much alike that he could not distinguish one from the other; one of officers was painted; to seemed to have been coloured a little reddish; he had mustachies on, and so had the other officer, and the Life Guards on the 14th had not mustachies; they were dissed; they had cloaks on, and some of them were muffled up in these cloaks, and the clasp of the belimets concealed their faces in ill a si willing eq great measure; it was cloaks on the 14th.

Two other witnesses, of the names of Norris and Field, were then examined as to the riot. The evidence for the defence was then gone into."

R. B. Teast described what took place at Cumberland gate the people pelted the soldiers with stones or bricks; the troops opened the gates and they were again closed by the people, and the soldiers were still pelted: the soldiers at length succ ing the gates, but the pelting still continued from Oxford-street and from the wall adjoining; there are small bouses on which people ed from Oxford-street as might stand, and many people were on them, and stones flung from those houses; the soldiers bore all this pelting quietly; he saw the guards repeatedly struck with stones before they struck with their swords. The troops appeared not to wish to interfere with the people until they were assaulted with stones; saw one of the soldiers struck severely in the shoulder with a brick-bat before the firing commenced; considered the troops were in immenent danger; saw the soldiers drop their heads and resist the stones by their belmets.

Thomas Amens examined—I am Lieutenant and Adjutant of the First Regiment of Life Guards. The detachment, which was in readiness, went out on the receipt of a letter from Sir Robert Baker.

The efficers were Capt. Oakes and Lieuts. Storey and Hall. The number of thes turned out was 56; we never book the list of the meals names when they are turned out; the inferior officers keep a reaster to know the time of duty, but if I had such a list I could not swear to it; I was not out on that occasion; the squadron was to be under the command of Sir Robert Baker.

A Juror—There are three troops, I believe, in a squadron?
Mr. Amens—Oh no, Sir, we can make any number of men a squadron; we had a guard at the Horse-Guards; I should think Capt. Oakes under 40; Lieut. Storey is, I believe older; and Lieut. Hall is about 23 years; I cannot describe the countenance of Lieut. Hall; it is not the etiquette of our regiment for the officers to wear saustachios, particularly on duty.

By Mr. Harmer.—I was present yesterday at the barracks, and these three officers were there. I can swear I saw nothing like the appearance of mustachios ow them, nor were they painted, that would not be consistent with a soldier's honour. My attention was particularly directed to yesterday's proceedings, indeed until I was quite tired. I saw Spratt look at one officer, on whom he made no particular remark; I know that officer's name; and without e Coroner's authority, I can give no other answer.

D. Bowman, a student of the London Hospital, was near Cumberland-gate, and there saw a man with a large paving-stone in his hand, he went to an iron post and broke the stone, and threw u pince about as large as my hand among the soldiers; other stones were flying; I saw the stone pass near an officer's body, it might have hit his legs; at this time I don't believe the hearse was through; I hegged the man not to throw the stone; but, with several imprecations against the soldiers, he said he would: I saw no veral imprecations against the soldiers, he said he would; I saw no rotson why the man should throw the stones.

The Inquest was then adjourned.

n Thursday the Inquest re-assembled.

John Moyd, servant to Lord Bagot, deposed as to the assault on the soldiers at Cumberland-gate. The witness stated that he was in the dining-room opposite the gate. The mob "had a cloud of stones and brickbats," which they threw at the military; he saw several struck on the head; saw blood pass from the cheeks of two or three of them is consequence; the stones were of all sizes; some 3 lbs. weight; beard no firing till after the stones were thrown; dieny acted with great forbearance.
